Mr. Hartford: Which a few years ago might have had one announcer on it and perhaps a newsman coming and the rest was music. Well, now you have all sorts of ingredients that have been added. On most stations, you have helicopter reports, for road and traffic reports and weather reports; all sorts of things have been added—sports, for example.

Music on AM radio—and AM and FM are two different things in my view—is still a very important commodity but it isn't as important as it was; and indeed, you don't hear as much of it on many AM stations as you did at one time. There is more talk and so there is more of a mix. Now, it also has to do with how they are inserted in a run. We have a radio station that will play a great many numbers off of the hit-parade. If somebody asks you how do they sound, "you say, sort of middle-of-the-road" and we do play a great many of the numbers of a rock type station would play. They are very good stations too, but with a different philosophy. However, it is in the way you insert the music, really, and that involves the people that chose it as well as the operator and the announcer and how they put it together.

Mr. Fortier: Well, I will just repeat my question.

Mr. Potts: May I just take a crack at your question?

Mr. Fortier: By all means.

Mr. Potts: Listeners don't phone and ask me "Can I hear some Canadian records".

Mr. Fortier: No.

Mr. Potts: But what we do find is that when you play Canadian artists on the air, they phone and say "Where can I buy it—I like what I hear, where can I buy it?" That is our next stumbling block. There should be a 30 per cent Canadian content in some sort of role in Canadian record stores coast to coast because that is where we are hitting the road block right now.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, I understand.

Mr. Potts: A lady wrote me from Montreal the other day and said: "I am trying to buy the Boss Brass, how can I get this?" This is repeated thousands of times over. I have had it up to here! I wrote back to her and said: "The company that released that record to us is a few blocks from your home, I will write to the President and see that you get a copy." Now, I have done that thing many times over. It is our greatest frustration, that we cannot get these fine Canadian records—and many of them are exceedingly fine—into stores where the public can get at them. If they are in the stores, they are under the counter; they are not up near the cash register and that sort of thing. Canadians if they are given opportunity to hear Canadian artists—comparable to what Americans have been doing and the British have been doing—will show reaction.

Mr. Fortier: So that you have sensed a demand for Canadian performers?

Mr. Potts: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Hartford?

Mr. Hartford: I would like to just add on to that, Mr. Fortier. The way that we treat it is that we don't identify them as Canadian. We feel that you either like it or don't like it the way it is, and we just don't say: "this is Canadian record" or "this person is Canadian."

Mr. Cran: We don't apologize for it.

Mr. Hartford: No, we mix them in and the quality we find is up-grading and very acceptable.

Mr. Fortier: What has been your experience in Montreal, Mr. McCurdy, with respect to what your listeners are longing for insofar as music is concerned?

Mr. McCurdy: Well, that is a very difficult question. No one ever calls up and says "Why don't you play more Canadian".

Mr. Fortier: But you do make studies, don't you, as to what your listening public likes or it has not liked? I mean, you obviously try to cater to your public.

Mr. McCurdy: Well, it is a trial and error business to a great degree, when you have 19 stations in the market and when we are dealing with Mr. Sinclair on one hand and a market mix is there. You have access from a variety of sources—whether it is research or phone call reactions or letters. We talk at length with the record companies. You distill all of these sources of information into what you think is the will of the people, the desire of the people, and decide on your group and put the ingredients together—the music mix that is within company policy and you hope you can attract a sufficient number.

We have the added ingredients, the added aspect of programming in Montreal which is the French-Canadian thing and we find there is a growing demand for some of the more popular French-Canadian singers and instrumentalists.

Mr. Fortier: And there is an increasing use of those records on CJAD?

Mr. McCurdy: That's right.

The Chairman: But the brief says you use them more on the FM stations than on the AM. Why is that?

Mr. McCurdy: Well, of course they have more music for one thing and it is a music medium, so that we have to program 18 or 20 tunes an hour on FM.

The Chairman: On a percentage basis do you play as many French artists on CJAD as CJAD-FM?

Mr. McCurdy: No, probably not. The music policy is different so we don't have the sources.

The Chairman: Do you play French artists on CFRB at all?

Mr. Potts: Well, Mr. Dawson could speak on this, but I had an experience the other day that came to me through CAPAC. They had made a French recording and an English recording of pretty well the same thing. They found great success with this in the French market and they wanted to get the Canadian Recording released—that is the English recording. They were trying for an American release but no American company would take it and the Canadian company has deigned to take it—lets put it that way. They brought it in to me and I referred it to Mr. Dawson and his Music Director, Mr. Arthur Collins to listen to it. He listened to the French and the English and he said: "I will play the French, but I don't like the English record—it doesn't appeal to me, I will play the French".

We recorded for CTL, a group called "Les Contre Temps" a young folk singing group from a college in Montreal. One side was French and the other side was English. Of course, they sing better in French than they do in English and strangely enough it was the French side that got the play on CFRB, not the English side. In other words, the music was international. They had won the International Folk Singing competition among college groups at the CNE just the previous summer for that matter and thrilled a great many people who couldn't even understand French.

However, to add to what Mr. McCurdy said and again to what you say about asking people what they want to hear—I know Mr. McCurdy's station has conducted surveys and he let me read them. People write in in answer to the question "What do you want to hear on FM" and they answer "Well, Tom Jones, Roger Williams"—they name all the American and all the British and I think perhaps there was one or two Canadian names among them but they were the same names over and over and over again. How are you going to make the public want Canadians? It is going to take more than radio to do this.

Mr. McCurdy: Well, surveys and news are terribly hard to read. We did a survey not long ago and one question we asked was: "What is your favorite kind of music?"—and they put down "Popular" in answer to the question: "Who is your favorite singer?" and they put down "Paul Robson". Now what you get out of a thing like that I don't know.

Mr. Fortier: Do you see the day, Mr. McCurdy, where CJAD will broadcast partly in French and partly in English?

Mr. Cran: We are only licensed to broadcast in English.

Mr. Fortier: As opposed to CKVL-FM, for example?

Mr. McCurdy: They have a bilingual license.

Mr. Fortier: Well, alright. Let me rephrase my question, do you foresee the day where you will apply for a bilingual license?

Mr. McCurdy: No.

Mr. Fortier: You are essentially an English-speaking radio broadcasting station?

Mr. McCurdy: Yes.

Mr. Cran: If I may interject?

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. Cran: CJAD-FM the call signs are rather hard to identify to French speaking people, and we instituted a practice a couple of years ago where once an hour we give the station break announcement in French as well as in English and we got some rude letters from the CRTC about this.

Mr. Fortier: Did you?

Mr. Cran: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: I heard it on CJAD—your call letters in French on occasion.

Mr. McCurdy: That is just a courtesy.

Mr. Fortier: Just the announcer's whim?

Mr. McCurdy: That's right.

Mr. Potts: Mr. Cran, was it not the BBG the rude letter came from, not the CRTC?

Mr. Cran: No, from the CRTC.

Mr. Sydney Margles, CJAD Limited: I might add, Mr. Fortier, that we do at times carry some French in news, particularly in news conferences which we are carrying live and what we are endeavouring to do—if we carry for instance a city hall news conference with the mayor and Mr. Saulnier, the Executive Committee Chairman speaking in French and do simultaneous translations, I get calls from our French listeners saying: "Why don't you keep off and let them speak", and if I do summary translations every three or four paragraphs I get calls from listeners saying "Hey, we didn't understand what you are saying and why are you running so much French" so it is damned if you do and damned if you don't but it is still our policy if it is an important news story, regardless of letters, we are going to carry it and we are going to do translations for the benefit of English-speaking audiences which doesn't understand French and unfortunately there are Montrealers who do not speak or understand French.

The Chairman: May I just ask, Mr. Cran, a question. You as the head of Standard Broadcasting sit in a very predominant position in Canada and in Canadian Broadcasting. One of your stations is the most listened to station in Canada and the most listened to station in the second largest city in Canada. The other station, the brother station, to use the words of one of your colleagues, is the most listened to English language station in Montreal. Aside from the French fact in Montreal, what difficulty is there in running a station in Toronto than running the station in Montreal?

Mr. Cran: Well, how many days do we have here

The Chairman: Well, what are some of the basic differences, setting the language aside?

Mr. Cran: There is a difference I think, Senator Davey, in operating a station between any one city and any other city and it is our policy, it has been my policy, to ensure that we have the best station managers and program directors and other staff in any one area—like Montreal or in Toronto—and just let them run the station as they see fit in a proper way. Outside of that, we don't—I mean CFRB bought CJAD back in 1961 and they have never tried to tell them what to do with regard to programming. It was left to the local people who had the feel of what the public wants.

The Chairman: Well, then what advantages are there to the listeners in Montreal in CJAD being owned by Standard as opposed to being owned by someone else?

Mr. Cran: Only the assurance that they will continue good management and it would have access to any of the facilities of the group. They are all available to them and Mac can take Berton and Templeton if he wants to and if he doesn't want to, I don't tell him he has to.

Mr. Fortier: Why doesn't he take them?

Mr. Cran: Because he doesn't like them.

Mr. McCurdy: We tried them and they didn't work.

The Chairman: Why wouldn't they work in Montreal?

Mr. McCurdy: Well, I think every market has a characteristic and I was talking to French broadcaster in Montreal the other day that owned a station in Montreal and one in Quebec City and they are working very hard to try and find the way to win out in Quebec City. The formula they are using in four other Quebec province markets won't even work in Quebec City; and so they are then leaving it up to their staff and assessing that market in trying to find out what the formula should be in that one market.

Mr. Fortier: Maybe the question should be now what formula do you use to appeal, as you obviously do, both to the French and to the English on CJAD?

Mr. McCurdy: I sometimes wish we knew but I couldn't write a brief to tell you this.

The Chairman: Well, for example, you don't have a woman editor, I gather?

Mr. McCurdy: Yes, we do but not in the same format as Betty Kennedy.

The Chairman: I see. What does your woman's editor do?

Mr. McCurdy: She does certain limited broadcasting, certain commercial work and she is primarily now in the field of public relations.

The Chairman: Would Betty Kennedy be popular in Montreal on your station?

Mr. McCurdy: You mean if we carried her Toronto show?

The Chairman: Either way. If you carried her Toronto show or if she moved to Montreal and did a program like that in Montreal?

Mr. McCurdy: Well, I think Betty is such a professionally competent broadcaster that she could probably carve out quite a following in any market. But we just happen to feel that that type of programming is passe in our particular market; so we did have a program of that nature and we changed the format. We no longer do block programming of that nature to a select audience. We do a more general audience type of programming.

Mr. Hariford: I was just going to suggest that Jack Dawson has so much experience and such strong views on programming that if you could spare the time I would like you to hear him.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Jack Dawson: I wanted to differ with Mr. McCurdy—not quite differ because we have to present a common front here...

Mr. Fortier: Is that what Mr. Cran told you!

Mr. Dawson: In connection with that Mr. Fortier, I believe this is somewhat of a privileged conversation, is it not?

The Chairman: It is indeed.

Mr. Dawson: There are many occasions when I wished Mr. Cran was domiciled in the city of Montreal. However, I seriously believe with regards to Betty Kennedy doing her broadcast on CJAD, the Montreal station, I think it would inhibit her. Anyone like a Betty Kennedy, or say Pierre Berton or Charles Templeton—if he can gear himself to one transmitter, one community, he can speak more freely and he is speaking about things that many people in that community are interested in. If Betty Kennedy were to be on the Montreal transmitter doing the same program, I believe she would have to be doing a totally separate kind of program to be on down there. Otherwise she would have to make the decision everytime she did an interview: "Will this stand up in Montreal, or is this of interest to the Montreal audience"? I think this is one of the reasons why network radio is pretty well dead.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: How then does your syndicated programs—you list some of them here on Page 11 and 12 and the names of Templeton, Berton, Hesketh, Needham, Belanger, McVean, Coleman and Trueman, now, this is a pretty well Toronto-oriented type of syndication. How does this sell in Canada?

Mr. Potis: Not very well. It is not a business to make money at the present time. As we said in the brief, syndicated programming years ago came from the United States and Canada was virtually a nothing ground. It is very difficult to carry on syndicated programming in Canada. In network radio, someone in Toronto at the CBC makes a decision and they say "This program is going to be heard coast to coast". As Mr. Dawson says this really doesn't work any more. But the beauty of private radio is that the decision is in the hands of all the local operators; these people know their communities and they try to get what is best for their community.

"Dialogue" started in Winnipeg and ran two years then the station felt as far as they were concerned it was wearing out, it didn't do the job in their community. We never did place it in Vancouver. It has been popular in Alberta, its been running in Calgary and in Edmonton. Red Deer had it for awhile and dropped it. It is still running in Calgary and Edmonton I might add. It has never run in Saskatchewan and has run in various places in Ontario but it seems to wear out. While it continues to do an excellent job for CFRB in Toronto, this is because, as Mr. Dawson says, it is more a tuned to this situation even though I'm sure Templeton and Berton every once in awhile say: "Well, that happens on Yonge Street and I'm sure it happens on 11th Street in Regina and so forth." However, this isn't quite the same thing. But it is still now running in several markets across the country but they are stations with a small market getting big names across the country at a relatively small cost.

The "Man and Woman" thing which Richard Needham is doing very well on CFRB is also running in Belleville I think, but that was it. There was no response across the country at all. So it does vary as to the needs of the station and that sort of thing.

Senator McElman: You don't see a syndication of this nature entering the needs for Canadian content across the country?

Mr. Potts: Talk radio mostly is of a local nature relating to local needs and one man who is very popular is Bob Hesketh. This is in about 30 markets across the country and it has been running solidly now for over three years. He has become, as a result of this, a national name and makes frequent tours across the country as a guest speaker. So in his case it has worked but it is sort of a fun-kind of thing and a sort of fun-look at life which seems to strike a responsive cord in many areas.

Mr. Dawson: Senator, if I may, the reference is only to music so far in the 30 per cent and really not to this type of programming.

Senator McElman: That's right.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Senator McElman: Mr. McCurdy, I see in paragraph 107 you say:

"Because of our unique market, CJAD uses more French Canadian talent and acts as advisor to the Canadian Talent Library on French Canadian artists of interest to the rest of Canada."

Now, with the great build-up of exciting and outstanding artists and performers in Quebec province, is the advice being given that more of these artists be picked up by CTL and that more extensive distribution of their work go out across Canada?

Mr. McCurdy: What is really meant by that is that we are one of the subsidiaries and clients of Canadian Talent Library and Mr. Potts endeavours to spend our money in our market in producing recordings. In other words there are Montreal recording sessions as well as Toronto recording sessions and there have been a few others in other centres across Canada. So what usually happens is that Mr. Potts calls and we have a little conference with our Music Librarian and Programme Directors and anyone else who can contribute to the meetings. We say: "Is there any new talent, or can you recommend the people we should use in our next recording session in Montreal?" If we have come across or been made aware of some French-Canadian talent, that isn't already under contract with some of the major recording companies, we will pass it on to Mr. Potts to make the arrangements to do this. This is the form of consultation that goes on and our X number of thousands a year is usually spent on more recording in Montreal.

Mr. Potts: I might add that when we state that we record in Toronto and Montreal—we say Toronto and Montreal, but the musicians from all over Canada gather in these two centres because this is where the work is done. It is not unusual to have the French horn player in the orchestra from Victoria and the piano player from Sydney, Nova Scotia; but here again it is very difficult.

As Mr. McCurdy just touched upon, there is such a flourishing French recording industry that all of the good artists are tied up by all of the record producers in Quebec and a broadcaster can virtually get those records for nothing. They can get it either as a complimentary "45" or they can buy it for $1.25 as an LP. But when we produce a record in Montreal, through the subscriptions, through CTL, it is tantamount to saying a station is paying $60.00 for that kind of LP because it is helping to pay the full cost of that record made in Montreal. We do try to get French songs by French Canadian composers that we can do instrumentally; and we would like very much to get the French song and to get English translations of the French songs. We have done some where we have done one chorus English and one chorus French and so on. But we would like very much to get successful French songs, get an English lyric written—which has been done on songs out of France by the way, which have been heard throughout Canada. This gives the song that much more exposure because it would help the writer and the publisher and the singer.

Senator McElman: Mr. Cran, one of our witnesses this morning in his brief suggested that the return profit in broadcasting should be no less than 15 per cent. Would you consider that a reasonable figure as a minimum?

Mr. Cran: 15 per cent of the investment?

Senator McElman: Yes.

Mr. Cran: Broadcasting is a service type of business, in which in my own opinion, it is not very relevant to look at the return on the investment; that is if you are starting a broadcasting station with the capital invested in the equipment and the working capital, etc. We never look at it from a point of view of return on the investment. What does happen, of course, is the question of how much you keep out of the gross revenue. Let me put it that way around which may bear no relation to the investment.

The Chairman: Senator Sparrow?

Senator Sparrow: However, in the final analysis it must bear the relationship to the investment?

Mr. Cran: I suppose it does. If we would take into consideration—if we were buying an existing station—we would expect a return of 12 or 15 per cent on the investment that we were putting out, but with our own established operation, the capital cost is written way down and the return bears no relation to that. That may sound like an evasive answer but it is not meant to be.

Senator McElman: What would be a realistic percentage on the gross revenue?

Mr. Cran: Well, the bigger the market gets, the larger of the proportion can be profit. That is speaking generally, but you have a lot of elements that are controllable and that is where you have to use judgement. The amount, which you can spend on programming and talent and other facilities in order to maintain or increase your audience, is in your hands. I mean, you can build a circulation up to a certain figure and you could then cut expenses and flog it profit-wise for a few years but then you start to go down. I mean, this has been done before in this country. But to maintain it, with a lot of competition, you have to keep putting money in and ideas and experience in additional quantities or the time to make it better and better and better because it is quite simple—you first of all have to get a good enough program to attract an audience and then you get some business.

Senator McElman: Taking all of that into account, is there any minimum percentage return of gross revenue that you would consider reasonable below which no one should safely fall?

Mr. Cran: Well, not in our case and I just hope that they all make a profit. We have built the FM stations in both cities by quite deliberately going out and investing the money in them in the form of capital construction and investing the money into the operation at a loss for a period of years—so the budget in a few years time will reach the break-even point and after that you will become a profitable venture, which means to say that Mr. Benson pays 53 per cent of the losses. He isn't in the room today, I hope!

The Chairman: No, but he reads the transcripts every day! I would like to ask Mr. Hartford what he considered to be the second-best AM station in Toronto?

Mr. Hartford: To me it is just like asking what should be the return on your investment; because a transmitter for one city is the same transmitter as for another and it is what happens on it, that attracts the audience. Most of your investments are in people, after you have depreciated the hardware. So you put up the two transmitters, each costing the same amount of money so does all the hardware—and one attracts the larger audience and one will get a larger return on the investment. When you ask: "What is the second-best station", I don't know whether you want to know the second-best western station or the second-best rock station, or what. I don't really know—do you mean from an income standpoint or from an audience standpoint or the way it is managed?

Senator Sparrow: I am still concerned about the answer on return on sales. I am sure that I don't know of any industry which doesn't have a financial statement which has a return on sales and relates it to investment.

I don't know how else you operate an industry. Surely an industry looks at a statement at the end of the year and the return on sales has been 1.5 per cent and another industry might be 1.8 per cent and a food industry might run 4.7 per cent and so on. The broadcasting industry must have the figures, do they not?

Mr. Hartford: My own answer would be that you shouldn't expect less than you can get in the market place by just taking your money and investing it. By taking your money and investing it in the market place you can get 10 per cent today and I believe you should try to at least get that because for the other you don't even have to work.

Senator Sparrow: So that answers the question then of Senator McElman.

Mr. Hartford: Well, that is my own view, but I don't know about Mr. Cran.

The Chairman: Do you wish to add anything, Mr. Cran?

Mr. Cran: No, I have nothing to add.

Senator Sparrow: There must be relatively the same return in sales?

Mr. Cran: We are a service company. We are not selling automobiles or anything like that—we are a service operation. We are a service institution like a lawyer's firm or something like that and we are dealing with people. Now, you talk about capital investment—we are a public company with a public set of values of some fifty or sixty million dollars on the operation—that is not represented by hardware or anything it is represented by record of earning capacity over a period of years.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: Let's put it another way. You have the largest single BBM rating in Canada—at CFRB, that is correct, isn't it?

Mr. Cran: Yes.

Senator McElman: And you also have the highest rates I believe also, which follows.

Mr. Cran: Yes.

Senator McElman: Would those rates be established on the basis of bringing in X return or on what the market will bear?

Mr. Cran: I think Mr. Hartford could answer that one better.

The Chairman: Mr. Hartford?

Mr. Hartford: Well, most rates are based on what we call a cost per thousand. I know you people have heard many submissions but do you know what a cost per thousand is?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Hartford: Well, most rates are based on a cost per thousand. We charge the highest rate in this country and we have a new rate card going in that is $150.00 per announcement in the mornings. It is also the lowest cost per thousand in Canada. It is far from what the traffic will bear. At a dollar a thousand in the morning we should be getting over $200.00, but a comparable station in the United States would probably be getting $300.00 in New York for what we charge $150.00 for. I mean, when you talk about rates you talk about your class Double A one minute because that is the rate and then it goes down from there. So, that is really not what the traffic will bear that we are charging. This is based on a cost per thousand. It has always been low.

Senator McElman: If you went up to $200.00 do you think the market would bear it?

Mr. Hartford: Well, if they are truly buying a cost per thousand which is what an agency tells me at $1.00 a thousand it is cheap.

Mr. Cran: We are somewhat inhibited, sir by moves in this city to limit price increases.

Mr. Hartford: And we have taken that into account, incidentally.

Mr. McCurdy: There is another factor in this cost per thousand, and that is that every station in Toronto obviously uses the same barometer. You ask if we put it up to $200.00 would the market bear it; I would suggest that it might not because if I were Don's competitor I would come in and say: "You can buy my audience at a better cost per thousand. It isn't the same audience as CFRB but you get the same value because you get just as many people for every dollar you spend." So I could sell against him because his rate would then be too high because he prices himself in price per thousand, which is relevant to mine.

Senator McElman: Even though the advertising wouldn't reach the same people?

Mr. McCurdy: It would reach them for the same price per customer.

The Chairman: I wonder if I may just return to my question to Mr. Hartford with regards to the second-best AM station in Toronto.

Mr. Cran: We have at least two representatives here from other stations and this could be rather embarrassing.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Hartford is a fairly courageous fellow. Which station do you think has the second-best programming in Toronto, or to be fair do you feel that that question, given the nature of broadcasting, is so flexible depending on what the listener wants that you can't answer?

Mr. Hartford: Well, Senator, I would say that if you are asking which is the best format station next to ours—probably CHUM. If you say which is the best station that plays good music, possibly CHFI and CKEY would run equal because as you know, it is a difficult definition. You are either talking about billings or audiences or what have you—just from a management standpoint I couldn't comment.

The Chairman: Well, that is a very interesting answer that you have given us because we had put that question to many newspaper publishers and they immediately named a newspaper. I think it is interesting that you have made this point. I wonder if I might just ask two additional questions and then we will take a break for a few minutes and then come back. Perhaps before we do take the break I could ask you a question about the CBC. Do you think there is a place for the CBC in Canada?

Mr. Hartford: Very definitely.

The Chairman: Do you feel that the CBC is presently fulfilling its mandate?

Mr. Hartford: Well, that is a bit of a difficult question as far as I am concerned but I do feel strongly that there should be a CBC. I believe that, because they are supported by the public purse, they can afford, to a better extent than we can, to program to minority audiences and I believe someone in this country should do it. We have to try and get an audience so that we can sell it in the best way we can and run the most efficient operation that we can and make a profit. We do program what one might call minority type programs. We are fortunate in the fact that they attract a large audience. The CBC, doesn't have to totally rely on revenue—that is advertising revenue. I believe this is partly their role and there is very much a place for it.

The Chairman: The question we have asked other witnesses and I think it is an appropriate question to put to you is this. If you take a specific CBC program on radio—and the example we have chosen several times is "The World at Eight". The reason we have chosen that is because it has had independent opinions and opinions expressed by witnesses to the effect that that is a pretty good news cast. You have a pretty good news cast on your station at 8 o'clock, but opposite you on the CBC is an equally good news cast. But the fact is of course that more people at 8 o'clock in the morning listen to CFRB than listen to all the CBC stations put together at 8 o'clock in the morning. Why is that?

Mr. Hartford: One of the advantages we have over the network stations is that they must be thinking about an audience that extends from Victoria to Newfoundland. Normally, a local station can always beat such a station because often a person that is in our own city is more interested in what happens at City Hall or whatever than they are in what happened in Victoria or St. John's, Newfoundland. The network of course, has to think about this in order to please everyone.

Now, most network stations will come in with some local news, but no network in my view can ever beat a local station that goes about its programming in a proper fashion and takes you around the world. It has to be a pretty earth shaking event in St. John's, Newfoundland before we will cover it and even perhaps in Montreal. You know, you have a great advantage over a network by being very local in your character and even taking a national story and relating it to a local situation.

The Chairman: Mr. Cran, would you like to comment on this?

Mr. Cran: It is not only because Jack Dennett has such a wonderful newscast but also because our programming beforehand, right from 5 o'clock in the morning, has such a loyal following of listeners; so they would sooner listen to Jack Dennett. The CBC—I don't listen to it, but they do have some differences.

The Chairman: Well, perhaps I will put the question to you, Mr. Potts, but the answer I would make to both Mr. Cran and Mr. Hartford is that perhaps their answer explains their lead because they have such an overwhelming lead.

Mr. Potts: The same thing applies in the United States where the free enterprise system is rampant. The network stations are losing out to the local stations down there. The radio networks in the United States are not what they used to be in the days of Jack Benny and Fred Allen many years ago. They maintain these networks right across the country but they are now devoid of programming for at least 50 or 55 minutes out of each hour. They exist only to sell commercials around the newscasts which occur on the hour and these keep these radio networks viable and alive. They have to then, as Mr. Hartford has said, write news of general interest across the United States. In markets across the country, there has been a tremendous proliferation of stations and the local stations lead with "The mayor has been shot on the City Hall steps", or something like that and that is of importance to the people in Cincinnati. They do of course include news of national and international interest which they get from various other services. So the non-network stations in the United States can beat the pants off the NBC's, the CBS's, and ABC's and Mutual and so forth. I predict that these networks are going to fold as they are today and they will become in essence voice news services providing the ingredients to local stations and they will be doing virtually what we in Canada are doing to help a local station get news reports from outside.

The Chairman: May I just ask you a supplementary question. I think many people who are interested in the news and living in Toronto, at night watch either the CBC or CTV national news on television on either Channel 9 or Channel 6 but that one gets more national, international and local news by listening to CFRB's radio news program at 11 o'clock at night. How can you explain that, Mr. Potts?

Mr. Potts: Well, I am glad you said that because I sometimes find myself—I have a television set in my room apart from the radio and if I am stretched out and taking things easy, I'm just too darn lazy to get up and turn the radio on. But I agree with you that if anybody wants to see at 11 o'clock what took place, let's say it took place 12 hours earlier, they would just have to watch the 11 o'clock news at night. But if they want to know what is going on in this world at the present time and be updated, they would tune in the radio newscast at 11 o'clock.

The Chairman: But in this case it is not just local news?

Mr. Hartford: I believe, but I can't be absolutely sure, that CFRB—and I was so pleased to find it when I came there—is the only station in Canada that really takes the 11 o'clock news seriously. It is the biggest thing that television has, you know—everybody understands and watches the 11 o'clock news on television. But apparently at some stage, and I think some of the people who have preceded me should comment on this—CFRB decided that they just wouldn't accept this. They went to work on "The World Tonight" and produced a half-hour news against television which has a fantastic and substantial audience. Jack, you were there, probably through all of this.

Mr. Jack Dawson: Yes. I also think that there is something of history in the time of 11 o'clock at night. Again, the CBC's national news—it is a logical hour for a late wrap-up, but CFRB over many years—going back to John Collinwood Reade during the last days of the war I honestly believe put countless thousands of Canadians peacefully to bed fully assured that there was going to be a tomorrow. However, I would like, Senator, to give my impression of the difference between these AM newscasts on CBL and CFRB.

The Chairman: Well, may I ask you a supplementary question before you do.

Mr. Dawson: Yes.

The Chairman: This ties right in to what you have been saying. Mr. Hartford has said that he thinks that there is a place for the CBC in the broadcasting system. Other witnesses have said that and certainly I believe it myself. I don't think you have to be hostile towards private broadcasting to think that there is a place for the CBC and yet if we took over "The World Tonight" which we have been talking about on your station and we transferred it holus bolus completely and put it on CBL at 11 o'clock every night Nobody would miss it. Why?

Mr. Dawson: I don't think, Senator Davey that you could put it on CBL. I think again it goes back to the 8 a.m. on the two station and I think the word "personality" really has to enter into this thing. I think that the CBC unfortunately—and this is one of the controversies which rage internally but any newscaster has to read what the writer writes for him. Consequently, I believe he becomes almost a sterile individual reading exactly those words that he has been told he has to read. He has been told that he can't add a sentence to it, nor a word. Whereas with Dennett, he is permitted a great deal of license here and it is some of the personality of the man being injected into his newscast. The corporation I believe, are against the star system.

Mr. Sydney Margles: I think, Senator Davey, this applies to any market against the CBC if we are talking specifically about news. With station CJAD, news is just part of the total information picture. And if you are taking the tune-in time, let us assume that it is roughly 20 minutes in the morning before an individual leaves his home, in the ten minutes before the news cast he has probably had sports, editorial, traffic reports, weather conditions, which he may not be getting on the CBC station, which I know for sure he is not getting in Montreal. And is receiving a different type of programming. So in the morning, as Mr. Hartford referred to earlier, where music used to dominate, it still does on the CBC; it is old-fashioned radio.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Margles, my answer to that would be simply this. I happen to be a radio listener and I listen to all of the radio stations in Toronto on quite a regular basis and I think CBL does give us that information.

Mr. Margles: They don't in Montreal.

The Chairman: Well, I am also aware of that, but in Toronto I think they do.

Mr. Margles: It may be a matter of building an audience which takes promotion, time and effort.

Mr. Potis: Senator Davey raised an interesting point. He said if you take the 11 o'clock news off CFRB and put it on CBL—would it work?

Mr. Margles: Well, the government tried that experiment some years ago. They took FRB completely off 860 and put it on 1010; and they took CJBK completely off 1010 and put it on 860; and it so ended up that the FRB had more audience on the move to 1010 than they had on 860. In other words, they beat a path to CFRB's door.

The Chairman: Well, I think what we might do now is take a break for a few minutes and then we will come back. We will have a 5 minute adjournment to give our reporter a break and we will reconvene at about 11 or 12 minutes after 4.00.

SHORT ADJOURNMENT.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call this session back to order. I believe Mr. Fortier is going to begin the questioning.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Cran, yours is a public company albeit owned or controlled by Argus Corporation. Do you feel as a broadcaster, as a head of a broadcasting concern, that in 1970, broadcasting companies should belong to the people as opposed to a select group of individuals?

Mr. Cran: Mr. Fortier, I feel that with the growth of broadcasting, the growth of the value of larger broadcasting operations in larger cities, that it is inevitable that they belong to the public by means of a stock issue and that sort of thing, I mean, have you any indication of the station that we bought back from J. A. Dupont—CJAD in 1961 in Montreal. He reached a state where he felt it was worrying him—the station would have been on the hook if he had died owning CJAD, with inheritance taxes and all these sort of things and so he had to go public. There must be hundreds of small stations in the country in which one can have a living working in it with a very small staff. But once you get into the bigger leagues, in the bigger cities, I think they have to go public.

Mr. Fortier: Well, when you answer in this way, do you attach any importance at all to the nature of the industry as the service industry as you referred to earlier, the public trust concept of the mass media? Does this weigh at all in your mind when you say, at least in the big cities that the broadcasting operation should belong to a broad base of people?

Mr. Cran: I was really giving you an answer based on what I would call economic facts of life.

Mr. Fortier: I understood that but I am putting it on another plane now.

Mr. Cran: I think it is preferable. We claim that there are some 500,000 people benefitting from one form or another. We are in a fortunate position where we have one group of stockholders, namely the Argus one, so therefore you have somebody that you can talk to which is really the stockholders...

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Cran: So, if you haven't got them you might be dealing with 10,000 people and nobody having any real control over the thing, so management would have to be entirely on its own.

Mr. Fortier: Well, in the first half of the question period this afternoon, you were asked about unpopular causes. I wanted to ask you a question at that time but I didn't really get a chance. Supposing that Mr. Leslie Roberts or Rod Blaker or Gordon Sinclair or anyone of your people comment on one or another of your radio stations against one of the interests belonging to the Argus Corporation, the 47 or 48 per cent shareholders whom you represent. Would you feel that this is something you should become interested in or Argus should become interested in?

Mr. Cran: Not at all.

Mr. Fortier: Has it ever happened in fact?

Mr. Cran: No, it has never happened.

Mr. Fortier: Has there ever been comment by one of your broadcasters on either CFRB or CJAD which affected...

Mr. Cran: Oh, definitely.

Mr. Fortier: The rest of the Argus Corporation?

Mr. Harford: Oh, yes. Most recently with a lead item about a plant controlled by Domtar polluting the sky which is a pretty unpopular cause in these days. We use it as a lead item.

Mr. Fortier: Domtar?

Mr. Harford: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: You don't edit it in any way?

Mr. Harford: Well, we haven't heard anything about it.

Mr. McCurdy: If I could go one further and say in our anti-pollution campaign, CJAD won an award and Mr. Beaudry, who happens to be a Director of Domtar didn't say two words except the fact that it was costing him money because we had won the award.

Mr. Potts: And at the same time this was happening, Bob Hesketh was on the air advocating people who polluted the water be taken to court and have it really "socked to them". Certainly freedom of expression.

Mr. Fortier: You have heard, I am certain, even if you have not followed day by day the deliberations of this committee, Mr. Cran, that in New Brunswick, the fact that KC Irving was at the head of a conglomerate and that this was reflected in the news coverage of some of his newspapers; more specifically in the absence of news coverage of certain stories.

Mr. Cran: Right.

Mr. Fortier: Would these considerations not apply also to broadcasting?

Mr. Cran: Well, they definitely applied to New Brunswick but not with us.

Mr. Fortier: They don't with you?

Mr. Cran: They don't.

Mr. Fortier: You don't see any disadvantage, Mr. Cran.

Mr. Cran: I have never been asked to suppress the news.

Mr. Fortier: Do you consider your operation a big city operation—in other words, a Toronto station or a Montreal station as opposed to a small station. Supposing, there was a radio station for sale in Cornwall. Would you be interested in purchasing a radio station in a relatively smaller city than Toronto or Montreal or are you only interested in the big markets?

Mr. Cran: It depends what is for sale really. As I said before, the radio stations in the bigger centres are usually much more profitable than the smaller areas and we are not ideally geared to handle the smaller operations. On the other hand, they can be quite a help if you use the term "farm stations" for bringing up announcers and talent which can then move to the larger cities. No, we wouldn't really rule it out.

Mr. Fortier: You say in your brief that you have been for some years in the market for a television station in Toronto.

Mr. Cran: Historically. I think it was probably before you were born!

Mr. Fortier: Thank you for the compliment! However, you don't speak of your purchasing other radio stations. Are you in the market for them as well?

Mr. Cran: We have just entered into a contract to purchase two stations in Hamilton, Ontario. That has been announced for about two weeks now.

The Chairman: And which two stations are they?

Mr. Cran: CHML and CKOS.

Mr. Fortier: What about cable?

Mr. Cran: I had experiences with cable in Montreal—starting rediffusion cable which I think was the best one in the country. All I can say at the present is that I am very glad I am not in cable today with the present regulations.

Mr. Fortier: Do you think the ever-increasing importance of cable will affect the radio station to-morrow?

Mr. Cran: No.

Mr. Fortier: In any way comparable to the effect which the advent of television had on radio in 1952?

Mr. Cran: No.

Mr. Fortier: You don't think that cable will harm radio stations as we know them today?

Mr. Cran: I don't think so.

Mr. Margles: Not in the foreseeable future.

The Chairman: Mr. Potts?

Mr. Potts: In the smaller market, if the cable operator is offering the only second oral service in a smaller market, yes, he could become quite a competitor to the radio stations providing there was wide distribution of the cable service, and bearing in mind that he has very small overhead and the broadcast operator has a tremendous investment in staff, programming news, and otherwise. If there was wide cable distribution, I believe even a very small area, it could pose a severe problem or threat to the broadcasters. That is just my philosophy—it may not be a corporate one, but it is mine.

Mr. Hartford: I really feel that radio stands suffer the least with all the new innovations that are taking place, cable television and satellites and all—one of the best reasons being that nobody has figured out how to drive a car and watch TV.

Mr. Cran: And handle the cable!

Mr. Fortier: What technological changes do you foresee in the near future that would affect the radio stations as we know them? What is going to happen to-morrow? You speak in your brief for example, at Paragraph 176 and you say:

"We are in the process of experimenting with a different sort of approach to our listeners and we hope that our studies will be given some practical expression in the near future."

Where are we, the listening public, going, compliments of Standard Broadcasting?

The Chairman: Mr. Cran?

Mr. Cran: Well, may I ask Mr. Dawson to answer that question?

The Chairman: Yes. Mr. Dawson?

Mr. Jack Dawson: Would Mr. Waters leave the room please!

The Chairman: Mr. Hartford?

Mr. Hartford: Well, we do have some plans and we wondered about that question, Jack I am sure, can speak to us but...

The Chairman: Well, I am quite aware that there are competitors of yours in the room and if you would feel inhibited about answering the questions in front of competitors perhaps you could send us something in confidence in writing. Would you feel better about that, Mr. Dawson?

Mr. Jack Dawson: May I give an answer as far as I wish to go then if you wish any further elaboration I could make sure that you have it?

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Dawson: I believe that the right of reply is something that is inherent and I think that probably—and I am as much to blame as anyone—we are not giving as good a service as we might and we propose to remedy that.

Mr. McCurdy: Speaking in more general terms I think most broadcasters—I don't know about the other gentlemen in the room here—would agree that AM broadcasting would appear to be heading toward a service industry if you like, a news, public affairs commentary and all types of services, with FM taking up more of a role in the music medium giving a cross-section of music from the underground to the classical. There are those who say that it will all be radio and every station will be fine once it finds its own niche in the market. But at this moment in time it would appear that AM will find more a service role and FM will be more a music medium.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Chairman I wonder if we cannot accept the offer that was made to be further informed in writing of the plans of CFRB.

The Chairman: Yes, and I can assure the members of your team Mr. Cran, that the information which you send to the Committee will be kept in strict confidence.

Senator McElman: On that same line, Mr. Chairman, without trying to delve into any confidentiality of what you have when you say "right of reply" you have something in mind similar to what they have in legislation now in the United States—of "right of access" and "right of reply"?

Mr. Dawson: Well, in a broad general sense, yes.

The Chairman: I wonder if I might turn to some other matter. Section 155, Mr. Cran, of your brief you talk about the advantages of a multiple ownership and you say:

"Standard Broadcasting Corporation believes that the present degree of concentration of ownership in the Canadian media is almost totally the result of prevailing economic forces. It is likely that these forces will lead to even greater concentration of ownership in the future."

You say in the next paragraph:

"In theory excessive concentration is not socially desirable..."

Mr. Cran: We have various administrative boards, whether it was the BBG or the CBC Board and now the CRTC, they have never made any specific regulations regarding the number of stations which can be owned by one group.

The Chairman: Should there be specific regulations?

Mr. Cran: Well, in countries where there are, such as the United States and Australia, they seem to work. What happened in the United States is that these groups—about half a dozen of them that have a maximum number of TV and AM and FM stations, spend their time trading up. They buy a more profitable one in a larger city and dispose of the smaller ones. That is what it amounts to.

The Chairman: Well, do you feel that some kind of guidelines are necessary.

Mr. Cran: I don't know. It is kind of a different kettle of fish, really, but certainly there is a considerable degree of uncertainty without any guidelines.

The Chairman: The question we put to many witnesses and I now put to you I put it to you as a broadcaster but also as a Canadian: how much concentration is too much? Is there a point reached at which concentration becomes acceptable?

Mr. Cran: I think there must be.

The Chairman: In other words, you don't think it would be in the public interest for Standard to own every radio station in Canada, for example?

Mr. Cran: No, I don't believe it would be in Standard's interest. It is a very debatable thing, Senator. These various government regulatory bodies have tried to grapple with this for a number of years and have not come up with an answer.

The Chairman: Well, I know a number of people have come before this Committee including government agencies, and said they might look to Parliament for some guidelines. I am wondering if you might agree what guidelines would be useful and if you have any views on what they should be?

Mr. Cran: I would think that some guidelines would be useful but I wouldn't presume to say that they should be.

The Chairman: I would like to take you to Paragraph 129 in your brief where you say:

"Standard Broadcasting Corporation Limited believes there should be no extension of foreign ownership of the electronic mass media. In our view, there is no reason a newspaper owner should not participate in radio, television or cable. We believe it invidious if the instruments of mass communication in one city are owned by one individual company."

Did you have any specific city or cities in mind when you wrote that sentence.

Mr. Cran: Oh, yes. I mean, there was a situation in Kingston and Peterborough where you had newspaper, TV and radio all in one hand, but then Roy Thomson decided that he should get out of radio and television because it was against public interest in the present element of thinking.

The Chairman: Are there any situations at the present time which alarm you?

Mr. Cran: No, I don't think so.

The Chairman: You had nothing specific in mind when you wrote that sentence?

Mr. Cran: Only the ones that I mentioned.

The Chairman: Only Kingston and Peterborough?

Mr. Cran: Yes.

The Chairman: Did anybody else have anything else in mind when that sentence appeared in the brief.

Mr. Hartford: Well, I think if it should happen through purchase or anything else if you find yourself in any one market where all media is controlled by one person—it probably isn't a very good idea.

Mr. Cran: I should include, in spite of Mr. Murray Brown that London, Ontario is another situation.

The Chairman: Well, this Committee has asked a great deal about London and I think should be frank to say that I was wondering whether or not you had London in mind?

Mr. Cran: Yes, that was another one.

The Chairman: The fact that I asked question won't be a great shocker to Mr. Brown, I'm sure.

Mr. Potts: It depends whether or not there are other radio stations, or television stations in that town. As long as there is another voice or two for reply, this is important. I believe Mr. Cran referred to Kingston and Peterborough, but there are other stations in those areas where another point of view can be expressed.

Mr. Hartford: You also said in terms that would cause you great concern, but I don't think there is anything in those terms.

The Chairman: Fine. The CRTC has recently indicated that they are considering a regulation which would not allow common ownership of newspapers or any electronic medium. Do you think such a regulation—you obviously do not feel that such a regulation is necessary in Canada, is that right?

Mr. Cran: Well, you take a situation in Toronto where there is a common ownership between the Telegram and CFTO, I think that puts the Toronto Star at a potential disadvantage. However, you could cure that by having the Star...

The Chairman: Well, that was my next question.

Mr. Cran: Well, do two wrongs make a right, or what?

The Chairman: Well, you tell me. That was my next question. In the Toronto situation would you prefer to see the Toronto Star have a television station or would you prefer to see the Telegram not have a television station?

Mr. Cran: I would prefer the Telegram not have a television station because you have these problems of overseas correspondents and all kinds of things.

The Chairman: And presumably back to your point, Mr. Hartford, you would then feel in London, for example, that there is sufficient competition for CFPL?

Mr. Hartford: Yes. If there was no other station there I think it would be morally wrong but there is competition there and in really every other market that I am aware of.

Mr. Potts: I might add, Senator, that I have had experience in London and I think in one election, with a staff of 20 some, we were well ahead in election results beating the combined resources of the television station, the newspaper and the radio stations, but sometimes you can make up in initiative what you lack in numbers.

The Chairman: Thank you, are there supplementary questions in this area? If not, then perhaps then I could move on to another area I would like to ask you about. I will put this question to Mr. Hartford. In the brief at Paragraph 122 you said:

"We voluntarily restrict the number of commercials which we will accept to a figure lower than that permitted by the regulations of the CRTC."

I recall from the early part of the brief that you make that reference also about the FM station in Toronto. Did the reference in Paragraph 122 apply to CFRB as well?

Mr. Hartford: Yes. We are allowed as you know 1500 commercials a week. We run a total of 1485 but in addition you talk about the numbers you run per day or even per hour or per grouping. The BBG at one time suggested there be some experimental program in Canada and the experimental programming would be with reduced number of commercials. As a matter of fact that never did become a regulation, but CFRB chose to experiment and there is a one hour program in the afternoon and two hours in the evening that is still run that way with limited commercials. This system receives a good audience. In FM we run 900 commercials a week and that is less than the allowable number.

The Chairman: On both AM and FM I assume you could sell out totally, could you not?

Mr. Hartford: One can never really completely sell out a radio station in my view.

The Chairman: To your allowable number of commercials?

Mr. Hartford: For a period of time; but there is always some time for sale on any radio station, I believe; it is either all night or some time but to be totally sold out and maintain it, I believe is rather difficult.

The Chairman: Well, I am putting that in contrast to your statement here where you say:

"We voluntarily restrict the number of commercials."

Mr. Hartford: Oh, we do.

The Chairman: You voluntarily turn down some of it?

Mr. Hartford: Sure.

The Chairman: I am relating this to Paragraph 122 and the question I am trying to drive at is this. Are you turning business away?

Mr. Hartford: We do on occasion.

The Chairman: Because of this?

Mr. Hartford: Yes, there are many weeks when we have to do that.

The Chairman: But when you could accommodate more advertising and still stay within the CRTC regulations?

Mr. Hartford: Yes.

The Chairman: And you turn it away?

Mr. Hartford: Yes.

The Chairman: What is your philosophy in turning it away?

Mr. Hartford: One good reason is that we just don't wish to violate that 1500 minutes a week.

The Chairman: But if you are running 1500 you are not violating it?

Mr. Hartford: No, but you have to watch very carefully if you run the maximum on a regular basis. You time them out and some fellow reads them slower than another; you know this from experience. One can read a live commercial and take one minute and ten or whatever, and if you are running a full 1500 you can quite easily violate that regulation.

The Chairman: When Mr. Bill McGregory was here and I believe he is now the new President-elect of the CAB, he said commercials attracted audiences and even went further and said that they were Canadian content. In a story in Marketing, he was interviewed; they said: "Did you say this" and he said "Yes" and he said: "I really jolted some of the Senators because I could tell the way they reacted" and that's right, he did.

Senator McElman: There is no question about that!

The Chairman: Do you agree with that contention by Mr. MacGregor?

Mr. Hartford: Well, I don't know that commercials are necessarily Canadian, but some commercials are very entertaining and do attract an audience. I think part of it has to do with the fact that our ear is geared to the commercial inserted in programs. We are used to it that if you don't get it you all of sudden become startled.

I can remember some years ago when some very senior head of state would pass away and, you know, you would have a whole day at one time with no commercials. It had everything else, they just took the commercials out—and you know, it was pretty dull radio.

The Chairman: Well, why then do you only run eight per hour on CKFM?

Mr. Hartford: Well, for one reason that was our commitment when the license was granted. I know we could go over that because there is a further maximum allowable but we just chose to stick to that because that was our commitment. We just don't chose to argue the point.

The Chairman: But why if it makes for better radio, why not have more commercials?

Mr. Hartford: I didn't say that more commercials necessarily make for better radio but then again I believe FM is a different situation from AM.

The Chairman: Mr. Tietolman, who I am sure you know—was here this morning—I am not sure if it was Mr. Tietolman or Mr. Thomson but one of them said an FM station is an AM station operator's conscience. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Hartford: No.

The Chairman: Which one of them said that this morning?

Senator McElman: Mr. Tietolman.

Mr. Hartford: I think an FM frequency is another frequency like an AM frequency and I think you try to attract an audience on either one. It is another broadcast station but you just get it by a different means of transmission.

The Chairman: What is the purpose, Mr. Hartford of CFRX? Why does it exist?

Mr. Hartford: I think you would have to ask Mr. Cran.

Mr. Cran: It existed from away way back—I don't know how many years—in order to cover certain parts of Northern Canada and the Arctic. That was its prime purpose.

The Chairman: And what is its purpose today?

Mr. Cran: Well, we have continued it and we have a loyal audience in places like Goose Bay and Frobisher, places like that. They get news from Toronto and if the Toronto people are up there and they get this every day. We just let it run. I can get this in Bermuda occasionally, which causes a certain amount of embarrassment!

The Chairman: You mean you can listen and then phone the station and complain!

Mr. Cran: Yes.

The Chairman: Speaking of Goose Bay—well not quite Goose Bay, I received a letter this morning from a gentlemen in Perth, Ontario which I am going to ask you to reply to for me. You might be interested in this and he says:

"Since there has been so much interest spoken of recent date regarding the news medium, particularly the television and radio, and since I've lived most of my life in Toronto and only recently took up residence here in Perth, I am more than surprised at the limited number of AM stations we can get, since there are 9 American stations to every one Canadian station on the dial.

For example, CFRB in Toronto is only 208 road miles from our door and a much shorter distance by way of the crow, reaches us every clearly at night between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m. and then as I understand it, they change their pattern and beam down to the States.

I would appreciate to be corrected if this is not so."

The question is, if I turn this letter over to you, would you reply to it for me?

Mr. Hartford: Certainly.

The Chairman: I wanted to ask also about Standard Broadcast News, who should I direct that question to, Mr. Cran?

Mr. Cran: I believe Mr. Potts.

The Chairman: We were interested yesterday when Western Broadcasting were here in their response to question I put to them. I suggested, Mr. Potts, that with the various means of communications in Canada, that it occurred to some of the members of the Committee and certainly to me, that the major markets were fairly well served by the various media but that in some of the smaller communities, some of the more hinter-land communities if you will, perhaps they were not as well served; and that as a Canadian, a person who lives in Perth is just as important as a person who lives in Toronto. I asked what could be done. Western said and I hope

I am quoting them correctly, that they are going to make available at cost Standard Broadcast News Service to all of the stations in the interior of British Columbia.

Mr. Cran: If I may interrupt.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Cran: We have about 16 stations as we mentioned subscribing to Standard Broadcast News. The lines across Canada are very onerous as you know. What we have done is to say to each main station in the area—we have broken the country up into areas—saying you can sub-contract this supply to other smaller stations in your own area if you want to. In other words, we can't afford to sign Prince George or places like that, however, the local station can supply it if they want to.

The Chairman: But Western indicated they are doing precisely this in British Columbia.

Mr. Cran: Yes, they could.

The Chairman: Well, are you doing this in Ontario?

Mr. Potts: Well, we made it possible for Western, we made it possible for all of the stations. We have the key stations across the country and we were the first voice service of this type and we approached them a little while ago and said...

The Chairman: I would like to remind you that Mr. Waters and his group have equal time!

Mr. Potts: I'm afraid that by the time this is over, he will get on the phone and say "Beat these guys up"! Nevertheless, there has been a very strong desire, certainly on behalf of CFRB and Mr. Dawson down on the end, in finding some way to help the stations further in the small market.

Mr. Dawson, if I may speak for him, raised the point with me that we have done this with music, the Canadian Talent Library, so why can't we do this with news. We have been struggling with it and we figured, using the ingenuity that I referred to a little while ago, that the stations in certain geographic areas could harness this material in some-where and by hook or by crook or fence post or something like this, short-wave or some means, get this material out to stations out in areas at very low cost and we are exploring this. I had an interesting talk with the Minister of Transport the other night for the Province of Ontario and I pointed out the high cost of lines in Ontario and the need for some form of virtually subsidized communication services, so that broadcasters at distance points, could have the same advantages as the broadcasters who live near the larger centres or live near Queen's Park and the likes—something similar to the advantages which were given the Canadian Press and other services years ago. They could send wires and stories and still can I believe, at cheaper rates than broadcasters can. The newspaper industry has been well subsidized but the broadcasters have not in this regards and I struck a very responsive cord. This comes within the province of that Minister and he was quite interested. We are formulating a policy in this regard right now and anything we can do to make these services available at virtually cost, or at cost, we will do.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: You have no subscriber stations in either Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick. Is there any particular reason?

Mr. Potts: We had one at one time, sir, in Saint John—CHSJ was a subscriber at one point. We talked about this on future systems in broadcasting and they saw certain things in front of them like supplying additional television services and the like and it was my understanding at the time that it was a problem of economics. This is a sort of an ad hoc kind of service. It is a rich service in a way, because as Mr. Cran said, the high cost of transmission is not something that every station really can afford. So we did approach other stations in New Brunswick but they figured that they were well served by Canadian Press Voice Service; and since there was no competition in the town—if there were two stations in town perhaps we would have a customer, but since they were the only stations, there was no need to perhaps take or something that was more expensive.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier, do you have a supplementary?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Potts stations which you say in your brief subscription to SBN also serve as bureaux for their regions.

Mr. Potts: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: What is going to happen now with this new concept of, for example, Western sending a service to a small station in British Columbia? Would those small stations also feed you?

Mr. Potts: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Would they feed you through Western, or would they feed you direct?

Mr. Potts: We developed this broad band thing, we kept talking to the line companies saying "Is there any way we can develop service across the country so we could communicate one with the other. We have always had this difficulty" and they said "Something is coming, something is coming" so they came up with broad band. Our engineer, Mr. Eastwood is at the back of the room and he was in on the idea when we conceived it—that you could dial up a network. In other words, what you do is push three buttons and instantly you are connected to 16 stations and tape-recorders. You start it turning, you say what you have to say, you hang up and that is all you pay for; unlike the American systems in the States where they are paying the high cost of high quality lines 18 hours a day when they are using them for 5 minutes each hour. The rates keep going up and this is just insane.

Mr. Fortier: I mean—any subscribing member station will get all the news that it wants?

Mr. Potts: That's right, and it also has the right to reject; but then a station in Prince George would call into CKNW and CKNW will call us on broad band and say "Here is a hot one from Prince George". But the thing is this: if something happens in Vancouver right now it could be heard instantly within minutes all across Canada.

I might mention something and maybe Mr. Margles might speak to it. It was during the railroad strike; the railroad started to move together again and we found that our service was instrumental across the country in communicating the word from the head of the otherhood of railway unions or the heads of these various unions that it is "all right fellows go back to work." CN started to get reports in on the resumption of operations and finally they scrapped their own system and merely tuned in CJAD because the reports were coming in very fast from all across the country. The same has been true...

Mr. Margles: The Air Canada one has been most significant. With Air Canada's Head Office being in Montreal, back to work orders were given by their union leaders, some here in Ottawa and some in Montreal, and some of these orders were heard on the stations. In the case of the field stations, where you actually hear the voice of the union leaders, the union members take it therefore as being instructions.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: On what basis do you the member stations pay a fee to SBN?

Mr. Potts: It is on the basis of their rate card. It is actually a rate that is worked out on the basis of their rate card. There is a certain amount that we say or so many minutes of transmission in a day plus a certain figure which I would work out based upon their rates, and we establish the rate.

Mr. Fortier: It is not on the basis of the news that they use?

Mr. Potts: No.

Mr. Fortier: It is a fee which is calculated and they can use it or not?

Mr. Potts: That is correct.

Mr. Fortier: As they see fit?

Mr. Potts: That's right, that is correct.

Mr. Fortier: Supposing one of your member stations put a story on the broad band, to use the term that was uttered before this Committee yesterday, and it was repeated over one or another of the member stations and it turned out to be false information. What would you do?

Mr. Potts: Well, first of all we receive it at the station and tape record it first. We have senior news personnel on duty in our news room in Toronto and they would very much weigh that story.

Mr. Fortier: What verification would go into a story from say Prince George?

Mr. Potts: Well Prince George is a problem because I am not too familiar with the operations there but certainly anything that comes out of CKNW, let us say, I would accept holus bolus.

Mr. Fortier: Well, let us not refer to any specific station, but would you please tell us what verification you make at SBN Headquarters?

Mr. Potts: We don't make any more verifications than a reporter from the Star. A Star reporter goes to a council meeting, sits here at this meeting and sends the story in on it. They don't phone you back and say did this man report this properly—if he did we will print it in the paper.

Mr. Fortier: We have heard it said there are such things as re-write...

Mr. Potts: Certainly.

Mr. Fortier: At the newspapers and in certain newspapers there are some people who doublecheck stories.

Mr. Margles: Mr. Fortier, I might point out that I don't think that the individual stations do any more verification than on items that come in on the Canadian Press or Broadcast News wire because we have a reputation for reliability.

Mr. Fortier: Well, that is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. Margles: Perhaps this is at the core of the whole thing. If we go on live in Montreal on nation wide broadcast, I think the stations know—when we alerted them that the chairman of the Montreal Executive Committee said he had a statement to make of national interest, that we were going live and it was provided to all stations on a live basis, with a countdown in order to alert them. CKCK Regina deemed fit, the only station I might point out of the owned and operated stations which carried it—the 15 minute statement in which Mr. Saulnier denounced the Company of Young Canadians. I would say that I believe we are dealing with mature personnel in every station which subscribes to the network. Therefore I can't see why we would have to back-check everything every time on the reliability of it. In all my experience I haven't heard one complaint of erroneous information being sent out. The Canadian Press, with all due respect, have sent out erroneous information and unlike broadcast transmissions, that perhaps might come in three or four hours later after having been used in three, four or five newscasts.

Mr. Potts: I might add that we have written into our contract—and the BBG questioned this for what they thought were other motives—we wrote into our contract that they must receive a directive from us before they put something on the air—that they would not use it and this allowed for an erroneous story being sent at a given time to be included in a later newscast. The BBG at that time questioned it on the basis of censorship or something like that. It was not that at all and merely that there might be an erroneous story sent out, so we took that precaution in our contracts. But as Mr. Margles says, I can't recall running into this experience at all. We work with some pretty good people; we have meetings once a year with all of them; and we have very good people in to talk to them like Senator Davey and others.

Mr. Fortier: Have you any views, Mr. Cran, or anyone else through you, on the use of four-letter words on radio broadcasts?

Mr. Cran: Well, I don't think they would fit the image of our station.

Mr. Fortier: On the open line shows, for example, I do realize that you have some screening that takes place, but still the people come on live.

Mr. McCurdy: There is a delay.

Mr. Fortier: There is a delay?

Mr. McCurdy: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Even on Encounter, for example?

Mr. McCurdy: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: On Sunday nights?

Mr. McCurdy: Yes, five seconds. This is adequate for the person on the control board to listen to the incoming calls and cut it if necessary but fortunately it has never happened.

Mr. Potts: There are very few four letter words which last longer than 5 seconds.

The Chairman: You have a section in here Paragraph 137, which I would like to ask you about—the threats to Canadian advertising agencies. I will just quote it in part:

"The degree to which our advertising industry borrows from foreign culture and attempts to persuade listeners or viewers to alter attitudes and habits unique to Canada should be of concern in the preservation of our own way of life. To the greatest possible extent, such agencies should be controlled by citizen of this country."

Would you care to comment on that, Mr. Hartford? Do you have anything specifically in mind on how this could be achieved?

Mr. Hariford: We feel that it would be desirable, but unfortunately it is almost too late. I can't be absolutely specific but of the major agencies I think there are probably no more than three of that total in Canadian hands. Some of them tell me—at least one, says “I keep getting offers from the United States, I try to hold out but what do you do when they wave money around”. The other thing is that I think some of them are considering going public, which of course gives them the opportunity for the Canadian public to participate in that particular business. I still believe it would be desirable if they were Canadian-owned.

The Chairman: Well, to quote you: “It is almost too late.” Do you think it is that way?

Mr. Hariford: Well, I don't know how you rehabilitate various agencies. Many of them are branches of large American, world-wide agencies in many countries and I don't know if there is a particular stigma in that except that to say that with all the things that the government is trying to do and the regulatory bodies, it would be one other way of making it easier to have more Canadian content, in that they would use more Canadian people to produce commercials, jingles, films and other items.

The Chairman: You mentioned at the end of that section those attitudes which distinguish Canadians from other inhabitants of the North American continent. What are some of those attitudes that you had in mind and I will put the question to anyone who would like to answer it?

Mr. Potts: I think we are a better class of people myself.

Mr. Hariford: Well, I wouldn't make that comment at all. I don't think being anti-American should be considered to be an “in” thing. I am not talking about Lyman here but I don't think that is a good thing for us to talk about. I think being a pro-Canadian...

The Chairman: What are the attitudes that distinguish us from Americans?

Mr. Hariford: Well, I think some of them are the fact that we appear to be almost ashamed of the various things that we should be proud of. We don't really wave the flag to the extent that we should and you know, we seem to make apologies in many areas for being Canadian. We get confused with Americans when we travel elsewhere in the world and I find it a bit humiliating to find that I have to have American money. There is nothing wrong with it but we really don't have a very strong Canadian identity in the whole world scene, I believe. They have been much more successful at it I believe. You can get in a plane here on our own airline, Air Canada, and land in a foreign country and it would be a very good idea to have a Canadian flag there, for example. You will see this within American Airlines in other countries, but that is only one small example.

Mr. Margles: I think you will find that the melting pot philosophy in the United States has not occurred in Canada for one. People here are more strongly identified with their past and perhaps this is leading to some of the problems that exist today; but there is nothing wrong with it, it is a better way of life because each can contribute to the other in attitudes and outlooks and contribute to the culture. Perhaps that is the greatest difference, where a second generation United States citizen and a second generation Canadians are not at all alike.

Mr. Hariford: Another thing that crossed my mind is that I am sure if we were American broadcasters, before your counterpart in United States, we might view it slightly differently because the Senators are elected. Here, our process is that they are appointed—I think that is a great thing. I think Canadians are concerned about things like this. Our banking system—we learn in school that banks don't fold as rapidly as American banks were prone to in the depression times. Our police force and Crown Law enforcement comes from the Crown on down and not from elected vigilantes, if you will, up. There are a number of differences.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Cran, which is the most important—I realize that you offer a package to your listeners, a sound as they say in the trade, and within that sound, which is the most important service which you seek to provide to your listeners? Is it education, entertainment or information?

Mr. Cran: Information and or news, which ever you would like to put the emphasize on.

Mr. Fortier: Information to you is the most important?

Mr. Cran: For AM.

Mr. Hariford: It is a combination of all these things. We have often been accused of being a very square station but we are proud of the fact that we are so square because we have a larger audience than all but five or six American stations have. But we still do, on a station of our size, various things like looking for lost dogs and things of that nature. Announcements such as that are only of interest to people who have lost pets. We have a lot of good luck with that; it is perhaps a very small thing but we have found that things as small as that are important.

Mr. Cran: If I may interject, our philosophy is based on the fact that to be successful you have to have total involvement in the community you are serving. This is the one ingredient that leads to success. It doesn't matter about your power or the type of program or anything else—you must have total involvement. All of our personnel are involved in various local activities and it is this total involvement that produces the success.

Mr. Fortier: And in order to attain this total involvement you should strive for as total a listening audience as possible.

Mr. Cran: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Hence my question. What do you do to get people to turn on radio—those people who do not listen to radio?

The Chairman: Perhaps before he enters that I have a question which is perhaps supplementary which I would like to put before yours. We would be interested in knowing the dimension of the audience who do not listen to radio in Toronto? Which one of your people here, Mr. Cran, is a rating expert?

Mr. Jack Dawson: At 6 o'clock in the morning there are only 6 out of every 100 people listening to all radio in the central Toronto area. At 8 o'clock I believe it reaches 32 per cent and those are figures from memory, Senator.

The Chairman: Well, let us from memory take it at 5.05 p.m. How many people of every 100 citizens in Toronto would be listening to all the radio stations put together?

Mr. Dawson: Probably 26.

The Chairman: Would be listening?

Mr. Dawson: Out of every 100 people.

The Chairman: That still means that 74 people out of 100 are not listening.

Mr. Hartford: That's right.

The Chairman: Well, that being the case I have two questions. One being a question which Mr. Fortier asked and that is what do you do to attract them and why are three-quarters of the people not listening to radio?

Mr. Dawson: That is at any given time, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Yes, I appreciate that.

Mr. Dawson: At a given time in a metropolitan centre people are doing many different things.

The Chairman: What is your peak time?

Mr. Dawson: Well, between 7:30 and 8.

The Chairman: In the morning?

Mr. Dawson: Yes.

The Chairman: In Toronto what percentage would be listening at 8 o'clock in the morning to all stations?

Mr. Dawson: 32 per cent.

The Chairman: Well, that still leaves 68 per cent who are not listening.

Mr. Dawson: Yes, but one more point, that I think you must consider, is that there is also a circulation figure which says how many people are listening 1 or more times per week. Where you have a peak of some 32 per cent for all stations, we alone can show a circulation figure of 1,325,000 depending on the survey.

The Chairman: Well, one million three was mentioned here earlier today.

Mr. Dawson: Yes, and it has been up and down from there. CHUM and other stations which have a large circulation figure so that person can be listening to a station but not every day and you know, they are catching it sporadically.

The Chairman: Let us put the question in perspective. We are not, I hope you realize being critical of private radio because we are talking of radio in total but there is an enormous audience which listens to radio and on a cost per thousand basis you are competitive with every other medium, or more than competitive; you perhaps cost less money. However, at the same point, it must concern you as a broadcaster that there is an enormous group of people that don't listen to radio. So why don't they listen and what are you doing to make them listen?

Mr. Hariford: Well, I think others should speak to this as well.

The Chairman: Alright.

Mr. Hariford: This concerns us a lot and we have talked about it a lot in such organizations as the Radio Sales Bureau. They have asked us what we should do and we have said that all broadcasters should get busy on that. For any one station—you can try and we certainly have tried, but for any one station to do it, you go out and you are working away, talking to a small group of people. You may as well not use your own facilities to talk to the same people you already have, so you have to get billboards and newspapers and various other things to do it. It becomes a problem for all broadcasters to cope with. It really is an astounding figure and one which gets very discouraging if you look at it one way and yet it is a very expensive cost per thousand. We don't have a fast answer as to how you correct it.

Mr. Potts: I think, Senator, that people are occupied in various pastimes. The people in this room are obviously not listening to the radio and there are many of thousands that are riding the subway and out of reach of a radio completely. There are those in hospitals and just leaving offices and the like. You will never get total listening at any one time.

However, I think statistics will show that in the course of a day, nearly everybody listens to the radio. I think pretty well it is 100 per cent in one way or another. Some people listen all the time, and I have seen surveys where some people just listen to news on the hour and then turn it off. People write "Sorry, we didn't listen this week because we were away on vacation" and it just breaks your heart but it is one of your stations that they might listen to you know, and that ballot might get counted for several thousand people in a projection.

I have addressed myself to this. I once did a survey in a town and the surrounding area—I believe it was served by two stations—and a woman said that she liked to listen to the radio but the radio in her town was not good enough for her to waste her batteries on and so she didn't listen at all.

Mr. Margles: If I might add one point. Can you show me any newspaper that claims 100 per cent readership in the area that it circulates to.

The Chairman: Well, I am not arguing for newspapers against radio.

Mr. Margles: But the exact same situation applies. An individual in Montreal may subscribe to the Gazette as I did, and yet I didn't read it today because I didn't have time to read it this morning. The same applies to any other individual subscriber so this could be erroneous in that sense. It might get to 100,000 homes and yet it may not be read by even 100,000 people, of say 6,000 people in those homes.

The Chairman: Would anyone else like to comment on this general area?

Mr. Dawson: I think we all know that it is physically impossible to reach all of the people all of the time. I think that if we could, I'm sure we would have a good deal more close to 100 per cent of the available audience without radio on. But it is an amazing thing, when you have letters from listeners requesting such a thing as a simple tune of some kind, if somebody doesn't like it—boom—the radio has gone off. The answer I suppose is to try and perform a better service.

Mr. Cran: There are hundreds of thousands of people in the Toronto area that I know and who have talked to me that only listen to the radio in their cars and as such don't appear on the survey.

The Chairman: My question as I said earlier wasn't meant to be critical.

I would like to say to the witnesses and the Senators that it is now 5.20; perhaps we could adjourn by 5.30 or a few minutes before.

Is there anyone who has any other questions—I have only one. I have a question about the CRTC in regards to a couple of quotations which appeared in the Toronto papers yesterday which would be of interest to you and I am wondering if you could comment on them.

Patrick Scott writing in the Star said yesterday and I am quoting him...

"Except that the relationship never was sanctified, let alone natural, it could truthfully be said today that the honeymoon between Canada's broadcasters and their regulators is over."

Was there ever a "honeymoon" between Canada's broadcasters and the regulators that you were aware of, Mr. Hartford?

Mr. Hartford: Well, I would say that there was a time when there was a better rapport between the governing bodies and broadcasters, it goes back to the days, first of all, of the CBC and the BBG. I know that they used to come along and wrap our knuckles and we would accept that and then they would come and enjoy themselves with us. Perhaps it wasn't a good idea from a regulatory standpoint—I have no comment on that. The fact is that if there wasn't a "honeymoon", there was a closer relationship between the broadcasters and the government body than there appears to be at this time.

The Chairman: Well, you say in your brief that you say:

"Change enforced by regulation is the enemy of spontaneity and variety and the friend of dull-gray uniformity. Though motivated by the best intentions in the world, we hold the view that no agency of government should assume the impossible task of legislating public taste or the content of radio programs."

Am I to conclude from that that you would argue that the content of the radio program should be left totally to the broadcasters themselves?

Mr. Hartford: Again, my own view—and we did talk about this earlier, the point being made by the Senator that if some station wanted to put four hours of mandarin music...

The Chairman: Cantonese.

Mr. Hartford: Cantonese or whatever if he wants to do it—I feel he should be allowed to do it. If he feels that he can get an audience and sell it, I think he should be allowed to do it; because when you get into a program area, it is quite a different thing when you start to suggest certain changes in program format. At the same time, we did go through that fully realizing what the CRTC was intending to do, and you can't condemn the fact that they would like to have more Canadian music played.

The Chairman: The other column that I wanted to ask you about was one which appeared in the Telegram last night by Bob Blackburn who is a television critic for the Telegram. His column is headed "Who's going to Bell the Cat?" The whole message is surely that some group of broadcasters are going to call the bluff of the CRTC and appeal what the CRTC is doing to the courts. So who will "bell the cat". Can you think of anyone who will "bell the cat"?

Mr. Hartford: Well, senator to use your expression "bell the cat" I don't think we could be associated with that, Senator.

The Chairman: Fine, I am delighted you couldn't be.

Mr. Hartford: When one has the authority to issue or cancel your license, I am sure that there is an inhibiting factor that newspapers and some other media don't have to contend with and this probably effects the thinking of some stations. I don't fully believe—I asked another station operator in the intermission—that many broadcasters, unless they are not running a very good station, really go to bed at night worried about the fact that they are going to lose their station tomorrow or lose their license. We certainly don't—it has to be an inhibiting factor however. I believe that we should have a regulatory body as well.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Blackburn said—if I could quote the end of the column—he says:

"So, it would seem, anyone who thinks the CRTC is exceeding its mandate and misinterpreting the existing broadcasting legislation should, as a matter of a public duty, challenge it in the courts. Perhaps that would lead to a clarification the CRTC would welcome."

Mr. Hartford: Well, one station has suggested doing that now—one station here in Ottawa.

The Chairman: Well, there are going to court, yes. That is CKPM.

Mr. Hartford: The CAB is considering such things but I don't know of individual operators. If they feel that the regulations reach the point that they become difficult to live with they can refer the matter to the courts. They have discussed this quite openly—it is no secret, but I don't think there has been any decision made on this.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Potts, SBN has this arrangement with NBC which also works in reverse. Have you any indication to what extent American stations use Canadian news?

Mr. Potts: I would think generally very little. I think we have made some inroads, definitely, over the past few years, but bear in mind that anything that is said over one NBC station, goes over all of them. They have no ability to reject a story, as our stations have the ability to reject any story which is not considered good. Once it gets on the NBC network, it goes coast to coast and we are getting increased coverage from Canada in the United States. You see fewer and fewer people coming up here with snowshoes in the summer time now.

Mr. Margles: If I might add one point. It is rather unfortunate that the majority of people south of the border are extremely ignorant of Canada. We even found that within the NBC organization at the outset of our association. We have broken down walls but then, once again what is news? So far as the American networks are concerned, and this applies to them all, it has to something like a Montreal police strike where you would get seven or eight reports in a day from Montreal and then Montreal is on the map for a day.

Mr. Fortier: Have you any record for example, as to how many NBC associates on October the 7th, used your broadcast?

Mr. Margles: Well, I am not too sure of their obligations but I believe they would all have used the reports because we know when we get the transmission back. We don't have any binding arrangements to use their news casts. We acquire a service. But in the United States it is the sale of a newscast to a station and presumably every station on the NBC uses those reports.

Mr. Potts: On the coverage of the Canadian election, for example, we set it up with NBC ahead of time that we would feed them things so that the Canadians visiting or ex-Canadians living in the States could hear the result of the Canadian election. When Mr. Diefenbaker went to the United States on his first visit with Kennedy we phoned them to say "You are pronouncing it "Diefenbacher", instead of "Diefenbaker" and so we corrected that. We have a little trouble in this regard you know, getting our names known in the United States but they will take remedial action immediately to try to correct something which affects us.

Mr. Margles: From time to time, Mr. Fortier, as well, Canadian government news does get aired on NBC—Mr. Lawrence of our Ottawa Bureau is here—I don't know how many reports they have done of late but I do know where it involved a controversy between Canada and the United States, of course, they become interested. The same thing applies when there is something of significance, for instance, during the 10th anniversary of the Seaway which was celebrated last year we saw a lot of coverage.

Mr. Fortier: Such important matters also as a date with the Prime Minister by a famous American citizen!

Mr. Margles: Yes.

The Chairman: Perhaps at this point I could terminate this discussion. Mr. Cran I would say to you and your colleagues, as has been mentioned here several times in the last few days, that I spent some few years in broadcasting and while I did, I could hardly lay claim to being a broadcaster. However, I was there long enough to realize, however, that in your industry, Standard Broadcasting, is certainly one of the "blue ribbon" operations. I would say that with no disrespect to your competitors or to other people in the industry who have been before us or who are yet to come before us—but I think in the discussion today you have maintained that high standard—with certainly no pun intended.

Your brief at Page 46, Paragraph 130 says:

"This spring, the industry is under inquiry by a Committee of the Senate and by the Department of Communications."

I don't take exception to the statement but I hope I can disagree. I don't believe the industry is under inquiry by a Committee of the Senate and I hope you don't. We are trying to take a broad look at the media spectrum and I suggest, as a former broadcaster, and having enough friends left in broadcasting to know, that you would have been infuriated if our study had presumed to analyse the overall media spectrum in Canada without a reference to broadcasting.

For our part we feel that our reference to broadcasting would not be totally in focus if we did not have you come before this Committee, so on behalf of the Committee thank you all.

May I say to the Senators that we are meeting this evening at 8 o'clock in this room.

Thank you very much. The meeting is adjourned.

Upon resuming at 8:00 o'clock p.m. on April 15, 1970.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, ladies and gentlemen. If I might call the session to order. This evening we are receiving a brief from the La Fédération Professionnelle des Journalistes du Québec. The President of the organization, Mr. Gilles Gariépy, is sitting on my immediate right. I think I will ask you, sir, before you do anything else to introduce the other members of your group who are here and I think we would be interested in their executive position in your organization and also perhaps in their professional occupation, that is their association with the media.

Unhappily for me at least, I have not seen the brief which you have prepared. I apologize that my French is not really adequate so I must work from a translation. I have a translation only of one document and I know you are presenting several, including a copy of the memoir to the Quebec Committee on Freedom of the Press.

I usually say to our witnesses that the Senators are familiar with the material presented but in this case although some may be I think most of us are not. I don't think it is an insurmountable handicap. What I would like you to do now, if you would, is perhaps make an opening statement of ten to fifteen minutes in which you are free to talk about the contents of your brief. If you would prefer to talk about other matters that would be acceptable as well. Then we would like to question you and the members of your delegation on the contents of your brief; we would like to question you on your oral comment and perhaps there may be additional matters as well that we would like to ask you about.

We are terribly grateful that you have come because yours is the kind of organization whose opinions the Committee values. We have had several similar Federations but we are particularly pleased that you have come. Thank you for coming. Why don't you just proceed?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Gariépy, Président, la Fédération professionnelle des journalistes du Québec: Thank you. I shall begin by introducing the members of the Executive I have with me. First we have Lysiane Gagnon, educational reporter for La Presse, who is Vice-President, Daily Newspapers of the Federation. In the middle, to my right, is Claude Piché of the CBC program, Présent, our Vice-President, Broadcasting, and Mr. Murray Maltais, arts editor of Le Droit and Regional Director for the Ottawa area. With him is our full-time Secretary, Mr. Louis Falardeau; immediately to my right, and our legal adviser, Mr. Serge Ménard.

I was sorry to learn that the material you have before you this evening was not sent sufficiently early to the members of the Committee, and we apologize for this. It might be said in our defence that, firstly, we are right in the middle of organizing our annual convention, and secondly, the Quebec election campaign for a number of us took up much of our free time. Having said that, we are providing you this evening with a few pages that define the scope and the meaning of this brief. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I shall read it—it is quite short.

La Fédération professionnelle des journalistes du Québec was founded in February, 1969 at a meeting attended by representatives of about twenty journalists' associations or unions in Quebec. The organizations affiliated to the Federation at that time had a combined membership of about 600 journalists.

The Federation is incorporated under Part III of the Quebec Companies Act. It is neither a union organization—though there are unions affiliated to it—nor a closed professional body designed to regulate the profession.

The Federation is essentially a tool for research and study and at the same time a representative body appointed by journalists' associations and unions to co-ordinate their efforts in areas of common professional interest.

The Federation is the practical successor to the old Canadian Union of French-language Journalists, although it differs from it in at least two respects: first, it is a Quebec body not a French Canadian one; secondly, its membership consists of organizations, not individuals.

The Federation was the product of an awareness in journalistic circles of their collective inability to confront changes that present new challenges for the profession as a whole. Among these changes we could cite the concentration of ownership in both the written and the spoken press; the entry of universities and colleges into the training of journalists and communication experts; the feeling that some legislation affecting the press should be reviewed; the growing sup port for the idea of a press council; and developments in the information media generally.

Not let us consider the aim of this brief. We are aware that the terms of reference of this Special Senate Committee are broad, and we know that the Committee is interested in all problems affecting the press. We would have liked to be able to submit a very comprehensive brief covering all the issues that concern us in our work. Unfortunately, this was not possible at this particular time, because the Federation has not been in existence very long and has had to devote all its energies to consideration of a few specific problems.

With regard to concentration of ownership, we have already prepared a brief; it was presented to the National Assembly's Committee on press freedom in Quebec City last September, and we have appended a copy of it to the brief.

We decided to limit our remarks and recommendations before the Senate Committee to a single field—relations between journalists and the courts, or police authorities. This is a problem that has arisen with disturbing frequency and severity in Quebec in recent years, particularly during 1969. We have made representations to the Quebec Justice Department on this point, and we intend to renew these representations in the near future. However, we believe that the problem concerns more than just the application of the law, and that it casts doubt on the validity of some legislation—the relevant federal Acts, in particular. We are therefore submitting to you today a file containing the facts in support of our position, together with a number of specific recommendations.

In accordance with the rules and regulations of our organization, we have been authorized by the representatives of our member associations to speak on behalf of the Federation in making these recommendations. Here I should point out that since we are a federation of duly constituted bodies, we are quite severely restricted in the representations we can make to third parties. We can speak on behalf of Quebec journalists only on those matters concerning which we have received a clear mandate from our annual convention. Without such a mandate, we cannot make any declaration binding on the Federation until we have submitted a draft of it to the representatives of our association, and we must consult them before making it public. This is what we have done in this case. We also did this for the brief we submitted to the National Assembly committee.

And so, Mr. Chairman, it is principally this specific legal problem that we should like to discuss with you this evening, and we have appended the brief on concentration of ownership in the press industry. We put it in the appendix not because the problem has lost its importance or its immediacy, but simply because our position on it has not varied in its essentials; it is a position we have already expressed. The new matter we have to discuss is, we feel, more important at this particular time—I refer to the legal problem surrounding our relations with the police and the courts. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I shall ask my Vice-President, Lysiane Gagnon, to begin with a short summary of the source of our concern.

Mrs. Lysiane Gagnon, Vice-President, La Fédération professionnelle des journalistes du Québec: With regard to the facts you will find in the appendix to our brief, which are all related to dealings that Quebec journalists, particularly in Montreal, have had during the last two years with police or judicial authorities, always in connection with events or demonstrations of a political or quasi-political nature, or union disputes—with regard to all these, five kinds of problem have been distinguished.

Firstly, insofar as professional secrecy is concerned, it has not happened very often, but it can happen—and there was at least one fairly blatant case of it last year—that journalists are forced to reveal their privileged sources of information to the courts or to commissions of inquiry.

The second type of problem: sometimes, while in the very act of reporting, that is, of exercising their profession, journalists are subjected to police brutality, and this can on occasion go as far as detention without explanation. This has happened—specific cases of this kind of police intervention are reported in our appendix. We have selected only those cases in which the police were well aware that the people involved were journalists, photographers or cameramen. These were not accidents in the midst of a scuffle, but deliberate intervention by the police.

The third type of problem: sometimes, with or without a warrant, the police obtain news material belonging to journalists—tapes, films or photographs—in order to use it for their own investigations or to gather evidence for the Crown in trials that are often held at a later date. And it is then that the problem becomes rather more serious. This is unpublished or undistributed material, such as photographs that have been taken but not published, or tapes that have been edited, or edited films. The police then seize the parts that have been cut—in other words, the unpublished news material.

The fourth type of problem: in order that such material may be identified in court, so that it can be admitted as Crown evidence, journalists—especially cameramen, photographers and radio or television reporters—are sometimes forced to appear in court as witnesses for the prosecution.

The fifth problem is related—the abuses, also noted in the appendix, that surround the accrediting of journalists. These journalists are called in to cover certain demonstrations or important political conventions. First, the police reserve the right to seize a reporter's identity card without giving any reason. Again, it sometimes happens that police officers are duly identified as journalists. There was a case of this fairly recently at Harrison Hot Springs, where R.C.M.P. officers were identified as journalists at the request of the hotel concerned.

I have merely given you a very brief description of the five types of problem we have tackled and sought to analyse. Individual cases are given in the appendix to our brief.

Mr. Gariépy: If I might interrupt briefly before handing over to our legal adviser—the growing number of such incidents has caused concern among journalists in Quebec, especially in Montreal. More or less concealed at first, this concern is becoming more and more apparent since, as a result of being summoned into court to testify for the prosecution against demonstrators, strikers and informants to whom they have promised absolute secrecy, journalists are in the process—it has already begun, unfortunately—of losing their credibility with the public, something they have and must retain in order to carry out their work. For example, if a picket line is set up, it is normal for reporters from the print and broadcast media to be in attendance in order to inform the public of what is going on. Of course, if we are seen as journalists, as assistants—voluntary or not—then it does not greatly matter; but if we are regarded as assisting the courts or the police, if people learn that the photographs that are taken are used to identify demonstrators, when anything that is told us in confidence or otherwise can be revealed on the pain of being found in contempt of court, it is clear that the growing frequency of such cases tends to compromise journalists' reputation for independence and objectivity. Last September, for example, we submitted a declaration by the Executive to the Quebec Minister of Justice, Mr. Rémi Paul, asking him to do all in his power to bring such practices to an end—particularly the use of journalists' testimony, which is often useless anyway, in trials where the police should really be doing their work themselves. With regard to the seizure of news material, it is even more serious, as Lysiane Gagnon has said, when the material in question has not even been released. Following this public declaration, we were received by the Quebec Justice Minister last October, and we described the various aspects of the problem to him. He agreed with us that there really was a problem and that we should investigate it thoroughly. Mr. Paul asked us to prepare a file on the facts pertaining to our remarks, and he also suggested that since the legislation in question was not solely under provincial jurisdiction but was in most cases under federal jurisdiction, we should make representations both in Quebec City and in Ottawa. As you know present circumstances make it impossible for us to meet the Minister of Justice or other Quebec politicians, and we are therefore postponing the representations we had initiated to the Quebec Government. However, in the light of this Committee's hearings here, we believe that the problem that concerns journalists most, and exemplifies best the curious non-recognition that society extends to them is indeed the problem that has just been explained to you.

Consequently, after a great many meetings of our Executive and with representatives of our associations, we are today submitting a few recommendations. Naturally we are not about to draft a bill—we are not legislators—but we nevertheless wish to inform you of what we feel are the objectives to be reached in order to preserve effective freedom of the press.

In that connection, I should like to ask Mr. Serge Ménard to explain briefly the Executive recommendations.

Mr. Serge Ménard, Legal Adviser, la Fédération professionnelle des journalistes du Québec: You will note that the first suggestion tion in our brief is that public bodies be made aware of the problems of the press. We believe that Canadian jurisprudence offers evidence that the rights for which we seek legislative recognition have long been recognized in practice by the various public bodies. But after all, it is the growing incidence of non-recognition of these rights in Quebec in recent years that leads us to believe that the best protection for these rights—which the Canadian public, through its journalists, has always enjoyed—would be statutory recognition. We did think of suggesting specific laws to you, and we thought there were three kinds of suggestion we could make on this point: a law governing the press and containing provisions to protect journalistic secrecy and limit the right of seizure of news material; or amendments to the existing laws, either the Criminal Code or the Evidence Act. We could have come before you with specific texts, but we thought it much more important on this occasion to present the principles that guide us and avoid discussions of solutions that might be less than perfect, so as to leave to the legislators the job of enacting laws to recognize the principles we wished to outline today.

In essence, we feel that the choice confronting the Canadian public is as follows: the systematic use of journalists to supply Crown evidence will inevitably lead, in my opinion, to journalists' being identified with the police structure. Obviously, one could always say in reply that it would be ridiculous to have a situation where everyone had been made aware of certain misdeeds through the journalists, but proving them before the courts was not possible because journalists had the right to refuse to testify as to their sources. We feel this is a false objection because if journalists are now able to obtain information that enforcement agencies cannot obtain, the reason is that they enjoy a certain confidence that such agencies do not. If, as time goes by, they become identified with enforcement agencies, they will lose that position of trust. Ultimately, we will have crimes that people do not know about instead of crimes of which they are aware. We feel that the present situation in which crimes are known but cannot be punished is preferable in the long run to having crimes of which people are not aware, and which could not therefore be punished either.

The three provisions we suggest are that the journalist's right to professional secrecy be recognized in the law of Canada. I do not think there is any such recognition in legislation, though I think professional secrecy is recognized in jurisprudence. I think the only secrecy recognized in legislation is with regard to certain offences between husband and wife. New legislation would obviously be required, but this is something that has been recognized in jurisprudence for lawyers, at least, in a way that leaves no room for dispute, and in a way that is a little more disputable, or rather disputed, for confessors. This would be new legislation, then, and it could either be part of an Act covering all the problems of the press, forming a section devoted to this particular problem, or be tacked on to those sections of the Evidence Act that concern witnesses.

There could also be a section covering search warrants, either in an Act covering the press or added to the Criminal Code sections respecting searches. I would draw your attention to the fact that the Criminal Code has always distinguished between objects that are used in the commission of a criminal act and those that are used in evidence. This distinction is already established in the Criminal Code—for example, if it is not stated in their warrant, police officers cannot seize objects to be used as evidence of a crime. It is obvious, at present, that journalistic material falls into the latter category, concerning which the law already requires a more complex procedure. We believe that in the case of journalistic material, the procedure should be even more complex. We have thought of a number of procedures, once again, but we do not wish to discuss solutions here—we wish rather to discuss the objectives and principles that lead us to propose such solutions. However, there would obviously be some difficulties to begin with in defining "journalistic material", especially with respect to its origin. We believe that this is probably the direction in which a solution should be sought, since I believe there is legislation providing for the registration of newspapers that could be made available to the magistrates who have the power to issue warrants.

We have suggested measures with respect to journalistic material, and here again, I think there are two sides to the problem. The police can use journalistic material out of laziness, since it is easier to use journalists paid by press enterprises, who will be covering events in any case, than to send one's own spies. I feel that in such a case, it is certainly preferable that the police pay their own informants, and that journalists be completely free to do their work. After all, that is not a journalist's job. I feel that the problem arises only where journalists obtain information that police officers cannot obtain, and it is here, I think, that we meet the first problem of professional secrecy that we referred to earlier, and it is the same principle and the same choice confronting society. We feel that in the final analysis it is a choice that does not arise; it may do so in the short term, but in the long term, it does not, because we are eventually going to have a society that will not be able to combat more crimes than before, and will also be uninformed of them. I am now ready for your questions, particularly regarding the solutions that have occurred to us.

Mr. Gariépy: To conclude, gentlemen, you undoubtedly will have noticed that our recommendations concern only the problem we referred to, the legal problem that journalists have to deal with. We are naturally open to any questions you wish to ask regarding the Federation's function, its constitution, its membership and the work it has accomplished in its first year. We are also open to questions on the substance of the brief we submitted to the Quebec National Assembly Committee, or on our participation in the press council proposal on which I believe you have already heard the views of Quebec press employers' associations. Nevertheless, with you, we would like to have the most candid explanation possible of the specific problem we have raised.

[Text]

The Chairman: You would like our discussion to centre primarily on the matters you have dealt with tonight but you will accept questions on other matters as well. I think that is fair. Mr. Fortier.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As Mr. Ménard was saying a few minutes ago—this forum is definitely better suited to a discussion of objectives and principles than to a legal debate—I am grateful that no formal text has been submitted. I shall direct my questions to Mr. Gariépy as President, but you may, if you wish, ask one of your colleagues to answer.

I shall take up your invitation and begin by considering your brief, "Journalists and the Administration of Justice". Again, as Mr. Ménard said a few minutes ago, I think the substance of your recommendations may be summed up as follows: journalists should enjoy special status before the courts—is that correct?

Mr. Gariépy: That is an essential part of what we are asking, yes.

Mr. Ménard: We feel that there has long been such a special status before the courts—perhaps not before the courts, but at least in the minds of public bodies with the power to summon journalists before the courts.

Mr. Fortier: As you say in your brief, it is only recently that events have occurred, particularly in Quebec, that have led you to make the representations that you have summarized for us today, is that not so? How do you explain the fact that until a few months—or perhaps years—ago, the problem had never arisen, at least in your experience and that of your colleagues?

Mr. Gariépy: There certainly is an explanation; I shall attempt to give it, and my colleagues will add their comments. Firstly, the social climate was not the same. It is obvious that the problems we have raised are real. They arise more often during a mass demonstration than during a peaceful indoor meeting of an association, or a conference, where everything is always very quiet. When the social climate is more peaceful, and there is no alarm among the police or among those responsible for the administration of justice, there is certainly an effort to grant more respect to the gentlemen's agreement with the press; in other words, there will not be frequent visits to newspaper offices for photographs taken by press photographers, complete negatives and so on. The police will try to do their own work. If problems arise at the scene of a demonstration or a strike, and people are committing offences, well, if the police arrest people they should normally find their own sources of evidence. Obviously, the social climate has changed on the labour, educational and political fronts, and in a number of other areas we have seen rather more troubled situations in recent years, and in response to these, we have seen growing use—by the police in their investigations and those responsible for the administration of justice who summon people to court—of materials belonging to journalists, their work, their testimony and their confidential information.

Mr. Claude Piché, Vice-Président, La Fédération Professionnelle des Journalistes du Québec: With your permission, perhaps we can draw a parallel with the situation in the United States, and consider the social aspects of public demonstrations. A few weeks ago in the United States, we heard the national Vice-President of the NBC news network and the publisher of the New York Times complaining that the police were seizing both published and unpublished material. In that sense, I believe there is a parallel to be drawn between what they were talking about in the United States and the situation in Quebec, and one of the causes, obviously, is the use of public demonstration techniques.

Mr. Fortier: About two or three weeks ago we had before us the national editor of the Washington Post, a journalist from the United States, who spoke to us on this topic. His personal opinion was that the journalistic privilege of professional secrecy should not be sanctioned by law. This would make the journalist indebted to the State for the privilege which the State has conferred upon him.

The journalist voiced the opinion that he would prefer that the individual, the journalist decides for himself, in each particular case, whether or not to run the risk of being sentenced for contempt of court; or, in the case of the owner of the newspaper being subpoenaed, let him decide whether or not to reply to the police officer's polite or impolite invitation and, if he fails to do so, likewise run the risk of being sentenced for contempt of court. Do you have any comments to make on the matter?

Mr. Gariépy: This is an opinion which does not surprise me at all because about two years ago in journalistic circles in Quebec, it was quite widely held and expounded in writing, over television, in panel discussions and so forth. There is a tendency to react when isolated cases spring up, when it becomes a system, and when protest seems to be of little use. People are beginning to feel that basing an important aspect of freedom of the press on the heroism of individuals on occasion, is not a satisfactory solution. We believe that the matter of the professional secret, or the journalist's privilege to conceal either his information sources or the confidential portion of a given piece of information, the source of which may be known, is one problem, but not necessarily the most frequent one. Among the most frequent problems which crop up there is, for example, the use made of the evidence given by the journalists. To take an example—there are many quoted in the appendix—a politician before 2,000 persons in a public hall makes statements which later are considered to be seditious; if, during the same meeting, there are 20 police officers in uniform in the hall and some half-dozen plain-clothes men, do you feel it conceivable that in order to bring evidence against the accused it is necessary to summon journalists before the Court?

Mr. Fortier: This is a specific case presently being debated.

Mr. Gariépy: However, when these problems do not arise, there is a tendency to believe that protection or special privilege is not necessary. When they do crop up, one wonders, even after a campaign to arouse public feeling, whether the danger is still there. Taking into account the importance of freedom of the press, recognized, I believe, by the Canadian Bill of Rights, we see no objection in principle to the adoption of very definite provisions for preventing the credibility or freedom of movement of the journalists being compromised by any use which the courts may make of their evidence.

Mr. Ménard: There is perhaps one answer which one could add to the opinion of the Washington journalist. I have the impression that it is not so much a journalist's opinion, but rather an opinion of penal philosophy, if I may put it in these words.

Mr. Fortier: Believe me, he criticized the attitude of the police officers without reservation.

Mr. Ménard: To recognize that professional secrecy for journalists is a desirable thing and not to legally sanction it and, as a result, leave it up to people—I feel that the state prisons should not be places where people must display their heroism; they must show it elsewhere than in the state prisons. How should we feel about a society which states: "We agree that secrecy is important and that there are some people who must recognize this fact and defend it, but we hope that such persons will have the courage to defend it even in the face of possible imprisonment." There seems to me to be a contradiction there.

Mr. Fortier: I follow your reasoning and shall not engage in polemics on this particular point, but I should like to return to one of Mr. Gariépy's comments. Obviously, I am something of the devil's advocate—this is my role here. If we create this privilege to meet a very definite, very particular situation which is just now developing, do you not feel that the solution may become more drastic than the problem itself?

Mr. Gariépy: Discussing in abstracts like that, one could believe that yes, it may, or, it may not. I feel that in practice, when we attempt to determine what the requested type of protection or legal recognition may mean, I do not feel that it will lead to abuses. If you will allow me to cite one example: journalists themselves state, or have often stated, when speaking of protecting the professional secret, that if one is authorized not to disclose one's sources of information, there will be terrible abuses. Any sort of news would be invented. An unscrupulous journalist would concoct any piece of news and once brought before the courts could simply state: "Ah, professional secret."

It is felt—and Mr. Ménard can clarify this point—that such a problem does not arise. For example, it is felt that if a journalist writes something clearly defamatory and, when prosecuted, hides behind his professional secret, he will simply be sentenced. He will not have proven the truth of his information, and will not have proven it to the satisfaction of the Court.

We therefore feel that it is sufficient protection. It will be noted that even in a situation perhaps less volatile than the one we have now in Quebec but one which is found throughout the continent if not the world in a quieter period, such problems arise less often, but do, nevertheless arise, and each time there is a lack of legal arguments and definite knowledge. It is our opinion that what is said in confidence to a journalist by anyone whatsoever presupposes that the person identified as a journalist has expressly agreed not to divulge the identity of his informant and to keep his information confidential. If such a promise of confidence has been given, we feel it normal, whatever disadvantages it may cause in gathering evidence against the accused. We believe, as our lawyer has explained, that over the long term it is a better way for society to protect itself and remain informed.

Let us overlook the protests, if you will, to take an example which could occur during any peaceful period. Let us suppose that in a given City Council, a civil servant continually points to flagrant cases of corruption among certain politicians. Through a sense of civic duty, the official puts a journalist on the track, informs him of certain incidents of corruption or the squandering of public funds. The civil servant risks his job, of course, but does not consider that he will be compromised in the trial. Now if the journalist can promise that no-one will know his identity, that the journalist will examine his photostat copies and so forth and denounce a situation publicly in the newspaper, then the official concerned will likely give him his information. If the journalist cannot guarantee this, and, as frequently happens, the journalists are forced by the courts to break their promises and disclose the names of their informants, it is obvious that this type of information given by informants, will disappear.

We feel that in a democratic society, the citizen's right to information is an important principle of justice and a social duty of primary importance. I feel that the dilemma suggested by our legal advisor as a long-term possibility is the only way of looking at the matter.

Mr. Fortier: On the other hand, you will agree with me that the example you give is precisely one in which an abuse may occur, that is, the government employee who wishes to attack a councillor, an alderman or a mayor. He may suggest an item of news to a journalist who does not take the trouble to verify it, and the news is published. Obviously, some people could be wronged very seriously.

Mr. Gariépy: If some persons are wronged, they can sue the newspaper and journalist for libel.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, of course.

Mr. Gariépy: Then, if it is not true, what evidence can the journalist give to defend himself?

Mr. Fortier: I shall reply to your question. The journalist is called upon to give evidence and states: "Someone gave me the information, but I refuse to divulge his name." Could this not be the case?

Mr. Gariépy: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Then, what happens at this point?

Mr. Menard: Well, we believe that such a situation will not crop up as one must understand the limit of what we are asking. We are also aware, in coming here, of the respective jurisdictions of the federal and provincial government.

We feel that the second problem you raise is a problem of civil law, a problem of private rights which comes under provincial jurisdiction. That it to say, the politician injured through some false accusation spread through a journalist, will seek action against him; he will have recourse to civil law.

Mr. Fortier: There will be penal recourse, as well?

Mr. Ménard: He will also have penal recourse for defamatory libel. We are not requesting protection up to that point—just to the point that the journalist is accused of libel. As we made very clear, we are obviously not requesting protection which may lead to the sentencing of an innocent person.

Mr. Fortier: Then, please answer my question. What happens at that point? Let us suppose that the mayor is accused unjustly, as he feels, and prosecutes the journalist in question for defamatory libel under the Criminal Code. I feel that we must limit ourselves to definite cases. This is what you suggested, anyway.

Mr. Gariépy: It is the journalist who loses, because he has no proof.

Mr. Fortier: Under the Criminal Code, the owner of the newspaper as well?

Mr. Gariépy: Yes, but publishing information within a newspaper is an integrated activity. In other words, to my knowledge it is fairly uncommon in a press company for the reporter to be able to publish anything at all, just like that, without the supervision of the management.

Mr. Fortier: You knew it and I knew it as well.

Mr. Gariépy: In any event, the fact remains that whether it is the organization or the editorial rooms which publish it, obviously the journalist signing the article and the company itself are both partly responsible. In such cases, we feel that the best protection against possible abuses lies precisely in the fact that the journalist has no evidence to present in support of his allegations or statements. Under civil and, possibly, criminal law, he will be sentenced for gratuitous and defamatory statements.

Mr. Fortier: But have we not made a complete circle? The journalist you would wish to protect will possibly be sentenced for defamatory libel because he will not divulge the source of his information?

Mr. Ménard: He will have published the news solely on the word of this source. We feel that in ordinary newspaper work, all that the journalist wishes to protect is the source, which will enable him to obtain the proof of what he publishes.

If the journalist lacks professional integrity and bases his article solely on what could be hearsay from a government official wishing to remain anonymous, and then publishes libel, he must bear the full force of the law. Do not forget that in a libel suit, if the journalist decides to exercise his privilege, the only evidence which will remain before the court will be the evidence that he published an item of news, apparently without foundation, injurious to a person, for which he is to be sentenced.

We feel that the journalist should undertake his own defence as he does normally in public, by producing the evidence he has obtained of the action for which he reproaches the politician in question and he may still protect his source, or the person who put him on the track.

Mr. Fortier: I would suggest that you have just introduced another related problem, essential to the suggestion you have just made, a problem you touched on, moreover, in the brief you presented to the National Assembly. The journalist should have a thorough professional training before the state confers this privilege upon him. Do you agree with me?

Mr. Ménard: We are also convinced that if the journalist does not have this advanced training, he is in danger of being sentenced. As we have seen, if a journalist is well grounded in his profession, it is most probable that if a scandal is divulged to him, before revealing it to the general public, he will seek to obtain independent proof which he may present to the public. At this point, what the journalist seeks to protect is the person who enabled him to obtain such independent evidence.

Mr. Fortier: And whose identity he cannot disclose?

Mr. Ménard: Exactly, because he has obtained the information under the seal of secrecy. However, if the journalist does not have this training, he will lose his libel suit because he will be unable to present independent evidence of what he advanced.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Ménard, I know that Mrs. Gagnon would like to speak, but I wish to add just one more comment. Do you believe that a law which would recognize professional secrecy—or rather, let me phrase it in another manner—which did not recognize professional secrecy, would force the journalist to delve further into the truth or falsity of a rumour? This is the question I am raising. Now, if he enjoys this immunity, he will say up to a certain point: “I can write what I want and no one can prosecute me.”

Mr. Ménard: On the contrary.

The Chairman: I think Madame Gagnon wanted to say something. I think also you want to say something, the three of you!

[Translation]

Mrs. Lysiane Gagnon, Vice-President, The Professional Federation of Journalists of Quebec: It is simply a parenthesis. Mr. Fortier, you spoke of the privilege granted to journalists and you also quoted the editor of the Washington Post as saying that the journalist was indebted to the state for this privilege. I feel that it must be regarded not as a privilege, but merely as a kind of instrument that a community can bestow upon itself in order to be sure of being better and more fully informed, since it obviously goes without saying that the journalist, as a citizen, has the same rights and duties as other citizens. It applies only to the exercise of his professional functions, and I imagine that any legislation in this field would call for a definition of what the exercise of a journalist's functions involves. In this case, the journalist is simply a communicator of information, a connecting device—and I do not think we should look upon this as a privilege granted to a class of people, or an individual, or a profession.

Mr. Fortier: You will agree with me that it is difficult to avoid the word “privilege” in this context?

Mr. Gariépy: Well, if you want to speak of a privilege, at least acknowledge that it is one granted not so much to the journalist as to his informant—the privilege of not being named, of remaining anonymous, because after all, if it were merely a question of protecting the peace of mind of a journalist who does not wish to be put to the trouble of a court appearance, then it would not be worth all the fuss that is being made.

Ultimately, it is for his ability to acquire information that the journalist seeks protection. This is in the public interest, and in the interest of those who inform him. So clearly, the case of the journalist who goes to court and is forced to reveal a name or identify the author of confidential information, though typical, is not necessarily the most frequent. There are other instances that bring out the same problem, but in a different way. For example, you are sent to cover some event, you take some pictures, and if you are working for the written press, you fill up notebooks and you write an article, after making the most honest judgment of what you have seen and, as happens fairly often, after comparing your impressions with those of your colleagues. Then you print a report, and if arrests have been made, you are summoned to court to identify this or that person, and confirm that you wrote such-and-such, and so on, and you are officially instructed to “bring your notebooks with you” and the like. The journalist's reaction, therefore, when this sort of thing becomes frequent, is not to take any more notes, and to destroy his negatives.

Mr. Fortier: They can be destroyed very quickly.

Mr. Gariépy: Yes indeed. So you see, when you reach that stage, you no longer dare to publish anything that might imply that “perhaps...”, and the result is incomplete news. This is a perfectly understandable tendency and if you co-operate fully, if you play along with the system: “Here, gentlemen, here are all our films, tapes and manuscripts”—and identify people—than you are “persona non grata” at the next demonstration, the demonstration is not reported, and the public does not know what is going on.

No facts are given in the file, because we do not wish to complain about physical danger. But I would, nevertheless, like to point out that during the last year, a large number of journalists have been injured—some of them seriously—while exercising their profession in Montreal.

The Chairman: Mr. Ménard?

Mr. Ménard: One thing we wanted to make quite clear is the limits of what we want. We are not asking for professional secrecy as means whereby a journalist can defend himself against an accusation made against him. Ultimately, the person we seek to protect is not the journalist, but his informant, and we were very careful in our brief not to state that we wanted the right to professional secrecy as a privilege we could claim if accused of libel, or that we could claim in a civil matter of a libel suit—that is not what we are after at all. To put it simply, what journalists wish to claim is the right for which we feel they have always had “de facto” recognition, that of not revealing the source of information obtained in confidence. We also feel that in the past, the confidence placed in journalists has made it possible to expose many scandals, thus enabling the wheels of justice to turn and punish a number of crimes, or at least discover them.

Mr. Fortier: If professional secrecy is recognized, say, in a federal statute such as the Criminal Code, I think you will agree with me that even in the civil courts, it will be bound to be recognized too? We must be logical, must we not?

Mr. Ménard: To the extent that the civil courts apply the Evidence Act.

Mr. Fortier: Even where there is no question of applying federal legislation, I think, you either recognize secrecy or you do not. I think Mr. Gariépy agrees with me.

Mr. Gariépy: I agree. We intend to make specific approaches, at least to the Government of Quebec, with respect to matters under its jurisdiction.

[Text]

The Chairman: For some time now Senator Hays has wanted to ask a question. Senator Hays.

Senator Hays: I have heard a great deal tonight about “Mr. Source” and the information that you get from these people. Do you buy it or is there a warm friendship between the person, the source?

[Translation]

Mr. Gariépy: Speaking for myself, to the best of my personal knowledge, I have never bought information. It is possible that such things do happen. I don't think reporters do it, as they certainly do not have large enough personal budgets to enable them to buy information. You would have to look into the practices of the press industry at the national level, something with which I am not familiar.

There may be some instances in which newspapers buy information of that kind. It is also possible for ties of friendship to bind a journalist to a civil servant or a person in a position to supply him with information in private. But from personal experience, I would say that I have used confidential information, and a number of my colleagues often do so as well. In most cases, money is not involved; nor is there any question of doing a journalist a favour in return for something—friendship or special treatment. The people involved generally have a genuine concern for the public interest.

I do not have a lifetime of experience as a reporter; I have been one for seven or eight years, and from what I have seen, this is the kind of motive most often encountered.

[Text]

Senator Hays: Do I understand that you get this information and then you publish it because if there is a secret between you and the source; nobody knows about it until you publish it and then having published it the police want to know where you got this information. Is that correct?

[Translation]

Mr. Gariépy: It can happen in that way, but the fact remains that we do not automatically publish everything that unknown callers tell us over the telephone. When serious information, accompanied by supporting documents or photocopies or precise evidence, is submitted to us in exchange for secrecy as to its source, and when the documents we receive, in addition to our own investigation, give us reason to believe that the facts of the case are absolutely authentic, then we can certainly publish it. I have never personally been summoned to court to explain the source of such documents—never. However, this has happened to others, and I therefore feel it might well happen to me, and if this were to continue, or even if it were to occur as often as it did last year, it would be only fair for me to warn people who give me information that I am prepared to say nothing, but that I cannot prevent the issuing of a search warrant, nor my being dragged before the courts and forced to reveal my source.

[Text]

Senator Hays: So you did not publish it? You did not publish this particular...

[Translation]

Mr. Gariepy: Yes, there have been cases in which I have written copy based on such information.

[Text]

Senator Hays: I cannot understand newspaper men keeping secrets. This is a new twist to me.

[Translation]

Mr. Gariepy: I may have misunderstood your question to begin with. Do you mean keeping information confidential, or keeping a source confidential?

[Text]

Senator Hays: I would like to hear an example.

[Translation]

Mr. Piche: You must have heard about the case of John Smith, who is freelance reporter for the English CBC network, and who interviewed someone who said he was connected with a terrorist movement in Quebec. The Fire Commissioner asked Mr. Smith to appear in court, but the latter refused to testify or reveal his source of information, i.e. the name of the man, even though the matter, or the interview, had not been aired over the CBC. For refusing to testify, John Smith was sentenced to seven days in prison by the Fire Commissioner, and all because he promised the man he would not reveal his name in order to get the interview. That was the condition for obtaining the interview—not to reveal his name.

[Text]

Senator Hays: In the meantime he might have killed 50 people or something.

Mr. Ménard: A case like this I think is a good illustration. I can use this case as an illustration of what I was saying before. What would you have if you didn't allow John Smith to have professional secrecy? You would know about the terrorist camp anyway so is it preferable to know but not to be able to do anything because the only witness is John Smith? Is it preferable not to know about it and not to be able to do anything about it?

I think that is the choice we have. I think it is preferable to have a situation where at least we know about it and we cannot do anything for the moment but I think if we do not preserve this secret of John Smith in a case like that, in about six months John Smith will be unable to obtain other information like this and we won't be able to stop that person from killing fifty or more persons. Maybe we will be able to organize something.

Senator Sparrow: Should this privilege be extended to every citizen? Why just news men? Why not every citizen?

Mr. Gariepy: The reason is simply because in practice, there is a difference between someone who may accidentally be a witness to something and who has a duty to co-operate with the law, and a reporter who by virtue of his profession, frequently finds himself in this kind of situation.

I realize that in theory,—I know that the basic philosophy behind existing legislation is that, in the final analysis, the reporter is simply an extension of the right of the people to the freedom of speech, the freedom of witness, to learn the facts, and so on. However, this is not how it works in practice. In practice, it is the reporters who go to the scene of the demonstrations and who go to the press conferences where certain things are said. It is to the reporters that confidential documents are handed over, and information given, in exchange for the promise of secrecy. This is how it works in practice.

Thus, it does make a difference, and remember one thing: we are talking about a reporter on the job. That is to say, for example, that if I were to go into a bar after working hours and a murder was committed there, I would have the right to remain silent about what I had seen because I was a reporter. And if, on the other hand, I were assigned by a newspaper or a broadcasting company to cover certain activities or events which were open to the public, and which even the police had access to, as is often the case, I think that if the reporter's testimony were used—once just once every hundred years, that would not make any difference—but frequently, the people would get the impression that reporters were an extension of the law and order forces, and as a result, they would lose their credibility as observers.

It is worth noting, I think, that this reciprocal exchange is very significant with regard to private interviews. But remember—in an open demonstration or street brawl, both the police and the demonstrators—it is happened over and over again—leave the reporters to do their work of taking pictures, making observations, and so forth.

If we were to become identified with those who are going to appear in Court the following morning, with our photographs, notebooks and so on, we would cease to be independent observers and would become known, if you like, under the same name as those whose duty it is to keep law and order. The same thing would happen in all circumstances and this is important, not from any sympathy on our part for the demonstrators; we have nothing to protect on that account. The same goes for the police. If for example, the photographs taken by press photographers, the film shot by cameramen and the notes written by journalists were to be used in disciplinary action by the law enforcement in order to sentence agents who might have exaggerated, our reputation would be finished as far as those agents are concerned.

As I understand it, you were asking; "Why just the journalists and not the others?" In theory, reporters are citizens just like everyone else, and for several hours a day, that is what they are. However, in the course of their work, due to the frequency of situations or elements in which they may be implicated, they need to retain their independence, that is to have freedom of movement and the greatest amount of credibility possible, in order to be able to inform the public—which is a social function of primary importance in a democracy.

The Chairman: Do you want to comment on this, Mr. Piché?

Mr. Piché: It happens practically every day—it is part of a reporter's work—to ask for or gain the confidence of someone.

Let's take a concrete example which does not have any criminal implications: if I were to write an article on this Committee, I would come to you for background information on the work of the Committee, outside these open meetings, and ask you to speak in confidence. There are things that you could tell me off the record, that you could tell me by saying...

The Chairman: I can't imagine what.

Mr. Piché: It is part of the journalist's daily work to go out and get information by asking people to speak in confidence, and by promising that if they do not wish to be quoted, they won't be—and it could happen, by accident, that this would include criminal acts.

Mr. Fortier: That depends on how much you offer the Senators!

Senator Sparrow: If this in fact is a point where you can prevent further crime, as an example, or dig out crime as such and it is useful to assist, why then are you objecting to this privilege being extended to all citizens? Would you object to that?

Mr. Gariépy: I would have to see what form this would take in practice, and in what circumstances and under what conditions people who had given confidential information would be prepared to go to Court. But unless I am mistaken, the police usually have their own informants, individuals who are rarely brought to Court—and this practice is not according to the law, but it happens. The police, for example, in order to get certain information, sometimes make those persons talk who are implicated in the matter themselves, and they use this information, if not as evidence in Court, at least as an instrument in the police investigation. It is obvious that if these informants were required to appear in Court and identify themselves—for those who had betrayed their gangs, etc.—each time,—well, no one would want to be a police informant any more. Thus, in actuality, without legal protection—the comparison is very shaky, I admit, but it may already exist.

Now, you are asking if we would object to similar privileges being accorded to journalists if they were extended to all citizens. My answer: I would have to see what kind of a privilege could be offered in this manner, under what conditions and so forth. In theory we have no great objection. We do not wish to be distinguished from other citizens—not to that extent. What we are after is not something for ourselves, but rather something which will enable us to inform society about what is happening and how it is happening.

Chairman: Mr. Ménard?

Mr. Ménard: We are not asking that this privilege be extended to the entire population because we feel that the population would not be any better informed for it—that is, I think there would be no advantage in it for the public in general, while we are convinced that in the past, the fact that the reporter's right to obtain information in confidence was recognized in practice, by not summoning them to Court, enabled them to get information which otherwise would have been inaccessible. I do not think that extending this privilege to the general public will enable them to be more informed on things they do not already know.

Senator Hays: A lot of them are anonymous calls. People phone up and say: "There is a bomb on an airplane". Sometimes there is and sometimes there isn't. I appreciate your point but I think you labour it pretty hard. The source that you get information from, all newspapers—you can pick them up and they say "from a reliable source", and then they write a story on it. Probably they have received the information from a reliable source but they never disclose it.

Mr. Ménard: We don't want professional secrecy as a defence against a libel suit. If actually the newspaper is using this supposedly reliable source to discredit somebody that feels hurt in some way we are not asking the journalist can use his professional secrecy and say: "I got it from a reliable source". Any journalist who takes this position should bear the consequences. What we are trying to protect is an individual like John Smith who obtains some information that we feel is in the best interest of the public to know, and we think that if he obtained this information it is because he in practice enjoyed a right of secrecy.

The Chairman: I wonder if I could put a question to you, Mr. Gariépy. Perhaps I could preface the question by saying two things: Number one, the basic points that you have made here this evening, speaking only for myself and not for the Committee, I am basically in sympathy with this position. I have only one trouble, one thing which concerns me, and this may be a point which you have discussed and I have missed because of the translation. I hope not. This is an awful responsibility for a journalist. What kind of information would the journalist receive and act upon to prevent some dreadful event from happening? Is there any such instance in which that would be the case? There are all kinds of examples, I am sure. If you found out that some group or person was going to do some terrible thing which would involve the death of a number of women and children, for example, what does the journalist do to prevent that or does he do anything? That is the only thing that troubles me.

Mr. Gariépy: Then, if such a situation should happen—and it may very well happen and possibly did happen in the past...

[Text]

The Chairman: I apologize if you discussed this earlier. I don't think that you did.

[Translation]

Mr. Gariépy: No, I do not think that we did discuss it. Certainly, whatever the legal system, the case of conscience will remain and will be recognized in the law. Some persons now enjoy certain privileges before the courts. I am thinking, for example, of lawyers and confessors who may know terrible things but, by virtue of their oath of secrecy, are incapable of divulging such information to anyone.

Now, take the case of journalists. Someone mentioned earlier that a journalist could receive an anonymous call stating that a bomb would go off in an airplane. I do not see what professional secret would prevent us from warning the authorities. After all, the informer was anonymous, we made no promise to him and we do not even know his name. I believe that this type of thing is fairly frequent, that newspapers are informed that a bomb has been planted at a given place or that a certain child has been kidnapped, that a child has been released for ransom, that he is at a given place and so forth.

It is not my view that it should be established that a journalist or newspaper should never co-operate in any way towards justice or public protection. It is possible, once again, that whatever legal system is established around the activity of the journalist, whether the present system or the system we are seeking, cases of conscience certainly will remain.

You mention information which a journalist might possess and which, revealed in time to the authorities, could prevent massacres or tragedies. Obviously, we are not asking that the law prevent journalists from telephoning the police. That is not what we are saying. We believe that having agreed under certain very definite circumstances and in the context of his functions to keep certain matters confidential, the journalist should not be forced by the courts to divulge such information, and there is a difference between that and the case...

Mr. Fortier: A further question.

Mr. Menard: All the more so as in making public the information he has received, the journalist is automatically informing the authorities.

Mr. Fortier: There may be a question of delay. However, a further question. In your brief presented to the Parliamentary Committee of the National Assembly, you recommended the creation of a commission for free dom of the press, and on page 18 of the brief, you mentioned some of the roles which such a commission could perform. To prevent certain abuses mentioned over the past hour, perhaps even the latter circumstance suggested by the chairman, would you agree, Mr. Gariépy, to the commission's being responsible for decreeing whether something is secret or not? Would you agree to that?

Mr. Gariépy: No, a body having all sorts of powers over the press is not the sort of commission we proposed to the National Assembly.

Mr. Fortier: Call it a press commission or an ombudsman, if you will, of the written or electronic press—would you agree to a person, insofar as possible an impartial person rather than the journalist himself, acting as a judge of whether or not the information communicated should remain secret?

Mr. Cariepy: First I should like to point out that in the spirit of what we recommend, the journalist would not be the final judge or, in any case, the only judge of the secret, that is, whether professional secrecy applies or not. Let us say that a journalist is summoned to court to explain the meaning of an article he has written. He is questioned by the Crown or the judge and at a certain point in the proceedings a legal provision is invoked...

Mr. Fortier: Then, this information was obtained against the formal promise not to reveal...

Mr. Gariépy: Exactly. First of all, the journalist's statement may be contradicted.

Mr. Fortier: Of course—by the informant.

Mr. Gariépy: And the judge may decide whether the provision—perhaps Mr. Ménard can fill us in on this—whether the provision of the law applies or not. Therefore...

Mr. Fortier: Let us suppose that it does apply just for the purposes of my question.

Mr. Gariépy: If it does apply, I do not see why a State board or commission would have to intervene in such an area which is strictly the responsibility of justice. We therefore feel—and I do not know whether we shall have the time this evening to make distinctions—that a commission should be created in Quebec which would be at least partly modelled on what exists at the federal level in the field of radio and television, the CRTC.

The commission would have provincial jurisdiction over ownership and would approve transfers of ownership between press firms, amalgamations of purchasing, printing or delivery firms and so forth. If such a commission did exist, it would have certain provincial powers over ownership. We do not feel that a commission whose functions would be very limited and restricted could, without becoming something quite different from what we are considering, interfere and state whether a journalist is entitled to claim professional secrecy or not.

Mr. Fortier: It would be an absolute professional secrecy once the bases had been established in a protective code; in your brief, you are asking for an absolute professional secrecy.

Mr. Gariépy: Which the journalist may invoke.

Mr. Fortier: Which the journalist may or must invoke?

Mr. Menard: Must. I feel that he must invoke it, but not as a means of defence.

Mr. Fortier: No, no.

Mr. Menard: When accused of libel.

Mr. Fortier: I understand very well.

Mr. Menard: However, in the theory which you advanced of allowing one person to judge whether or not the journalist must exercise the professional secrecy, you are supposing that there will be cases in which the professional secrecy of the journalist should not be protected. In other cases, you say that this should be protected. Therefore, it must be stipulated in the law what directives such a person must follow. In such cases, then, where the journalist may not invoke his professional secrecy, he will still find himself in the same dilemma which we raised earlier. That is to say, if individuals are aware of what categories of secrets are or are not recognized in law or in practice, people who may give information to journalists in confidence will not do so. For this category which you have eliminated we shall not only be unable to check it, we shall no longer know it.

Mr. Fortier: I attempted to stress the idea of public interest because, as you so aptly stated in your initial remarks, the public's right to information is more important than the administration of justice in such cases.

Mr. Menard: Yes, but administration in its repressive aspect.

Mr. Fortier: We can define these terms ad nauseam but it amounts to that.

Mr. Menard: Over the long term, that is. It is not an option we present because, over the long term, we do not have to choose between information and repression. Over the short term...

Mr. Fortier: The text of the law would choose it. The text of the law would have this effect.

Mr. Menard: But it would permit greater information. If the text of the law did not choose it, it would allow less information, but it would not allow greater repression.

Mr. Fortier: That is your suggestion, yes.

Mr. Menard: At least, this is how we look at the problem. And if you wish to create categories of secrecy...

Mr. Fortier: Agreed. I feel it has been well summarized.

[Text]

The Chairman: I am going to suggest that we perhaps might change the subject somewhat for a few minutes. I think the two lawyers may want to meet together privately later.

Mr. Fortier: If I had a choice I would not meet with the lawyer!

The Chairman: I won't ask you who you would meet with, Mr. Fortier!

In the fullness of time, Mr. Gariépy, I will have a translation of your submission to the Quebec Freedom of the Press Committee and I promise you I will study your submission. I wonder if for a few minutes I could ask you about some of your comments. I think the Committee would be interested. I don't think we require a long discussion. Can you summarize for us briefly what position the Federation took on the concentration of media in Quebec?

Mr. Gariépy: Certainly, in trying to do so both as briefly and as completely as possible, let us say, first of all, that the Federation is not opposed to concentration as being a necessarily bad phenomenon. On the contrary, we are prepared to recognize that to improve the quality of information, several forms of concentration are useful. However, we note for the most part that as such concentration is presently occurring, and particularly as it could continue to occur in Quebec, it is not without danger. We see it as a danger in itself if you will. We feel that allowing a small group of men to own most of the daily newspapers, most of the weekly newspapers and at the time that we presented this brief, also all sorts of related enterprises such as radio and television stations, leads to a very dangerous situation.

We have not claimed, and we do not claim today, that the groups now in control of the press firms in Quebec are using them to slant information, to oppose some ideas or citizens, or to obtain information. We are simply stating that there is a potential danger. And, whatever the guarantee contained in collective agreements, whatever the integrity of the men working as journalists or managers when interference occurs, it is too late to prevent it.

In any case, we feel that it is unhealthy in a democratic society to allow too great a portion of the mass media to fall into the hands of a small group of men and from this standpoint, in summary, we raise a principle with regard to the term "freedom of the press" which is often used in very different ways. In the initial stages of the press, of course, freedom of the press applied more to the editor than to anyone else. The right to express or publish one's opinions or information is an extension of individual freedom. We feel that the idea of freedom of the press, of allowing anyone at all to found a newspaper, is no longer an acceptable concept today, or, in any case, certainly not in such a limited way. It is our opinion that if freedom of the press consists solely in the right of any individual to found a newspaper without requesting permission, to manage and sell it without being subjected to any form of control, it is a very impractical freedom reserved for a very restricted number of millionaires or firms.

We feel that as press companies grew in size and diminished in number, the journalists sent by such firms demanded another form of freedom of the press: the right to perform their work according to certain professional standards without the interference of the press company for commercial reasons, the right of announcers to be protected for political reasons and so forth. But fundamentally, we feel that freedom of the press today is above all the right of the public to honest, complete and high quality information. If we say that freedom of the press means that Mr. Smith, who has many millions, has the right to have as many newspapers as he wants and fails to take into account the public's right to balanced information, I feel that we have a very limited concept of freedom. Now, having at great length propounded the idea of freedom of the press, we feel that in preventing the creation of a monopoly or a concentration which could prove very dangerous, the State has a role to play. And, having examined the various ways in which the State can perform this role—ways such as legislating against trusts or coalitions and so forth—although Canadian laws do not have the force or give the same latitude to the government as do the equivalent American laws, we feel that the State should be able to intervene more positively. In any case, this is the formula we suggest be studied. It can be achieved through a board or commission, "mutatis mutandis". It could be somewhat similar to the setup in radio and television. I am aware, of course, that historically the press and the journalists themselves have always resisted any State intervention like the plague. We ourselves, not just the directors of the Federation, have had to discuss this matter at great length. We were unable to even reach unanimity among our members with regard to recommending to the State the possibility of creating in the Province of Quebec a government agency or commission to approve transfers of ownership of the mass media and other matters just as important as the ownership of the press companies themselves, the ownership, for example, of delivery or distributing agencies, advertising agreements or pools. Through an agreement among several newspapers, a group of individuals may secure a monopoly of almost all of a given form of advertising and thus bring about the bankruptcy or disappearance of other firms.

We feel that this is a possible method, a democratic method which should be taken into consideration even if the media, the technique and the historical context of radio and television are opposed. We feel that what is accepted as a normal and democratic formula in the case of radio and television cannot be absolutely inadmissible in the case of the written press. Obviously, in such a situation, many precautions and restrictions would have to be introduced. As you pointed out, Mr. Fortier, we have not proposed the exact composition and all the possible powers of a commission for freedom of the press in Quebec. We mentioned to the Parliamentary Committee that in our opinion a reasonable and democratic solution to the problem of the concentration of press companies could be found in just such a board rather than in recourse to the courts over the issue of a monopoly, coalition or trust. This is the major recommendation we made to the Parliamentary Committee.

Mr. Fortier: The committee has not published a report, has it? It became defunct which the dissolution of the Assembly.

Mr. Gariépy: Which is extremely deceiving.

Mr. Fortier: No comment.

The Chairman: The Committee never reported?

Mr. Fortier: No.

The Chairman: After the election will its work be resumed or started over, assuming the government is re-elected? What happens? Is that work for nothing?

Mr. Gariépy: I do not necessarily believe that it should have to begin its work again; however, it should be re-established.

Mr. Fortier: Possibly the members would no longer be the same.

Mr. Gariépy: In any event, we appeared before the Parliamentary Committee in Quebec on September 10, I believe, and there was to be another hearing after that. The hearing did not take place. Then there were to be closed sessions to enable members to digest the mass of information assembled, and I do not believe that this work was done.

Mr. Fortier: Your brief is very complete because you do not merely state your proposals, you also reply to the possible objections they could raise. I found it excellent. Do you believe it is possible, Mr. Gariépy, to undo what has been done in the field of the written press in Quebec? Do you believe that the monopolies which exist today could or should be dissolved?

Mr. Gariépy: I believe that we made no suggestion to this effect.

Mr. Fortier: No, I realize that you did not, but . . .

Mr. Gariépy: There were even some very specific situations which were unacceptable to us and which have been partly rectified since we submitted our brief. At the time we were aware that a group of men who already owned Dimanche-Matin—one of the biggest Sunday papers—or who at least had a decisive influence in its publication and who also owned one of the biggest weekend papers, La Patrie, purchased the only major competitors of these publications. When Dernière Heure, the only competitor at the time, was purchased there was then an absolute monopoly in the French weekend newspapers. This group of men already owned La Patrie, and then purchased Le Petit Journal and Photo-Journal, also with wide circulations. Perhaps it is a misconception, but we feel, in the light of certain cases which have occurred in the United States, that such a transaction would never have succeeded in the United States by virtue of—I do not know the exact act—the Sherman Act or some other, and we feel that this is a serious abuse.

Since then, Québec-Press has entered the market of Sunday papers. As a result, we can no longer talk of monopolies among Sunday papers. There was also a particularly difficult situation in certain areas where radio, television and the newspaper were controlled by different branches of the same firm, by Télé-média under the jurisdiction of Power Corporation and by Les Journaux Trans-Canada. In any event, the same men in various capacities were involved in these branches, a regional situation which, I believe, would never have been accepted in the United States. Since then, however, I believe that Québec Télé-média has been sold—and the file has recently been submitted to the CRTC—to another group of men in whom Power Corporation or Mr. Desmarais and the owners of Les Journaux Trans-Canada will have no interest. The situation has therefore changed somewhat. What we are seeking is not a special law to invalidate the purchases or transactions which have been made.

I feel I am making no idle claim when I state that given the very meagre resources of some newspapers, concentration or chains could appear and that the proposal we make is a reasonable solution. However, we feel that there should be someone appointed to determine whether such transactions are advisable or not. At the present time, such transactions are undertaken at the owners' will and we know the result. The same situation exists for radio and television. The CRTC does not prevent the sale of stations nor the construction of networks. It does not systematically fight against concentration. However, proofs must be given that such is reasonable and in the public interest.

Mr. Fortier: In the case of the CRTC, you know, the electronic media are concerned with the airwaves which are in the public domain?

Mr. Gariépy: Yes, but it is a concept—that airwaves do not exist until someone puts current through an antenna.

Mr. Fortier: If you had to establish criteria for this board, this commission, whose creation you are suggesting—we will leave the electronic media aside for the moment, we are going to speak merely about the written press—at what point would you think that a barrier had to be raised, when it would be necessary to say “enough”?

Mr. Gariépy: Well, the exact point where the barrier should be placed may be difficult to establish. But let us take an extreme, if you like, and if such a commission were to be established, the Canadian news content, for example—to go back, despite your defence, to a comparison—or if it had to establish the editorial policy or the exact circulation, or the publishing tone, or the policy, and all that,—it would be dangerous and ill-advised, and people would certainly object to that.

Mr. Fortier: There are newspaper firms which are, as you know, very marginal, are there not? We hear certain owners parade before us telling us: “If I do not sell today, death duties being what they are, my estate, my wife, my children will have to sell in order to pay my estate tax; therefore, I am selling today.” How to avoid this problem when you have a Paul Desmarais who comes to you, and when that individual tells you: “I have a few cents”—as you pointed out in your brief. Then, he buys from you today, so that you can arrange your estate. How do you prevent it? Should this commission impose on a group of men in the area—let us say a city—and this was one of Mr. Ryan's suggestions, when he came before the Committee here, should a group of men be forced to get together and put forward enough money to make an offer so that the daily in question, or the weekly, will continue to be published by the local people, by the people in the area?

Mr. Gariépy: The CRTC's experience in this matter would be valuable since a similar situation could very well arise in the case of a person owning a broadcasting licence whether radio or television, when the heir wants to sell, and so on, and the CRTC decides that the buyer is not acceptable.

Mr. Fortier: I will have to tell you, as you undoubtedly know, that more and more, with the CRTC, some of the decisions seem to encourage the creation of extensive networks.

Mr. Gariépy: Yes, that is right. If ever there were a single network which was authorized in a given province, and if all the stations in the key regions were served solely by that same network, there would be cause to worry about the way in which the CRTC was exercising its functions.

Mr. Fortier: What do you think, for example, about the creation of Radio Mutuelle, by station CJMS, Mr. Raymond Crépault?

Mr. Gariépy: I will not give a definite opinion on Radio Mutuelle, with your permission, any more than on any other chain in particular.

What I can repeat is that I do not object to regroupings, as such; a network may be valuable. If, for example, because 6, 7, 8 or 9 radio stations, in various regions of the province, form a network, and if that enables the people not only to consolidate the financial bases and to reduce operating costs—if it is obvious, and if it has been established that that is going to improve information, for example, that the isolated radio station, in some city in Quebec, can make use of information gathered by the reporters of some other station, in some other region, in Montreal or in Quebec City—can profit more than in a single station, and that it can profit from a correspondent in Quebec—when the other smaller stations do not have the means to pay—and that depends really on cases—it cannot be said that all concentration, or every network is bad, or that every newspaper chain is bad, or good.

Mr. Fortier: In your opinion, they are all specific cases?

Mr. Gariépy: Yes, in a certain way, there are criteria to be respected, that are not formulated expressly, because people do not want to discuss trifles, but essentially, what is it? The quality of information, the viability or the profitability of the businesses must be assured; the volume of information must be assured; also the diversity of information must be assured, accessible in the regions. Too large a monopoly in the key sectors must be prevented or real competition will no longer have free play. Then starting with such principles, proposed amalgamations, or proposed networks, could be analysed, could they not—if people object to making their point of view known. We think that this is a reasonable formula, so as not to block the way for the necessary evolution of newspaper firms, on one hand, and also so as not to leave it merely to the whim and wishes of the owners of information media, which are private property, but which nevertheless have a public interest function—and to decide finally what sort of information, what system of information to establish.

Mr. Piche: If I may, Mr. Fortier, we were speaking a while ago about attempting to set up a barrier which, we well know, is difficult to define. It is also possible for this commission, after an investigation, to determine certain procedures which may be characterized by a desire for the sound expansion of the firm, by a desire, let us say, to eliminate the competitor in order to be able to better corner the market—and that is the whole problem of criteria, which will certainly not be strict, which the commission will be able to take as a basis in order to be able to differentiate between the procedures. And we know that, in very specific cases, that such movement, such commercial operation, instead of striving for expansion which will contribute greater quality to information, has as its main aim the elimination of a competitor.

Mr. Fortier: Some of you work for firms which are owned, let us say, by Mr. Desmarais; I assume that some of you have worked for another owner, possibly. Mrs. Gagnon, is it very different?

Mrs. Gagnon: No. Are you speaking about possible control over information, for example?

Mr. Fortier: I am speaking about what is brought out in the brief that you submitted—what you want to protect, what your Federation wants to protect. Do you believe that it has been threatened, in your everyday professional life, since Mr. Desmarais became owner of La Presse?

Mrs. Gagnon: No. At present, I would not say that and I think that in our brief we intentionally refused to mention specific cases, and even to hunt, in specific cases where there could have been some, in certain firms, for attempts to control information. That is just what we explained, it is a situation which presents dangers.

Mr. Fortier: It is this presence?

Mrs. Gagnon: It is what can happen.

Mr. Fortier: It is very clear, in your brief—but I cannot resist the temptation of asking you the question, since you are here.

Mrs. Gagnon: Exactly; I was a journalist with La Presse under the reign of the Berthiaume family, and then, under the reign of Mr. Desmarais—or rather, Mr. Dansereau, and, in our daily work, I cannot say that there have been specific changes—aside from secondary changes.

Mr. Fortier: But you are practising your profession as journalist, in your opinion, in the same way as you did under the Berthiaume reign?

Mrs. Gagnon: Personally, yes.

Mr. Fortier: And is it your experience that your colleagues at La Presse, if they were here today, would give the same sort of answer?

Mrs. Gagnon: Mr. Gariépy also works at La Presse.

Mr. Gariépy: It depends from what point of view you look at it. Strictly from the angle of the work that has to be done, and of the scope involved in the professional tasks we have to do, and to present the work as it must be presented, I don't think that any fundamental change has come about. On the other hand, there can be other changes, in the union situation, for example, or in the editorial organization. In these areas there have certainly been changes, as the new owners of the company have announced their desire to modernize the administration, to innovate, and so on, and this has increasingly been translated into changes in the organizational program, in editing, in allocation of responsibility, and into the creation of new set-ups, which some people are happy with while others are not.

Mr. Fortier: Just one question, Mr. Chairman. On page 8 of your brief to the National Assembly in the last paragraph, when I reread it earlier this evening, I said to myself: I absolutely must ask about it. It reads like this:

"It may be sufficient to recall that in 1960 La Presse decided, for reasons no one has yet fathomed, to support the Union Nationale party in the provincial elections. Mr. Jean-Louis Gagnon was then 'out of town'. As time went on, this policy was made obvious to all by the amount of space given to the two parties in the paper's columns. Journalists who covered Liberal meetings had their copy cut for 'technical reasons'. The choice of headlines, defensible on equally technical grounds, also revealed a definite measure of favoritism."

That was in the reign of Berthiaume. Today we are in the reign of Desmarais, and we also are undergoing an electoral campaign. Would you write the same thing, changing the name, perhaps, of one or the other of the parties, insofar as the present campaign is concerned?

Mr. Gariépy: Listen, it would be a glib way of avoiding your question to say that the campaign is not over, and that the answers to all these things will be given afterwards—that would be an elegant way of lying. In any case, I myself am a political reporter, and I am one of those who are covering the electoral campaign. One thing is certain: there is at least one situation which is identical to 1960—that is that there is no such thing as a letter of directives, you know, giving orders to the reporters to weight the news in favour of one party or against another. As to the place accorded to the two political parties by the headlines or the position of articles, La Presse itself has done a study which it published, I think, a few days ago.

Mr. Fortier: Last week.

Mr. Gariépy: Good, you have read it. As for the rest, it can happen that on certain mornings one wonders; that can happen. But let me remind you once again that in 1960 the overall picture finally emerged, not after one day, but almost at the very end of the campaign, and, at that time, the evidence could have been a bit clearer, and there are always, not just technical excuses, but technical situations which mean that everyone cannot have the front page headline at the same time. Then, there are choices made, and a choice is matter for discussion.

So, you yourself may look into, and indeed La Presse has done so itself—and you and your research assistants may look into the contents of the papers belonging to the chair under discussion, or of La Presse in particular, and form your opinion at the end of the campaign as to whether the choice of articles, their tone, their placing, the photographs, the cartoons and so on, allows any preference to appear.

Mr. Fortier: In your opinion, do you think that, up to the present time, the administration has attempted to allow expression of preference?

Mr. Gariépy: Up to the present time, I have not believed such a thing.

Mr. Fortier: Mrs. Gagnon?

Mrs. Gagnon: I don't think so. You know, in the matter of controls which may be exercised over the news in modern newspaper concerns, we should no longer be talking in terms of brutal censorship—that is, in a fairly well developed newspaper concern. Articles are not cut, or cut very little, except for considerations of space, for example. We must first ask ourselves how the concern is set up? What are the powers of the news editor or of the editor-in-chief? How is the difference between editorial and news defined? What people are hired and who are given the key posts? Finally, what atmosphere do the reporters work in? Some, for example, have developed slight reflexes of self-censorship, and there are many other questions which become really complex and which would require hours of discussion.

Mr. Fortier: However, you give an adequate summary, in your brief, of those you consider important.

Mrs. Gagnon: It is precisely in concerns like la Presse, for example, that we can no longer talk of developing crude censorship, with scissors snipping all over and all that.

The Chairman: Mr. Gariépy is aware that I was going to terminate the session and I am. He has said he would like to say a word or two about the press council. I think following that I will terminate the session but we would certainly welcome your comments on a press council.

Mr. Gariépy: This will be very short. We don't mean to describe to you in detail the terms of an agreement in principle which came about between the administrative office of the Federation and those of the three press employers' associations in Quebec in connection with a project for a press council for the province of Quebec. We agreed on the principles, and I think you have already received the employers' project, as it might be called, on the basis of which several sessions of negotiations have taken place, and which has now finally been changed in various respects. The reply, not only of the Federation, but also the final reply of the employers' associations concerning this project for understanding will come, from both sides, when we have held our respective general assemblies. As far as we are concerned, our annual meeting is from the 8th to the 10th of May, and on other dates, for Les Quotidiens du Québec, and Les Hebdomadaires du Canada, and the French-language radio broadcasters.

The only comment I want to make, Mr. Chairman, is that, in our opinion, this press council may mean a certain number of useful solutions for some problems which it is not the State's duty, I think, to settle. I am thinking partly of the establishment of certain norms for professional ethics and the definition of duty. I am thinking of a certain form of supervision, also, over the activities of newspapers or journalists; I am thinking of the role of the ombudsman, so to speak, for the contents of the news. On the other hand, we do not believe that this press council can have—since it will have only moral powers, so to speak, because this is an organism which wouldn't have coercive powers.

Mr. Fortier: A court of honour?

Mr. Gariépy: Well, if you like, yes. We don't think that such a body frees the State from certain responsibilities, when a danger, for example, like that of pollution, becomes significant, because we don't believe that a press council made up in part precisely of the representatives of the employers and of the owners of the papers, and partly of journalists, and partly of the representatives of the people, stands to be an appropriate and sufficiently independent instrument, or sufficiently detached from this particular world to be able to protect the public interest adequately, in such a case as that, where millions are at stake.

I am speaking here only, then, in the name of the administrative office of the Federation; I do not speak for the whole of the Federation, since, as I have said, the meeting of our Federation has yet to decide. We ourselves at the office believe that it is an innovation which could be very useful in implementing solutions which have remained at the planning stage for years. This is perhaps not a decisive attitude but, on the other hand, we want to avoid having it pass for a kind of magic solution to all the problems of the news. When there are press councils in the ten provinces of Canada, we do not believe that all the problems of the news will be solved—far from it.

Mr. Fortier: The two could go together, in fact—or should go together.

The Chairman: I would say to the witnesses, to Mr. Gariépy and his colleagues, that Senator Smith did not overstate the case when he said we have had a long day. We were in this room at 10:00 o'clock this morning. We have been here all day and we are due back at 10:00 o'clock tomorrow morning and we will be here until 10:00 o'clock tomorrow night. Notwithstanding that fact this has been a very interesting session. We have heard things about journalists and the administration of justice but I must say I don't think in any of our sessions have we dealt with it at such considerable length and at such an interesting length.

As I said earlier, I speak for the full Committee when I say we are particularly pleased to have your other material on our public record. Certainly I speak for myself, and I think for my colleagues, when I say we will study it and that it will certainly be a valuable part of our record.

I might say also, as I say to other members of the working press, that we quite appreciate that it is probably a personal imposition for each one of you to come here. We are mindful of it and particularly appreciative that you have found the time and taken the trouble to come. I might say that although our public hearings end on the 24th, that is a week from this coming Friday, it may be that we will seek out ways and means of talking in greater detail to members of the working press. All I can say in closing is thank you so much. In expressing my own and the Committee's appreciation to you personally, I am expressing it as well, I hope, to other members of the delegation and indeed to the members who sent you here. Thank you.

May I remind the Senators that the first session in the morning is at 10:00 a.m. with CHUM Limited. We have the Acadia Broadcasting Company, from Bridgewater, Nova Scotia, at 11:30 a.m. In the afternoon we have Bushnell Communications at 2:30, Monarch Broadcasting Company Limited at 4:30. Tomorrow evening at 8:00 o'clock we have the Institute of Canadian Advertising which is the association of advertising agencies.

The meeting is adjourned. Thank you.

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON MASS MEDIA

EVIDENCE

Ottawa, Ontario, Thursday, Apr. 16, 1970.

The Special Senate Committee on Mass Media met this day at 10:00 a.m.

Senator Keith Davey (Chairman) in the chair.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, we are receiving two briefs this morning. The first brief is from CHUM Limited. The President of CHUM Limited, Mr. Allan Waters is sitting on my immediate right. I think that perhaps when I call on him in a moment or two I will ask him to introduce the team of people that he has here.

Allan, I know you have attended several hearings and I think you are reasonably familiar with the procedure. We ask you to make an oral statement, following which we will ask you questions on the oral statement and your written brief which has been circulated to the Senators. I think some of us have studied the brief and we would like to question you on that, on your oral statement and other matters as well. If you wish to refer any questions to any of your colleagues, that is fine. Why don't you proceed? Welcome.

Mr. Allan Waters, President of CHUM Limited: Mr. Chairman and Honourable Senators. All of us present today are pleased to appear before this distinguished Senate Committee. It is particularly good for me to renew acquaintances with my friend Senator Davey. We have competed with the Senator in the broadcasting business and I have worked with him during political campaigns. As a matter of fact, in 1957 or '58 when Senator Davey was working for an opposition radio station in Toronto, I offered him an important position at CHUM. He declined my offer . . .

The Chairman: It was a great mistake!

Mr. Waters: He declined my offer and continued as one of my competitors. Then on to the political arena, and now he is a Senator. If Keith Davey had taken my job offer he might have been sitting up here as one of the CHUM people instead of as the Chairman of this Committee.

The Chairman: I still say it was a great mistake!

Mr. Waters: I have got to get in my last line!

Senator Sparrow: Is the offer still open?

Mr. Waters: In fact, if he had taken my offer, there might never have been a Senate Committee on Mass Media.

The Chairman: I repeat Senator Sparrow's question: Is the offer still open?

Mr. Waters: No comment! As you are aware, we have representatives here from each of the communities in which there is a CHUM group station. The five areas are: Halifax, Ottawa, Peterborough, Barrie and Toronto. We also have with us Paul Akehurst, the General Manager of Canadian Contemporary News System, which is owned by CHUM. Paul is located in Ottawa and is a pioneer in the development of an all-Canadian radio news system. I felt it was important that he be available for questioning.

Also with us is Larry Solway who is the moderator of our open-line program on CHUM in Toronto. Larry has been doing this program for ten years now and he is in daily contact with the listening audience. He may have some interesting observations in answer to your questions.

I thought it was important to have representatives from each market in which we are located. Each person here from the CHUM group has made a contribution to our written brief. They are anxious to participate in any areas where their explanations will assist this Committee.

I realize the Committee has received background information on the CHUM people present but I would like to add just a little more about these experienced broadcasters and businessmen.

Fred Sherratt, sitting on the Senator's left, was a co-founder of a radio station in Simcoe, Ontario, 1956. We hired Fred in 1960 to manage our newly acquired bankrupt radio station in Peterborough. With Fred's ingenuity and hard work, and with assistance from CHUM in Toronto, CKPT Peterborough became an important communication factor. When we acquired an interest in Halifax radio station DJCH, Fred was moved there for a period of four years. He was brought to Toronto last summer and is now our Vice-President of programming and operations for all CHUM group stations. I feel this is an excellent example of how the talents of one young Canadian Broadcaster have been advanced as the result of multiple ownership.

Ralph Snelgrove, sitting on my right, is one of the pioneers of Canadian broadcasting. Ralph founded radio station CKBB, Barrie in 1949 and television station CKVR, Barrie in 1955. All told, Ralph has been involved in broadcasting for approximately 30 years. Ralph is a close business partner of mine and I have always found him to be a good source of money when I needed it for an investment. He hasn't lost on me yet, and I don't intend that he will.

Larry Solway, who is sitting next to Ralph, I have already spoken about. I would just like to add that Larry, in my opinion, is one of the most creative Canadian broadcasters we have in this country.

Paul Akehurst, who is sitting next to Larry, I have also spoken about. Paul has been with CHUM for 6 years and has made a tremendous contribution to broadcast journalism in Canada.

Alex Forbes, who is sitting on my left, is our Vice-President of Finance. He is the watchdog of our money.

Terry Kilty has been with CFRA Ottawa for 23 years, since its inception in 1947. He is now Vice-President and General Manager and well known for his community activities, and sports activities, particularly football.

Next to Terry is John Manol. He has been General Manager of CKPT Peterborough for the past three years. Prior to that he was with CKBB in Barrie for 8 years. This is another example of promotion from within our own organization.

The last man next to John in the CHUM group, but certainly not the least, is Bill Ozard, Manager of Radio Station CJCH, Halifax. Bill is one of Nova Scotia's best known radio and television personalities. He has been at CJCH for 9 years and has progressed from start in the News Department, to Programming, the Program Manager, and last summer he was made Station Manager.

I hope, Senator Davey, this has not sounded too much like the introduction of a head table at a Kiwanis luncheon. However, I felt it was important that you and your colleagues have a little more information about those responsible for our broadcasting operations.

As evidenced from what I have already said, CHUM Limited is involved in group ownership—or it can be referred to as multiple ownership. We do not believe we are involved in concentration of ownership.

Our involvement as a group owner is much more than just a financial investment; we are aware and involved in the operation of every station, program wise, engineering, sales, financial, every important aspect of each of our stations is known and understood by our corporate management.

However, each station has its own general manager who is responsible for day-to-day operations and for policy decisions. Each manager is deeply involved in the community he serves, as are many members of his staff. He is on his own to operate his station to the best of his ability. If he needs assistance, he it advertises on programming, sales, financial—he asks for it, and gets it. If flaws develop in any part of a station's operation, we immediately investigate. Constant communication is maintained at all levels between each station and each market.

CHUM believes that multiple ownership, or group ownership, is good for Canadian broadcasting. Based on our experience, the public is better served.

As stated in our written brief, we have encountered no abuse of so-called concentration of ownership in Canadian media. We do not profess to be totally familiar with all media in all of Canada; we wish we were, but in our experience and our observations we feel no concern about concentration of ownership.

To be specific, is there was a market of any significant size in Canada, totally isolated except for local media—radio, television, newspaper and cable, and all of this media was owned by one group, or the person, there may be cause for concern. We do not believe a condition such as this exists and in any situation where there is concentration of ownership of media, there are always many alternatives available.

CHUM wants to expand further in broadcasting in Canada. We believe we understand something about communicating with people. We also believe we understand the economic necessities of the broadcasting business.

CHUM believes it is good for Canada that broadcasters from one part of the country are doing business, and communicating, in another part of the country. It broadens the outlook and understanding of more Canadians about Canada. We hope the policies of the Government of Canada will allow us our desired further expansion.

I sincerely hope, Senator Davey, that our written brief submission and this brief oral presentation have been of value to your Commission. All of us from the CHUM group are anxious to make a further contribution by answering any questions you, or your colleagues or your counsel, may have. Thank you.

The Chairman: Thank you, very much, Mr. Waters. Let us proceed right to the questioning with our counsel Mr. Fortier.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Waters, television came to Canada in 1952 and a lot of radio broadcasters at the time felt it spelled the doom of radio. Yet two years later, you made an offer to purchase radio station CHUM in Toronto. Why?

Mr. Waters: I had a rather complicated situation at that particular time. I was not involved in the radio broadcasting business, I was involved in the advertising business. The opportunity presented itself to buy this station and I perhaps did not know about television at that time but I was convinced radio could be a good investment and I bought it.

Mr. Fortier: Why radio rather than a manufacturing industry?

Mr. Waters: Well, I had been in the advertising and selling business, I am a salesman. I figured if I could sell drug products and other things I could sell radio time.

Mr. Fortier: Was this your main concern in purchasing a radio station to sell time on it?

Mr. Waters: Oh, no.

Mr. Fortier: What was it? What was your main philosophy, your main behind-the-scenes reasons for purchasing a radio station? Why did you want to get into broadcasting?

Mr. Waters: I wanted to get into the advertising business on my own. I will put it that way. I will put it another way: I had to first sell time on it because the station was broke. That was the first point but beyond that, Mr. Fortier, I had things in mind about how this station CHUM could better serve the Toronto market. I put those into effect by taking a station with 1000 watts to the present station of 50,000 watts full time and providing a much better service to the community. I may not be correct on this, but I believe we had 23 or 24 people then and now we have 90.

Mr. Fortier: You had a certain concept of what radio and broadcasting was all about in 1954. Has this changed in the last 15 years?

Mr. Waters: What do you mean "concept"? Do you mean program concept?

Mr. Fortier: You said you bought CHUM radio station and you wanted to do something with it. Have your thoughts changed as to what a radio station should do in a given market?

Mr. Waters: No, not really.

Mr. Fortier: Has it evolved at all?

Mr. Waters: There have been certain changes: How you go about doing it now as compared to how you did it in 1954. Anybody trying to do it now the way they did it then is going to be in trouble. I think it is changing all the time. How you reach your audiences is different.

Mr. Fortier: CHUM has become commonly referred to as a "top 40" station. Is that right?

Mr. Waters: Right.

Mr. Fortier: Was this what you wanted to do with it in 1954, make it a "top 40" station?

Mr. Waters: Well, let me go back. In 1954 I didn't do anything with it but try and keep it on its feet for three years until I could get it on full time. You cannot compete in a metropolitan market with a station that is not on 24 hours a day. When it came to the time that we could get it on 24 hours a day, the way I did it was assess the market and find out where there was an opening. There was an opening in Toronto for a popular music station, a "top 40" station—call it what you may. We chose that opening and we have been programming the same way ever since.

Mr. Fortier: It has been said that broadcasting can inform, can educate, and can entertain. It can do any one of the three or all three. Within those three goals, three objectives of broadcasting, which one do you feel is most important at the CHUM group of stations?

Mr. Waters: Well, I think I would have to say it may have been a toss-up between informing and entertaining. I don't believe that radio is as much an entertainment factor as it once was. Radio is more a vehicle to inform, in my opinion. In other words your constant flow of news, your constant flow of information about what is going on up in space at this very moment. It is my opinion that radio does an information job. The music is there as entertainment value and Mr. Solway's program is there to inform people and also for entertainment value, I think.

Mr. Fortier: Are "top 40" tunes wrapped around the news or is the news wrapped around "top 40" tunes?

Mr. Waters: Just depends, no. They are not wrapped around, sir. They are presented in a professional manner. If they were not we would not have any listeners.

Mr. Fortier: Again I come back to my earlier question: Which to you is most important: to be known as a "top 40" station or known as a station which provides reliable good news through this Contemporary News System service?

Mr. Waters: We would prefer to be known as a station that does provide excellent news together with our Contemporary News System. We have been tabbed from day one by the press of Canada as a "top 40" station. We don't object to that.

Mr. Fortier: And yet, as recent BBM figures seem to indicate, you are boasting about the fact you are reaching a more adult audience. Is this your young hippie of yesterday who has become older today, that you have sought and possibly managed to hold on to, or is this a new audience you are catering to?

Mr. Waters: I think it is perhaps a little bit of each. I think the younger audience we appealed to starting in 1957 is now getting older but also, sir, I think there is a factor that the people who frowned on "top 40" music 10 years ago are liking it today and I think there is much more acceptance for "top 40"—I like to call it hit parade music. Our adult audience is increasing and will increase further.

Mr. Fortier: But you are not changing the over-all package, the over-all sound which you have consistently offered to your listeners? Is that correct?

Mr. Waters: That is correct.

Mr. Fortier: You say the listeners are becoming more interested in hit parade music. Is that because you are presenting a better or more attractive package or is that because "top 40" music per se, in itself, has become more common?

Mr. Waters: I think that the "top 40" music has become more accepted or more common, whichever way you want to look at it. I do believe that CHUM is doing a better job of presenting it. We learn every day. We believe we are presenting it very well and it is very important how it is presented.

Mr. Fortier: How do you select the top 40 tunes? Do you buy the list from day to day or week to week from the American Hit Parade or do you make the selection at CHUM headquarters in Toronto?

Mr. Waters: The selection is made at CHUM headquarters in Toronto.

Mr. Fortier: On what basis?

Mr. Waters: As I have been doing a lot of the talking and I know the other gentlemen would like to, would ask Fred Sherratt if he would expand on the

Mr. Fred Sherratt, Vice-President (Programming and Operations) CHUM Limited: Senators and Mr. Fortier: There are many ingredients that are used in preparing the weekly play list on CHUM, which is really a different item than a published top 30 list. It is long to start with. Primarily it reflects requests to the radio station, sale of recordings in the metropolitan area of Toronto; information received from record contributors and companies as to the wholesale movement of records; the influence of the successes of records in other markets in North America, or indeed in the world; and information that we gather through the Maple Leaf System which CHUM spearheaded nearly a year ago, which assessed the impact of Canadian recordings across Canada.

Mr. Fortier: Am I right in understanding the top 40 on any given day is a total of tunes, music pieces, which are the top 40 in the CHUM market or is it the top 40 in another market?

Mr. Sherratt: No, the Hit Parade—the “top 40” is really not a correct term. It is a name applied a long way back. Somebody decided it might work if they played only 40 records but that does not happen at CHUM or in any contemporary station that I know of. The Hit Parade itself is 30 records long and indeed reflects the Toronto market. It will be different in any given week than the Hit Parade at CJCH or CFRA or in Vancouver.

Mr. Fortier: How different?

Mr. Sherratt: It varies. I don't think without getting them and actually doing a comparison I could give you an accurate answer.

Mr. Fortier: How different is it from the top 30 in, say, New York or Los Angeles?

Mr. Sherratt: A few weeks ago I did a comparison between the top 30 published by CHUM and the top 40 recordings in Billboard, which is an American music publication. I think of the 30 records, the top 40 in Billboard, about 20 or two-thirds would appear in the CHUM list.

Mr. Fortier: Are there instances of records which appear on CHUM's Hit Parade prior to appearing on Billboard?

Mr. Sherratt: Oh, yes.

Mr. Fortier: There are?

Mr. Sherratt: Mostly that happens, most of the time. I am talking about the top half. They list so many—they have a hundred and a lot underneath in all type that I have trouble reading.

Mr. Fortier: What you are telling the members of the Committee is that the Hit Parade which you play, which your station is famous for in the Toronto market, is the CHUM Hit Parade? Is that correct?

Mr. Sherratt: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: As determined by some people?

Mr. Sherratt: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: And which may on any given day, or may not be identical to the Hit Parade on a Vancouver station or a New York station?

Mr. Sherratt: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Is there any exchange of information between radio stations who cater to this “top 40” type of programming?

Mr. Sherratt: Yes. Through the Maple Leaf System and through conference calls they will discuss records of an unusual strength, no matter what the origin, foreign records of an unusual strength. I believe most of the stations in Canada exchange charts, which is a published list of records. The chart incidentally does not reflect all the music played on the radio station.

Mr. Fortier: It has been said that on a radio station such as yours, a disc jockey—if I could use a stockbroker's term—who wishes to promote a record, can do it.

Mr. Sherratt: He can do it and then he is unemployed.

Mr. Fortier: Has that ever happened at your station?

Mr. Sherratt: Not that I know of.

Mr. Fortier: One has done it and become unemployed?

Mr. Sherratt: Not that I know of.

Mr. Fortier: Do you oversee the selection of all tunes which make up on any given day the Hit Parade?

Mr. Sherratt: I don't do it personally. We have a program supervisor, Robert Wood, who does.

Mr. Fortier: What percentage of the listening time on a day is devoted to playing Hit Parade records?

Mr. Sherratt: I would think that in an hour where we are playing music it would constitute 70 per cent of that hour—65 per cent.

Mr. Fortier: How often in a day would you play the same tunes, the same top 30?

Mr. Sherratt: That will vary. The strongest current new music would be exposed probably six to seven times a day in a 24-hour period.

Mr. Fortier: How does a new record get on the top 30, get on the Hit Parade?

Mr. Sherratt: The public put it on the Hit Parade. We put it on the radio station.

Mr. Fortier: There is no way a record could be cut today and included in the top 30 this evening?

Mr. Sherratt: It would not be included in the top 30. It could be played on the radio station. We play more music than that on the top 30. We play new music too.

Mr. Fortier: Who decides to play the new music?

Mr. Sherratt: Our people, the professional programmers.

Mr. Fortier: Would this be the disc jockeys?

Mr. Sherratt: No. We have three people to use Toronto as an example, at the Toronto radio station, who together make that judgment with all the information they can obtain.

Mr. Fortier: Let me then ask you my earlier question: To what extent can they influence the success or failure of a record?

Mr. Sherratt: I don't think as individuals they can. I would have to say, if you are questioning what influence does CHUM have . . . I think it is safe to say if CHUM plays a record it has the opportunity of becoming a hit in Canada, particularly in Toronto. We can't assure it being a hit. The people make it a hit, the public.

Mr. Fortier: What you are saying is that CHUM, all things being equal, can make the success of a record?

Mr. Sherratt: No.

The Chairman: No?

Mr. Sherratt: No. We can contribute to the possibility of it becoming a success by playing it but we play many records that never make it as hits or never make it on the charts.

Mr. Fortier: Why do you play them?

Mr. Sherratt: They are mistakes.

Mr. Fortier: Has any of your mistakes ever become a hit?

Mr. Sherratt: Yes.

The Chairman: Then it is not a mistake!

Mr. Sherratt: Conversely, yes; we have made mistakes and not played records that have become hits.

Mr. Fortier: When you say at page 26 of your brief paragraph 14, that "Programming a broadcasting station today is extremely complex" . . . since 70 per cent of your programming is top 30 . . .

Mr. Sherratt: No, it isn't. It is music.

Mr. Fortier: It is music. My apologies. Is this the complexity to which you refer, the selection of the record?

Mr. Sherratt: That is one of the factors that makes complex. It is only one ingredient. Music is only one ingredient of a radio station.

Mr. Fortier: You have a library, of course?

Mr. Sherratt: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: What percentage of your library Canadian music or music played by Canadian performers?

Mr. Sherratt: At CHUM in Toronto we play the current Hit Parade, as we have been discussing. We play new music; we play what is referred to as gold or established hits, nostalgia. Of the nostalgia being played at CHUM right now we are playing from approximately 1200 selections. A recent survey indicated that a little better than 3 per cent of those would be considered Canadian.

Mr. Fortier: Three per cent of your nostalgic library is Canadian?

Mr. Sherratt: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Is that indicative of something?

Mr. Sherratt: I think it is indicative of the music that is available that is Canadian. There has been a great improvement in the availability of Canadian music in the last two years.

Mr. Fortier: Let us move on to another category. Aside from nostalgic music do you have any other category?

Mr. Sherratt: Not at CHUM.

Mr. Fortier: You don't have any other section of our library where there is an appreciable percentage of Canadian content music?

Mr. Sherratt: The largest percentage of Canadian music available today is in current popular music.

Mr. Fortier: What is the percentage there?

Mr. Sherratt: Well, the current play list at CHUM right now, I think it is about 12 per cent.

Mr. Fortier: So if the CRTC proposals with respect to Canadian content on AM stations became firm regulations, CHUM would have a certain difficulty meeting the minimum requirements. Is that correct?

Mr. Sherratt: Yes, sir.

Mr. Fortier: What are your views, Mr. Sherratt, and Mr. Waters, on those proposals?

Mr. Sherratt: Perhaps Mr. Waters might like to fer . . .

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Waters?

Mr. Waters: Mr. Fortier, we have presented a brief to the CRTC stating that we are in agreement with the intent to have more music played on Canadian stations, but it is our belief that it cannot be done at the present time without sacrificing the quality of programming on Canadian stations. That is our belief.

Mr. Fortier: On all Canadian stations or on your type of Canadian station?

Mr. Waters: Well, we have four different types of Canadian stations.

Mr. Fortier: I am talking about CHUM at the moment.

Mr. Waters: The answer is "Yes, it would be difficult to meet it." As a matter of fact it would be difficult on all four of our stations. You can meet it but you are going to be playing substandard music and you are going to be repeating music too often. If you do this in a market such as Toronto, or practically any market you can pick—you heard yesterday about the gentleman from Perth that could get nine American stations. In Toronto Senator Davey knows how many Buffalo stations you can get. I think Senator Davey also knows, because he comes from Toronto, how popular those Buffalo stations were back in the 1940's. So I think in order to meet the 30 per cent, Mr. Fortier, you are going to be sacrificing permanent quality and this may hurt the station's audience. If you hurt the audience you cannot expose your news to them. You cannot expose your talk programs to them. Your audience goes down and so does your revenue.

The Chairman: I would like to ask a couple of questions at page 26. You say:

"Today a broadcaster must 'zero in' the audience he wishes to serve." What audience are you zeroing in on at CHUM?

Mr. Waters: We are zeroing in on the young adult and youth audience but, as I mentioned to Mr. Fortier earlier, it is our opinion that this audience is changing. I should not say changing, it is enlarging, because there is more acceptance for the Hit Parade music of today than there was ten years ago by older people.

The Chairman: I note in a column by Patrick Scott in the Toronto Star that he wrote in December he said:

"Indeed perhaps the greatest food for thought to emerge from all the statistics is the clear-cut evidence that the CFRB's legendary stranglehold on the Toronto radio market may not, after all, be unbreakable in our time."

Do you think you can break CFRB's stranglehold, as Mr. Scott describes it?

Mr. Waters: Yes.

The Chairman: With this program format?

Mr. Waters: Yes.

The Chairman: Why? Because that potential audience is expanding?

Mr. Waters: I think because the potential audience is expanding and because we are keeping up with the times.

The Chairman: If that potential audience is expanding and you are keeping up with the times, is it not likely that CFRB is also keeping up with the times and perhaps playing some of the same kind of music?

Mr. Waters: Oh, they are, yes. They would not tell us what they are going to do, yesterday. We told you our whole programming format this morning.

The Chairman: I don't want you to tell us what you are going to do. It is written on page 26. You say you retained the services of two program consultants. I would be interested in knowing whether they are Canadian or American.

Mr. Waters: One of them is American, located in Los Angeles. He is not American, he is an International consultant. He consults in New Zealand, Australia, United States and Canada.

The second consultant, programming consultant, is located in Victoria, British Columbia. We have used both of them for many years and if we could find any other consultants that we thought were good in this area we would use them too.

The Chairman: I don't want you to give away any secrets but what do they do? Would he advise you on music, or on news, or on both, on the format, the kind of announcers to hire?

Mr. Waters: I think the all-embracing word is "everything"; but I mean a radio presentation, your on-air presentation is terribly important. I think a great many people think that all you have to do—you know this Senator Davey—all you have to do is put a record on and you will get an audience. I once had a friend say to me—he was a businessman—"How many people do you employ at CHUM in Toronto? About seven?" This is sometimes what people think. There is an awful lot to running a radio station and we want to have outside criticism of our station, our announcers, our news, our music.

Is that sufficient? I could go on and on.

The Chairman: Yes. I would like to turn, Mr. Fortier, if it is all right with you, to a discussion of ownership and some of the interesting views which Mr. Waters has put forward. However, some of the other Senators may have questions in the area of music programming. Perhaps we will stay on programming for a few moments.

Mr. Waters: I don't want to interrupt but if we are going to leave music could Larry Solway say something?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Larry Solway, Vice-President (Creative Development), CHUM Limited: I think it is very pertinent, I think it is terribly relevant in an examination of what popular music really is today. Last summer, with the help of some additional research, I created a thing called History of Rock and Roll and some things became clear to me. It is not the more obvious things—which are that the kids of yesterday are the mid-20's of today and have sort of grown up with it. The fact became very clear that the music itself has come of age and it was not a case of respectability because it has been around so long the adult group suddenly said "Well, it is really not so bad. We have been to a discotheque and it is really a lot of fun."

Music itself has developed in terms of music, in terms of content, in terms of social relevancy; to the point where today's popular music rather than being the Elvis Presley hip-shaking of 1967 is a very relevant social mirror, probably in my view more relevant to social needs or social concerns than any popular music has ever been.

What we have in fact is a circumstance which has not simply evolved into a state of respectability but music itself has come of age. Bad musicianship, clamming away at guitars, is no longer what sells. You must be a musician, you must have something to say. Music today has made possible the creation of true great artistic and literary style in Simon and Garfunkel, in the Beatles . . . I could go on and on. There are many like it. It is more respectable today, much more visible and more meaningful. Some of the great motion pictures today, and there are some great ones . . .

Mr. Fortier: Is it possible it has become more acceptable because radio stations such as CHUM have given it more exposure?

Mr. Solway: We have given it currency. I remember what we did in 1959 and 1960, what was happening in music then before the Twist became popular. A very interesting social and artistic development. Aside from the fact that CHUM did give it currency, I looked at that music and I thought "My God, the Cassanovas who said in 1959 that rock and roll is dead may indeed have been right." I think that the music turned the corner through 1960 and 1961 and from then continued to go up and became more meaningful. If we had not improved beyond Chubby Checkers and if indeed the people who listened to it had not become more concerned, rock and roll would have disappeared but it has not. The fact that "Hair" is a very important musical, whether we like it or not, and it can exist today, it is a folk opera in the context of what we used to call rock and roll music. I think this demonstrates the fact very well, aside from the fact that CHUM gave it currency.

That is the only comment I wish to make.

Senator McElman: Does CHUM play any of the platters of the more prominent French-Canadian artists?

Mr. Sherratt: We play some.

Senator McElman: To what extent?

Mr. Sherratt: On CHUM-AM, Robert Charlebois. CHUM-FM plays a great number because they fit the experimental format. People such as Ginette Reno, Robert Charlebois, Révolution Française, Ian and Sylvia have done French songs. Those that are compatible with the programming we are doing, yes, we have played.

Senator McElman: What is the public acceptance of them?

Mr. Sherratt: It is difficult to measure the acceptance of individual recordings in the FM format. There have not been that many international hits from French Canada; so with the exception of the one that mentioned a moment ago—André Gagnon, a Song from Petula was a hit played across Canada.

Mr. Solway: May I add just very briefly, I just came back from a trip to France and I think a lot of the product that is being played there is not unlike the product I have heard played here in Quebec. The biggest played record in the four or five days I listened to the French radio was a thing called "Arizona". It was an exact replica of Arizona, the arrangement was the same. It was a direct cover but the only thing that had been changed was the language—to protect whoever.

The Chairman: You mentioned, Mr. Solway, the social relevance of the music of today. That leads me to ask a question and perhaps I will put it to Mr. Waters although he may want one of his colleagues to answer it. At page 11, section 2, in the brief, you say:

"This attitude comes from every cultural and economic sector. The poor feel disenfranchised and helpless; the young feel unwanted and misunderstood; the affluent feel threatened; the intellectual feel debased, and the ignorant feel thwarted."

The question I wanted to ask you is: Do you feel that the poor, the young, the affluent, the intellectual and the ignorant all listen to radio? In other words, are you reaching those various groups through radio? Surveys have been done repeatedly attempting to analyse the quality of your audience. I would not presume to judge those surveys but do you think you are reaching all those groups?

Mr. Waters: I'm going to make a simple answer. I will say "Yes". I don't know whether Larry Solway would want to comment. I would say "Yes, we are." Larry is in communication with the audience.

The Chairman: I want to ask him about open-line broadcasting but perhaps he could answer this first of all.

Mr. Solway: I guess I was responsible for the paragraph. If I may just qualify it—I don't want to seem to back and fill on your question. I use that to demonstrate the whole thing that we have learned to call the "alienated society"—not perhaps in terms of reality but in terms of how the public genuinely feel. Are we to be concerned about how the public says they feel or how we think they should feel? That is why that falls where it does under "Attitudes of the Public".

To answer your question—yes, I personally talk to that kind of person and I personally receive mail from that kind of person. The clear fact emerges that no matter what position you are in in the socio-economic scale, you somehow feel thwarted. Everybody who has any money today feels thwarted by Mr. Benson's proposal. Anyone who doesn't have any money today feels thwarted by the presence of things much bigger than they are. Youth talks about the generation gap and their elders talk about reinforcement of the old values. What I am saying, Senator Davey, is that I talk to these people for two hours every day and I have done for years and years and I get the feeling that everybody feels his own private ox is being gored in this society.

The Chairman: Let us talk about open line broadcasting just for a moment or two. Perhaps I could begin with a question. You do open line broadcasting at three of your four stations?

Mr. Waters: Yes, that is right.

The Chairman: What station do you not?

Mr. Waters: CKPT—Peterborough.

The Chairman: Why not? In other words, if open line broadcast has the merit which you describe why don't you do it in Peterborough as well?

Mr. Waters: I will have Mr. John Manol, the General Manager of CKPT-Peterborough answer that.

Mr. John Manol, General Manager, CKPT, Peterborough: We find that unless you have a moderator who is, I think, equipped to deal with the various subjects in the market and able to deal with them well, I think it is better to avoid them except for special issues. I should qualify what we are saying here. We do not on a regular basis have an open line show. However we have a special open line show for various subjects at which time we bring in people who we feel are experts to discuss these subjects. For example, recently we have had two 1-hour open line shows with the Income Tax people where they have sent one of their experts from Belleville and he has remained at the station throughout the day and after the show to answer questions from people who called during the program.

We have in the works right at the moment, which will be presented in the next two weeks, a series of two or three 1-hour shows on pollution, and we have officials from Pollution Probe who will be taking part. It was our feeling at the time, it was our decision in Peterborough to remove the program we had three years ago simply because we didn't feel we had people available, or one person available, who we felt could be expert enough on all subjects we wanted to discuss. We think it better to run special programs when we felt there was a sincere need for it. However, we do get calls on our news broadcast phones covering various things we have been discussing. If there is a subject that comes up we present an open line show.

The Chairman: Page 22 of the brief says:

"Radio has created a form of expression in this kind of program that may be the most significant new role played by it during the past ten years."

This is really the same question as the Peterborough question. Why is there so little open line broadcasting in Toronto? For example, there is Larry's program and I think one on CHIN and to the best of my knowledge that is it.

Mr. Waters: The key to open line broadcasting is your moderator. We have one of the best in Larry. Bill Ozard has carried a program for many years in Halifax on CJCH and Bill is excellent at it. Terry Kielty on CFRA has Lowell Green. I think one of the reasons is that simple. If you haven't got a good moderator you can't run a good program. You have to be good, you have to be responsible and knowledgeable.

The Chairman: I accept that but surely you would not suggest that CFRB and CKEY and CHFI, three fairly prominent stations which come to mind immediately, could not find someone who could moderate an open line program. Do you think they are looking for someone?

Mr. Solway: At one time there were three active in Toronto. Bill Brady in Richmond Hill, who subsequently went to CKEY; Brad Crandall at CKEY who subsequently went somewhere else; and I was the other. Why they have vacated that field I don't know. I hope it is not that they have run cringing in fear from the fact I am so good.

The Chairman: I listen to your program quite regularly and I could comment on that! I think the Senators would be interested in taking just a moment because I know there are open line stations all across Canada. I think we would be interested. First of all could you describe how an open line program works the screening process and so on?

Mr. Solway: There are three kinds of programs. The one which is completely open; you throw open the lines and say "I know you have a lot to talk about so have at it". The other one is where I will introduce a topic that may be particularly salient in the news—the Spadina Expressway for example. The other one is where there is a specific guest with a particular area of competence who is in the city. Given any one of those three situations we have a screening process which is more concerned with getting fairly competent and articulate callers than deciding on content. The screener, working with me, will simply pick up the phone and say "Good morning. This is the Larry Solway program. What do you want to talk about? The person will then say what they want to talk about. If it is something extremely small like "My neighbour's fence is six inches over on my property and I don't know what to do about it"—she may simply answer. The purpose of screening in my view to simply give the caller the opportunity to articulate in advance, in fact to rehearse what he or she is going to say and perhaps be challenged by the screener so the caller will be aware of the kind of challenge there is going to be.

The Chairman: A screener may actually solve a problem then?

Mr. Solway: Sometimes, yes. There are circumstances, not too often, where my screener will talk to me on the intercom, during a commercial break and say "On line 5 I have a lady who wants to know what she should do about a particular problem." I say "There is no point in putting her on the air. Just give her this number to call." It may be the Department of Consumer Affairs or a Queen's Park Department.

The Chairman: Sometimes on a program somebody gets on and presumably uses obscene language and you beep that out. How does that work?

Mr. Solway: There is a continuous tape loop, which could describe technically, and what in fact it does is record the incoming call and plays it back four seconds later, which gives me four seconds time during which to delete.

The Chairman: You have to make those decisions in four seconds?

Mr. Solway: Yes. That is pretty good time.

Mr. Fortier: Is there more "beep-beep" today than there was yesterday?

Mr. Solway: No. There has never been a lot of beep-beep". As a matter of fact one of the questions I am asked most at cocktail parties is "How many people call you up and use dirty language?" It is rare. I think I may have one a week.

The Chairman: You have some regulars, haven't you?

Mr. Solway: No, not any more. I haven't had them for years. They were deleted partly because they were just plain foolish. They yelled something that was just silliness, just to make a noise. Sometimes it was kids. There was maybe one a week obscene and that would be stretching it. We are more concerned about libel than obscenity.

Mr. Fortier: Are there things today, Mr. Solway, that you don't "beep-beep" which you would have "beep-beeped" yesterday?

Mr. Solway: No.

Mr. Fortier: You have not evolved, either you or your station, your concept of good taste?

Mr. Solway: Well, given the fact there are only two circumstances in which I would delete, other than just irritation which is almost non-existent today, obscenity or libel. The things which were flagrantly obscene—and I don't mean a "hell" or "damn", I mean the obviously four letter scatological words are still scatological words. They don't serve any purpose and we are not deleting them out of a sense of prudery but I don't think it enlarges the subject to use a four letter coarse word. I will delete it. While the public standard may change I would suggest the areas of discussion may have become a little more liberal today than ten years ago.

The Chairman: How much more liberal?

Mr. Solway: How much more liberal?

The Chairman: Let me be more specific . . .

Mr. Solway: It is more acceptable today to discuss birth control clinics than it was twelve years ago. As a matter of fact under the Act originally there were very severe reservations about discussing anything of that kind without clearing well in advance.

Mr. Waters: When the CBC wrote the rules birth control was a prohibited subject.

Mr. Fortier: It still is, I think.

Mr. Sherratt: Before a certain time in the evening; isn't it?

The Chairman: I put the question to you: "How much more liberal?" The question I am specifically interested in is: Where do you draw the line? I would suggest to you, as someone who has listened to your program almost from its inception, that the line is moving further and further to the left. I am not passing judgment on whether that is right or wrong but I would suggest it has clearly happened. This was never more in evidence than a week or two ago when I was driving to the airport I heard two calls back-to-back. One was somebody telling a story about where they were at the time of the Cuban missile crisis. That ended up in "beep-beeping". You indicated by your comments you expected . . .

Mr. Solway: It was a put on. They were setting me up for some silly joke.

The Chairman: Do you recall in the next series of calls you discussed biting?

Mr. Solway: Yes.

The Chairman: Would you call that a fairly liberal approach?

Mr. Solway: I have discussed things of this kind in the past, including 8, 9 or 10 years ago.

The Chairman: You would have done that ten years ago the same way?

Mr. Solway: Yes, I would have. The only difference is the number of people who disapproved would have been far greater ten years ago. The discussion of biting—it sounds rather damning—it was exactly that it came out of . . . I deal a great deal more today with human behaviour than I do with events. If there is any real change in the program I would say that has to be it.

The Chairman: You deal more with which?

Mr. Solway: Human behaviour, life around us in terms of human behaviour; life from the inside out rather than the outside in. In the past years the program dealt with things in the news environmentally and came from the outside in. The approach in the program that seems to be most interesting, and I think most valuable, is the description of attitudes towards events from the inside of people. The biting thing—it was a lot of fun.

Mr. Fortier: Was that a personal experience?

Mr. Solway: I don't want to be silly about it because I think it is a good question, a very interesting point. I brought up the subject last fall of suppressed desires and the exercise of suppressed desires and discussing with people the psychological difference between fantasy and suppressed desire. I said things like "people do not want to exercise their reasonable suppressed desires". I am not saying a suppressed desire to jump off a barn and fly . . . that is a stupid fantasy and you are going to get killed. I am talking about very real experiences within the realm of possibility and at that time, (I am amplifying this to show you how we deal with human behaviour) I expressed the belief that the reason we don't tend to release these desires is we are afraid of success and that failure is far easier than success. When you are a failure nobody ever expects anything from you. As a consequence of this, some people did describe personal suppressions and one particular woman had called and said "I don't know whether or not I should say this on the air but I have had a desire to bite my husband." Naturally I pursued that, not with a sense of a prurient relish but I think with real interest. I asked her the obvious question—not that I didn't know what she was saying but I wanted to make it clear that she was on fairly safe ground. I asked "Does this happen in rather intimate circumstances between you and your husband?" She said "Yes, of course it does." I said "Why don't you bite him?"

Mr. Fortier: Had her husband put you up to that question?

Mr. Solway: The accusation may be that open line programming has no place to go now so it must either become very noisy and abrasive or it must become very openly prurient. I don't think either is necessary. If this be prurient then I guess I am a prurient man but I don't think that it is and I don't think I am.

The Chairman: I thank you. We could pursue the discussion and I am sure I would like to but I don't think that time allows as we have another brief to receive this morning.

I would like to put a question to Mr. Kielty, with your permission. The brief says at page 4:

"We have taken an excellent Ottawa station and strengthened it . . ."

The question I would like to ask Mr. Kielty is: How has CFRA been strengthened by the arrival on the scene of CHUM Limited?

Mr. Terry Kielty, General Manager, CFRA-CFM: Ottawa: Senator Davey, I think the strength is not something obvious to the listener or obvious to those sitting in the room. I think the strength comes from the inside where we were able to streamline and introduce sales methods, accounting methods, office methods. We were able to enjoy the privileges of growth activity. We could pick on the information and experience of people in other communities who were going through the same kind of thing that we were.

far as the strength of the station to the public I don't think it has changed that much but the strength in the internal operations I think is remarkably better than it ever was.

The Chairman: I accept that but as Mr. Waters mentioned the point I am from Toronto, I am also from Ottawa, as you know, and I listen a great deal to CFRA. Would I as a listener notice any difference?

Mr. Kielty: You might with respect to the development of things like the Contemporary News Service; you might with respect to the Maple Leaf Music system, which is a refinement of our internal operation which is evident in our broadcasting on a day-to-day basis. It has always been a quality station and I think it is a quality station.

The Chairman: Perhaps I should put this question to Mr. Waters. Might not some of these improvements in CFRA—the Maple Leaf System, the Contemporary News—might not they have happened anyway, if you had not purchased CFRA? Stations obviously improve and all the Contemporary News stations are not stations you own. CFRA may have had the service before you owned it, I am not sure.

I will put this question to you: How have the listeners in Ottawa benefitted from your purchase of CFRA?

Mr. Waters: Let me put it this way . . .

The Chairman: The listeners.

Mr. Waters: I think Mr. Kielty and other members of the CFRA staff—he has already said that internally they have benefitted—and I also think the listeners have benefitted because of the exposure of CFRA to the air-personnel to what has been done in other stations in our group. I mean, there were significant changes made. They were not maybe significant to the listeners but there were some significant changes made in our presentation of news, particularly in the noon hour period, where perhaps it should have been changed before but the previous owner was not going to make the change. When CHUM came along and became the owner we thought this should be done and they had the complete agreement of the people at CFRA. That is one instance, there are many others. I think you would call them subtle changes in programming which you, as a listener, may not notice, but I think it is significant that the number of listeners to CFRA has increased. Perhaps they would have increased anyway but all we know is since CHUM has become the owner they have increased.

The Chairman: Is that because it is directly attributable to changes that have been made; do you think?

Mr. Waters: I couldn't answer that. All I can say is there have been subtle changes made. The people at CFRA execute them beautifully, they are professional broadcasters.

The Chairman: I would like to pursue that with you if I could, Allan, this whole area of concentration of ownership. It seems to me you are saying in your brief—and I hope I am not misunderstanding the brief—you are saying that concentration of ownership up until the present time at least in Canada is not a problem. Then you say:

“However, future policy where concentration of ownership is being acquired by ‘purchasing’ and not by ‘pioneering’ may be subject to question.”

Is that your position?

Mr. Waters: Let me get the definition right. I said in my oral presentation I consider us to be multiple owners, we own stations in four markets. We are multiple owners and to use the other phrase—we are group owners. A concentration of ownership, to me, is where you have a company or individual who owns a lot of media in one market. That is concentration. In other words, if CHUM in Toronto, if Allan Waters owned the Toronto Star and CHUM and CFTO, I think that is concentration of ownership.

The Chairman: Is it concentration of ownership when John Bassett owns CFTO and the Telegram?

Mr. Waters: I don't think so, no. I don't think so. I really don't think so.

The Chairman: Would it be concentration of ownership if he also owned CHUM?

Mr. Waters: No. If he didn't own CHUM up until now I would say that it may be concentration of ownership. The point I make, and I think it is important, that concentration of ownership, where it exists now, exists because certain people, certain Canadians had the guts to pioneer in certain areas. I think that is very important. I think somebody who pioneered in an area and were the first people to take on a radio station—to use John Bassett, he won the television station on its merits, despite what anybody says. That is my opinion.

The Chairman: But he purchased the Telegram?

Mr. Waters: That is right. What I am saying is that what has gone on up to now is what I call pioneering. Other people could have purchased the Telegram but he purchased it. So I think what has gone this far should stay. Now if Allan Waters wanted to purchase the Telegram and CFTO I think somebody should say "Hey, maybe this is too much."

The Chairman: Let us put another dimension. Suppose Allan Waters wanted to buy every private radio station in Canada, do you think that would be too much?

Mr. Waters: Every private radio station in Canada? Yes, I think that is too much.

The Chairman: All right then. How much is too much?

Mr. Waters: I have heard you ask that question before.

The Chairman: Then I am sure you are prepared with an answer.

Mr. Waters: No. It is a difficult situation, it is difficult to answer. You know how they have answered in the United States and I don't want to go through this for other people but we say flatly in our brief that we would like to get a radio station in Montreal. We have been trying to get one for some time and we don't seem to be able to but we are going to keep trying until we get one, unless there are rules that say we cannot. Canada is a huge country and it is sparsely populated and I just don't know how much is too much. It is an extremely difficult question to answer.

I think if the people involved are good Canadian citizens and good broadcasters and are trying to serve the public, as I think most broadcasters in Canada are doing—some broadcasters are expansion-minded and some are not. We happen to be expansion-minded and we would like to proceed to get other properties. I don't think we should be allowed to buy another station in Toronto, that would be too much, another radio station in Toronto.

The Chairman: You said "as most broadcasters are". That implies there are some who are not. I am not going to ask you to identify those people.

Mr. Waters: Who are not . . .

The Chairman: Good broadcasters.

Mr. Waters: Did I say that?

The Chairman: You said "if they are good broadcasters" and then you said "most of them are". Supposing one of the people who is not—let us not name a person—in your opinion, or in the opinion of somebody, decides to expand his operation; should he be allowed?

Mr. Waters: If he is not a good broadcaster he should not be allowed to, no.

The Chairman: Are there other questions in the area? Senator Smith?

Senator Smith: Just on that very point I would like to know how you would define a broadcaster who is not good enough to do the kind of thing we are talking about. Is that an easy thing?

Mr. Waters: It is not an easy thing.

Senator Smith: Are you talking in terms of CRTC definitions?

Mr. Waters: I don't think the CRTC, sir, has a definition. I think the CRTC knows the performance of every broadcaster in this country. We have to report to them at certain intervals. Yearly we are up for licence renewal and your record has to stand and if you are not doing a good job of broadcasting it is brought to your attention.

Senator Smith: But there are not very many who are bad enough that the CRTC cancels their licence. It seems to me you would have to be pretty bad.

Mr. Waters: Yes. But I don't really think there are any bad enough to have their licence cancelled.

On the other hand the borderline ones, in the wisdom of the CRTC, they would say "No more until you upgrade the one you have." That would be their position under the Act, to disallow expansion in some areas.

Senator Sparrow: In your brief, you refer on different occasions to the fact you endeavoured to purchase Montreal radio stations and were turned down by the CRTC. Why were you turned down, do you know?

Mr. Waters: We were denied because—I am not certain I can quote this—because we were not sufficiently involved, or directly involved, in the social, economic, cultural life of Montreal. That was the latter denial. The one before that, we were trying to purchase an ethnic station in Montreal and I believe that the Commission felt we were not again perhaps in tune.

Senator Sparrow: Was that 1963 you are referring to now?

Mr. Waters: It was 1963 we tried to start our own. There was a frequency available there and we tried to start our own. We were denied at that time because of economic reasons. They considered there was not enough room for another, or not another English one. I think that was the reason for that. The latter one was because we were not sufficiently involved in the social, economic and cultural life of Montreal.

Senator Sparrow: And the one before that?

Mr. Waters: It was the ethnic station.

Senator Sparrow: There were three. The first was the ethnic?

Mr. Waters: The first was our own application for a station called CHIM. We tried to buy a network station CFMB and the latter was an attempt to buy KGM. Those three.

Senator Smith: What was the difference between that situation in Montreal and the situation that existed in Halifax at the time the company took over the operation of CJCH?

Mr. Waters: Well, sir, CHUM originally owned 50 per cent of Halifax. We bought it back in 1965, we bought half of Halifax and were granted that. Then when we went to buy the other half we were granted that. We were already in there. Maybe that is the answer.

Senator Smith: How did these factors measure up when you were permitted to buy half of CJCH back in 1965? Were you then considered as part of the cultural and economic life of the community?

Mr. Waters: Well, I don't know the answer to that. I am not sure whether the Commission are looking now for local ownership in certain markets. If I may add, this is not an easy thing to find. That is why we made that remark about Mr. Snelgrove used to have some money to loan me. When you go to find money in the local market to buy broadcasting property is not easy.

Senator Smith: My question, of course, relates to CRTC and not to your operations.

Mr. Waters: I appreciate that.

Senator Sparrow: Do you feel the denial in all three cases then was justified? Do you feel it was a fair decision?

Mr. Waters: Oh, yes. I think it was a fair decision. I think that there should be, there will have to be, or there will be some clarification on this social, economic and cultural involvement because just recently there was another denial by a Montreal station. I think he is in the room. Gordon Sinclair was trying to buy Sydney and he was denied with almost identical wording—not involved in the social, economic and cultural life of Sydney. There may be others, I am not certain, but those are two. I think somewhere along the line there will have to be some clarification, hopefully there will.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Waters, you have described yourself as an expansionist. What type of market are you looking for?

Mr. Waters: Well, I am looking for Montreal.

Mr. Fortier: Why? What have you learned about Montreal? You say you have become very knowledgeable about Montreal and it has become more and more attractive. What have you learned about the market in Montreal that makes it so attractive for Toronto people to own a radio station there?

Mr. Waters: Well, I think that Montreal is an extremely exciting city and as we all know there are a lot of people moving out of Montreal . . .

Mr. Fortier: I don't know that we know that. On a question of privilege I would take issue with you on that statement. This may be what is broadcast on the Toronto radio stations.

Mr. Waters: It is also carried in the press in Montreal.

Mr. Fortier: I would take issue with you. But you would like to get into Montreal?

Mr. Waters: Yes, I think it would be an excellent thing for a Toronto broadcaster or a Vancouver broadcaster—I say this in my brief—to get into Montreal, so the other people in Canada would have confidence in Quebec Province and get in there and do business.

Mr. Fortier: What then would work to the advantage of the Montreal listeners which is not present today? Would you bring in the top 30 station? Would you bring in Mr. Solway to monitor an open line program?

Mr. Waters: I will say frankly I don't know what I would do. I think I would like to say this to you, Mr. Fortier, that when we went into Peterborough, which is a small market, a population of 50,000, and purchased a bankrupt radio station—which Mr. Snelgrove and I still haven't got a cup of coffee from, and believe me we are not complaining—we have taken that station with the help of Mr. Sherratt and Mr. Manol and got it to be a good communications voice in that area and it is employing more people and providing a tremendously better service. If I might continue, I think maybe your question inferred that we were only interested in large markets. We also went into Halifax where the station there was a neglected radio station.

Senator Macdonald: What do you mean?

Mr. Waters: The people in Halifax were in radio and went into television and television became more glamorous, more interesting, and the radio station was neglected from a management standpoint. The people in Halifax knew that and as a matter of fact how I got into Halifax was they came to hire Mr. Sherratt and I would not let them hire him so we ended up buying half the station. That is really how it happened. We took the station which was neglected in Halifax and made it into a better station. We have been able to hire more people and I am sure Mr. Ozard would agree that we have a much better news department. We have provided a much better service in that market.

Mr. Fortier: Would you buy any station in any market if it was for sale?

Mr. Waters: I don't know. I would have to know the market, the competitive factor, the services that are being offered. I would have to know an awful lot of things.

Mr. Fortier: You would not make a blank assertion that "any station for sale in Canada I am interested in because I am an expansionist and would make more money"?

Mr. Waters: No.

Mr. Fortier: Do you buy radio stations like Mr. Thomson said about newspapers? Do you buy radio stations to make more money?

Mr. Waters: That is not the only reason.

Mr. Fortier: It is one of the reasons?

Mr. Waters: Yes, it is one of the reasons; but I also enjoy broadcasting and business and so do my associates and we would like to expand. Again, I think it is good for Canada to have Canadians doing this.

Mr. Fortier: You like broadcasting; you would like to expand; you would like to provide a service. I come back to my earlier question: Are the Montreal listeners lacking? Is there a service which the radio stations in Montreal are not providing for the listeners that you would provide?

Mr. Waters: Yes, I think there is.

The Chairman: May I ask a supplementary question? Are the listeners and viewers and people generally in Toronto better served by the mass media in Toronto than the people in Halifax by their mass media?

I put the question to you rather than the Halifax manager because you have the opportunity of travelling and being in both cities.

Mr. Waters: Well, I think it is a little bit of a tough question but I think I will say this—we had a meeting last night in preparation and Larry Solway expounded on this at some length. I agree with much that Larry had to say and I think that Toronto is served better by the media, by all media, than perhaps—I don't know whether I should say any market in North America but many markets in North America.

The Chairman: Let me put another question to you. Does the media in Ottawa serve this city better than the media in Halifax serves that city? Could you make that judgment for us?

Mr. Waters: No, I would not want to make that judgment.

The Chairman: Because you cannot or because you would not want to?

Mr. Waters: I live in Toronto and I spend quite a bit of time in Ottawa now, more than I ever have. I spend time in Halifax and in Peterborough and in Barrie but I don't think I would like to make that judgment.

Senator Sparrow: A supplementary. Were you here yesterday, by any chance, for the hearings?

The Chairman: Part of the day.

Mr. Waters: I came late in the hearing of some company from Toronto!

Senator Sparrow: In the brief yesterday, I will just read from it:

"It would be a brave broadcaster indeed who undertook to promote an unpopular cause."

—Further on it says:—"Under the existing rules no radio station, large or small, will do anything that may jeopardize its licence."

I have two questions. One, in the context of renewal of licences coming up, could you agree with that statement or would you disagree with it?

Secondly, would in fact that be a concern in trying to expand into another market such as Montreal? Would that fear that was stated in that paragraph be true as far as your station is concerned?

Mr. Waters: Sir, could I ask you if you would mind reading that paragraph again? You are a fast reader.

Senator Sparrow:

"In the opinion of the directors of Countryside the function of small local radio stations is first to inform and second to entertain its listeners. As your Committee is no doubt aware, radio broadcasting licences are being renewed every two years and the stations performance is subject to minute and continuing scrutiny by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. It would be a brave broadcaster indeed who undertook to promote an unpopular cause. The result is that we do the best we can. We furnish our listeners with local and national news, road reports, reports of sporting activities, music, weather reports and programs of that nature. Under the existing rules no radio station, large or small, will do anything that may jeopardize its licence."

Mr. Waters: What do they mean by "unpopular cause", sir? That is the key to it. We will report many unpopular causes and I think any of our stations will. I think that is the key to it.

Senator Sparrow: "Under the existing rules no radio station, large or small, will do anything that may jeopardize its licence."

Mr. Waters: I don't think any radio station . . . I would have to know what an unpopular cause is.

Mr. Ralph Snelgrove, President, CKVR-TV, Barrie, Ont: I don't think the BBG or the CRTC would consider today that supporting and taking a strong stand would have any effect on licence renewal.

Mr. Waters: We are always concerned. We cannot say licence renewal is of no concern to us. It is. I think any broadcaster keeps a file for licence renewal because they know it is coming up. He says every two years in that brief. Most stations just received a three-year licence.

Mr. Solway: I would suggest the word "irresponsible" be substituted for "unpopular" in that brief. Of course it is not within my competence to do that. I would suggest that that is the word that must have been meant.

Senator McElman: Mr. Chairman, I think we did break it down and we got a definition of what an unpopular cause might be from the person who wrote it. That was if a licensee, broadcasting radio, were to editorialize strongly against the proposals currently of the CRTC should he feel that this might have some bearing on renewal of his licence. I think we broke it down to that very clearly as an unpopular cause.

Mr. Solway: An unpopular cause with the CRTC?

Senator McElman: Not necessarily.

The Chairman: I think we have dealt with this at length and I think as Mr. Solway said as far as your organization is concerned "irresponsible" would be a better word instead of "unpopular".

Yes, Senator Smith?

Senator Smith: This relates to the discussion a few minutes ago about CJCH and it occurs to me this may be an example of the effect across the country of group ownership having the effect of cornering the market on high-class managerial talent. Would you like to say something to that? You are one of a number of very important broadcasting companies and is it going to be increasingly tougher for an independent station anywhere in the smaller cities to get good management when you have the tendency, with your great strength, financial and otherwise, to corner the market?

Mr. Waters: No. I think I would say "No". I think I made the point in our brief, and I believe this very strongly, the people sitting at this table—Mr. Sherratt was hired by us and developed through our organization and promoted throughout our organization. Mr. Ozard of CJCH has been there for nine or ten years. We didn't steal him. Mr. Manol was in Barrie and we promoted him from within the organization. Mr. Kietly has been there 23 years. We didn't get him from anywhere. Mr. Akehurst has been with us six years. Paul, I forget where you came from! CKOY. Mr. Solway has been with us 13 years.

Mr. Solway: When I came to the station in 1956, in the old days that we spoke about, I came as a summer replacement announcer and I was glad to get the work. They were not clamoring for me.

Senator Macdonald: Did you not say that you bought half of the Halifax station because you didn't want to let your manager go?

Mr. Waters: Yes, I did say that. That was not the total reason.

Senator Macdonald: Would you buy any station rather than lose your staff?

Mr. Waters: No, I would not. I was being a little facetious.

Senator Smith: You see my point surely, don't you?

Mr. Waters: Yes. In our case we have good people, and I mean this sincerely, beyond the people sitting at this table, that we have developed and who will be promoted within our organization. Mr. Solway said it and I don't think we have the reputation for raiding, so to speak. We don't go and hire people. We endeavour to promote within our ownership.

Senator Smith: I think there is a natural flow of talent to go where the money is, whether it is the performing field or otherwise.

Mr. Solway: There is very little in our company compared to what is general in the communications business.

Mr. Snelgrove: We must remember that there is perhaps some validity to your concern. To take the specific case of Mr. Manol, whom I hired twelve years ago. I think he was selling cars or something at the time and became a radio time salesman and sales manager and we promoted him and he did his homework and went to school at night and then he went to Peterborough and he has matured and when he gets tired of Peterborough he will go somewhere else. I don't know.

The Chairman: He will probably buy a car dealership of his own.

Mr. Snelgrove: This opportunity is a valuable consideration.

The Chairman: Does this answer your question?

Senator Smith: Yes.

The Chairman: There are several other lines of questioning we would like to pursue but we are not going to because of the time element. I know there is one other line of questioning that Mr. Fortier has and perhaps we can pursue that.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Akehurst, you have a reputation in Ottawa as a very thorough journalist, a very competent one. When you are investigating a lead, as you call it in the trade, are there any holds barred as to the means you will use to get your information?

Mr. Paul Akehurst, General Manager, Canadian Contemporary News System: I have a law within which I must work. I don't know what you mean by "holds barred".

Mr. Fortier: Will you stop short of using any means for getting the material which you feel you should get in the interest of your listeners?

Mr. Akehurst: If the means are lawful and ethical, no.

Mr. Fortier: What would be unlawful and unethical?

Mr. Akehurst: You know what is unlawful better than I.

Mr. Fortier: But I am not the one searching for the news. I would like to know what you think is unlawful and what you think is unethical.

Mr. Akehurst: I don't think I would engage in bribery, for example.

Mr. Fortier: You would never pay someone to obtain news?

Mr. Akehurst: I have not.

Mr. Fortier: No; but would you?

Mr. Akehurst: I have not.

Mr. Fortier: Would you?

Mr. Akehurst: I think that is hypothetical. We are talking about bribery and bribery is one thing and paying somebody for information is something quite different.

Mr. Fortier: Would you pay someone for obtaining information?

Mr. Akehurst: That would depend on the circumstances.

The Chairman: I think that is a good answer.

Mr. Akehurst: Well, it is one thing to go and offer a civil servant X number of dollars for classified information. That is bribery and that is illegal. It is something else to have an informant come and say "I happen to have information available and I want money for it." If I have some idea that this information is so valuable and I can't get it anywhere else and I believe it is in the public interest that this information be made public then of course I would have to take certain responsibilities but I haven't been faced with that situation or do I engage in that practice.

Mr. Fortier: What steps would you shy away from resorting to because you considered them unethical in seeking information, seeking to get to the bottom of a story?

Mr. Akehurst: Well, there are fairly well established ethics in the profession of journalism and I do my best to adhere to these, I think. You are facing me with a very general and hypothetical question, Mr. Fortier. If you can give me some specific examples I could answer "Yes" or "No".

Mr. Fortier: You work in this milieu where there are thousands of rumours which navigate through the corridors and through the Parliamentary restaurant and so on. How do you decipher the rumours which should be made the object of a thorough investigation and those which should not?

Mr. Akehurst: I think it depends on the nature of the rumours, doesn't it? Many of the rumours are inconsequential and even if they were true would not be of any great interest or significance. Those which are, presumably, suggest to the reporter, the conscientious reporter, that they should be followed up. There is political reporting. We hear all sorts of political rumours day after day. Some we disregard and others we pursue. I think it depends in the first instance what it is you are about and that is to tell people what is of interest and significance.

Mr. Fortier: We have the view expressed here by La Fédération professionnelle des Journalistes du Québec that a journalist should benefit from a privilege insofar as disclosing his source of information is concerned. Do you agree there should be a text of law which would prevent a journalist from having to disclose his source of information?

Mr. Akehurst: No. Let me qualify that.

Mr. Fortier: Why?

Mr. Akehurst: I feel very strongly that the journalist should enjoy no more rights than any other citizen in the community. Sometimes we require privileges in order to do our duty, as distinct from rights. I believe a journalist is very much a citizen in the community and has a responsibility to behave as such. Now as to the disclosure of sources, I don't believe, as some of my colleagues do, that a journalist should in all circumstances maintain an absolute right to refuse to disclose sources but I would say some provision would have to be made such as disclosure of sources in camera in a court of law, where it was determined it was vital in the public interest. Similarly the new Federal Court Act makes provision for defendants to seek redress to the courts for information which is being concealed by government which they may require in the preparation of the defence. I think journalists may have information which in the public interest should be revealed, so long as there is a vehicle for the release of such information and not to damage others; that is in camera.

Mr. Fortier: There are also politicians who outside the House have claimed they should not be compelled to disclose their sources of information. I am reminded of Mr. Eric Nielsen, for example, at the time of the Rivard scandal some years ago.

What are your views, as a journalist, on an M.P. or Senator refusing to disclose his source of information before an inquiry or a tribunal of sorts?

Mr. Akehurst: I think it depends in the first instance whether the disclosure of the information is likely to benefit the public.

Mr. Fortier: Who decides that?

Mr. Akehurst: Are we not talking about Parliamentary privilege?

Mr. Fortier: That is why I said "outside the House of Commons".

Mr. Akehurst: I think a court of law. I think there should be a judicial procedure for that sort of thing, determining whether it is in the public interest. I think the present government is moving in that direction.

Mr. Fortier: Do you think the same concept should apply to the journalist deciding whether or not his source should be kept secret?

Mr. Akehurst: I think so. I fail to see what purpose would have been served in requiring Mr. Nielsen to disclose his source of information.

Mr. Fortier: That is in retrospect you would agree?

Mr. Akehurst: I couldn't see at the time and I don't see now. I can think of many circumstances where it probably would not be in the public interest or of direct benefit to the public, or vital in any sense, to have a journalist disclose his source of information; quite the contrary—it might be important for a journalist to conceal his source.

Mr. Fortier: Let us take the example of a journalist who was before us yesterday and who works for La Presse, Madam Gagnon. You will recall that some short while ago she published in La Presse a story about the content of the report which had been submitted to the B & B Commission. Was it in the public interest that this report be published at that time or was it not?

Mr. Akehurst: I don't know what her motives were in publishing the report. I would be inclined to publish it if it came to my attention.

Mr. Fortier: To get a scoop or to provide your listeners, or readers in the case of Madam Gagnon, with news they must have today?

Mr. Akehurst: To provide my listeners or readers with the information. I don't hold to the view that the correct time to release information is when a government agency or body decides it is.

Mr. Fortier: You as a journalist should be in a position to decide when is the correct time?

Mr. Akehurst: If you take the position, as I do, that the public should have virtually unrestricted access to public information, I think it follows that there should not be government bodies which decide when.

Mr. Fortier: You make that point in the brief.

Mr. Akehurst: To be consistent I think we should not abdicate responsibility to government or government agencies to determine the timing of the release of public information.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Akehurst, you are a member of the Press Gallery and you have collectively been described as a member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Is this justified "criticism" of members of the Gallery that they perform as members of the Opposition?

Mr. Akehurst: I don't regard it as criticism. I am rather proud of the fact that there is this other layer—not opposition necessarily but there is opportunity for defence through another vehicle aside from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I don't think that we owe fealty in a loyal sense to any government and I think it is very healthy in the democracy that we do have a free press, another vehicle for defence outside of the elected representatives.

Mr. Fortier: Don't you think the members of the Press Gallery tend to be overly critical in their approach?

Mr. Akehurst: No.

Mr. Fortier: Is the Press Gallery performing a useful role which you ascribe to it?

Mr. Akehurst: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: No criticism which you would direct to the Gallery as a collectivity? Certainly not to individual members but to the Gallery in collectivity?

Mr. Akehurst: That was not your question but if you want me to respond to this one—yes, certainly. I think any institution, such as the Press Gallery, is subject to criticisms. There are a great many weaknesses in the Press Gallery, just as in any other institution. The Press Gallery, you must remember, is merely an organization primarily for the allocation of facilities to Gallery members—nothing more or less. Although it has certain disciplinary function which it performs. I believe I am correct in saying it interprets the Speaker's mandate as far as allocation of facilities is concerned.

Mr. Fortier: Do electronic journalists, members of the Press Gallery, have an advantage over written journalists?

Mr. Akehurst: I would say we have a disadvantage. We cannot employ fully the tools of our trade.

Mr. Fortier: Again a point which you make in your brief.

Mr. Waters: On the other hand I think we have a definite advantage in speed and in being able to tape people and get accurate reports on radio and television whereas—and this is no reflection on the press here—often the press report does not come out quite the way it was said because people have to write it down.

The Chairman: I have a supplementary question for Mr. Akehurst. This Committee session this morning is privileged, as you know. If it were broadcast on radio would it still be privileged?

Mr. Akehurst: May I ask you a question, sir? What do you mean it is privileged? In what sense is it privileged?

The Chairman: I will turn to my counsel.

Mr. Fortier: In the same sense as any utterance made by a Member of Parliament in the House is privileged, absolutely the same sense. Anyone appearing before a committee of the House or a committee of the Senate is protected from prosecution for anything which he has said while appearing before the committee.

Mr. Akehurst: The question is really a legal one.

The Chairman: It is.

Mr. Fortier: I will answer that there is a lawyer who was retained by the House of Commons three or four months ago to examine the question and report to the Speaker. That is three or four months ago and he is still examining it and he has not submitted a report. It is a very complex question. I won't charge any fee for this advice!

The Chairman: When I recommended that we have the Committee televised, because there were many requests made, I was overwhelmingly voted down but nobody mentioned that reason. That is the real problem.

Senator McElman: Mr. Ozard, do you believe that the community of Greater Halifax is being well or adequately served by the media of that community today?

Mr. Bill Ozard, Manager, CJCH, Halifax: That is a good question, Senator. I think under the economic circumstances of the marketplace—as you know the Chronicle Herald and the Mail Star, the two newspapers, are owned by one company. The criticism directed towards them is almost constant, justified or unjustified. The argument often put is there should be two separate newspapers, that is, owned by separate companies; and the competitive aspect of the print media in Halifax would be better served if that resulted. I am not all that sure that the economics of the marketplace could support two individual newspapers. I am not a newspaper man and I am not aware of the financial situation of the two newspapers, although I understand they are not starving to death; but whether two individual newspapers could survive is a question I am not able to answer.

As far as the electronic media is concerned I am of the opinion they are well served. The news media aspects of the electronic media of the city are highly competitive and contain some highly skilled men and I am of the opinion that Halifax is quite well served by the media.

Senator McElman: Forgetting the economics for the moment, on the print media—I am sure you read the newspapers—do you feel that the great amount of criticism that there has been—and I would refer you to the recent seminar held in Halifax . . .

Mr. Ozard: The Encounter? Are you referring to the Encounter series, a week long?

Senator McElman: Yes. Do you feel that the extent of that criticism was justified, as a reader of the print media?

Mr. Ozard: Let me answer it by saying that I read the Halifax Herald and Mail Star and I also subscribe to two Montreal newspapers and purchase two other Toronto newspapers because I find the information that I want as a broadcaster and an interested citizen is not fully covered in the two local newspapers to the extent I want it to be.

Senator McElman: Thank you, Mr. Ozard.

The Chairman: Mr. Waters and gentlemen. I am going to move to terminate the session. To those who were here at the beginning of the session and heard your remarks about the discussion you and I had these many years ago, I must say I have been reflecting this morning and wondering indeed what would have happened to you and to me and a lot of other things if I had accepted that offer. As it is, however, I am Chairman of this Committee and we have a specific task almost immediately ahead of us and that is the writing of the report, because our public hearings end a week from tomorrow morning.

One also wonders about the meeting you had last night at which time you undoubtedly discussed a lot of questions that we did not ask you this morning.

I want to repeat something that I have said, and I know you have heard me say it before—there are many broadcasters, it seems to me, who are sufficiently up tight that it is worth saying. This is not an inquiry into the broadcasting business or into specific stations. It is an analysis, we hope, of the overall media spectrum. I think the broadcasters of this country would have been annoyed if they had not been included in that kind of study. If that kind of study is going to be meaningful, I think you would agree that some reference to CHUM Limited is essential. I would like to express my appreciation to you for bringing so many of your key people, I am sure at a sacrifice.

I am serious about the meeting you had last night and the questions we did not ask. This is not an inquiry or probe. If following the discussion today and following other discussions you have heard, you have other comments that you would like to send along to us, either in confidence or not in confidence, we would be most grateful because I am sure there are other matters you could help us with. Again, thank you for coming.

May I say to the Senators that we are going to receive a brief in a few minutes from Acadia Broadcasting Company Limited of Bridgewater, Nova Scotia. It is now ten minutes to twelve and I would suggest that we reconvene sharply at 12 o'clock.

... Upon resuming at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, the second brief we are receiving this morning is from CKBW in Bridgewater, Nova Scotia, the Acadia Broadcasting Company Limited. Seated on my immediate right is Mr. John F. Hirtle, Vice President of Acadia Broadcasting Company Limited. On Mr. Hirtle's right is Mr. James A. MacLeod, who is the Secretary-Treasurer.

Mr. Hirtle, the brief you submitted has been received and circulated and studied by the senators. The procedure we follow is that we would like to ask you about the brief and some other matters which are of concern and interest to us. You have heard several of the sessions so you know the procedure. Now I would like you to begin with your oral statement. You have told me that you had not expected to make one, so don't feel that you must, but if you have something you would like to say please do so and we will then proceed to the questions.

Mr. John F. Hirtle, Vice President, Acadia Broadcasting Company Limited: Mr. Chairman and members of the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media, ladies and gentlemen. As your chairman has stated I did not realize perhaps I would be required to make any verbal statement this morning. However, in the light of Mr. Waters' eloquence I decided perhaps I better make a few notes upon arrival. So I would just say this, that earlier in my career as broadcaster and businessman learned if I was to head up a successful radio station had to acquire the capacity to delegate authority. Each morning I say this prayer: "The Lord give me strength to teach others to do it rather than to do it myself."

To that end, honourable senators and ladies and gentlemen, I would like to suggest, if I may, that you have any questions which you would care to direct to me I would be very happy to deal with corporate affairs, and I am most anxious that you direct questions to Mr. MacLeod who is not only Secretary-Treasurer of the company and a director but also is station manager and who assumes a responsibility in programming, news, editorial comment, et cetera; and in whom I have implicit faith.

The Chairman: Thank you very much. Mr. Hirtle, think the questioning this morning is to begin with Senator Petten.

Senator Petten: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now I think I should probably direct this one to Mr. MacLeod. I would like to know how a station in small community with such a diverse audience, which includes professionals, farmers, fishermen and pa-workers develop a program format to adequately serve all of these people? Would you like to expand on this for us?

Mr. James A. MacLeod, Secretary Treasurer, Acadia Broadcasting Company Limited: I think, Senator, I would answer that with a publicity slogan that we used at one time: "We are the station that listens to people." We got out into the community, we participate in the community at all levels of activities. We are members of a great many organizations and we encourage our staff members to belong to everything from the tennis club, the yacht club, the golf club; and many of our staff members are country born. Some of them come to work from a distance as great as 30 miles out in the country. We are therefore in contact with all elements of our audience: professional, farm, fish, every day labourers. This is reflected back to us in bull sessions. My office door, for instance, is never locked and seldom closed. The staff drift in—"Have you heard the latest rumour? Do you know what is going to happen downtown today?" And so on and so forth. You get the feeling of the community, you get to know the people and their wants and desires and you get to meet them.

Have I answered the question, sir?

Senator Petten: Yes.

Senator Smith: Before Senator Petten moves on, may I ask a question? I should be a little more familiar with your general programming than I am, but that is mostly because I am home in the summer months in my home town, which is only 30 miles from where you broadcast, but that is the outdoor season so I don't listen to radio as much. Do you have to think in terms of trying to make up a program that is going to be listened to by all the various income groups? For example, there is a great variation in your audience and when you compose a program of music, put a program of music together, do you think in terms of these various segments of our local society or do you just strike an average so there will be something in each package that would appeal to each one of these groups? Could you say something on that?

Mr. MacLeod: May I give you an ambiguous answer? Both.

The Chairman: Does that satisfy you, Senator Smith?

Senator Smith: Yes, that is all right. I thought maybe you would like to enlarge on it.

Mr. MacLeod: We are what you would call a "middle of the road" station. We try to program to please what we will call the majority of our audience most of the time, but at various times during the day we will program exclusively for perhaps one particular segment of our audience. Now perhaps I could give you some concrete examples.

In the past week, for instance, on Saturday, one of our announcers was judging a 4-H public speaking contest, which is a community activity which keeps us in touch with the farming element. On Sunday night for approximately an hour and a half we broadcast Mendelssohn's Oratorio Elijah performed by a local group in the town of Bridgewater, which was minority programming. On Monday night I had a half hour panel dealing with the proposed construction of a public swimming pool in the town of Bridgewater, which was only of interest really to the 7,000 people in metropolitan Bridgewater, which is minority programming.

During the day we will have a plan of programming that is acceptable to most levels of our audience, and then at particular times of the day we will program minority groups. For instance, after the one o'clock news we put on the stock market quotations, which is very definitely minority programming.

Senator Smith: I think this is a cross-section of what they do. That brings up another supplementary question, if I might call it that.

Mr. Hirtle: Before you go on, Senator Smith, could I add something to what Mr. MacLeod has said. I can say to you, because I know you personally, that early in my career I thought at one time I was going to pursue a musical profession. I very soon discovered perhaps I didn't have the guts or the ability and I moved into another phase of entertainment. However, I was able to do such things as participate in this oratorio which required considerable work because you don't find this kind of talent every day of the week in a small community, when you bring choirs of all denominations together for a period of six or eight weeks and slug it out. An oratorio of this magnitude takes some doing.

At the same time I recognize that we have to program to a large segment of our audience which is completely enamoured by country and western music, as we call it. I don't particularly appreciate the volume we present of this, but we limit it and have it at specific periods of the day and without it we would be dead. So we must listen, as Jamie says, to our audience.

Senator Smith: Mr. Chairman, if we had much more time I might ask Mr. Hirtle about when he appeared on Major Bowes program and I would ask him whether or not he was gonged.

The Chairman: Did you get the gong on Major Bowes program?

Mr. Hirtle: No. I came fourth in the voting so there were a lot more behind me.

Senator Smith: I won't ask my supplementary.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Hirtle, you have, to a certain extent, a monopoly of information in your city. There is no newspaper published there; there is no other radio station and there is no television station. As you say, you have to listen to the people. Do you find that in a situation such as the one in which you are that the broadcaster tends to listen to the people and seek to answer their every need more than in a large city, where he can lead public opinion or where the broadcasters can elevate public taste? You are in a situation where you must reflect rather than lead. Is that correct?

Mr. Hirtle: I would say that is correct, sir. I think I can simplify it by saying that with a limited audience to whom we cater, without their support—all they have to do is turn off the dial to any number of American stations that boom into any coastline area of eastern Canada—we just don't have an audience and we are just not in business. So I say to you we must listen to our audience.

The Chairman: What Canadian stations boom into Bridgewater?

Mr. Hirtle: Either of the Halifax 10 kilowatt stations, the two Saint John 10 kilowatt stations and Annapolis Valley gets into our market. The Bureau of Broadcast Measurement, which is the yardstick we use, still gives us approximately 85 per cent of the audience most of the time.

Mr. Fortier: Are you not satisfied that, as long as you provide your listeners in Bridgewater with some local content, they will tend to turn you on and thus allow you to lead them, allow you to educate them? I am referring not just to citizens of Bridgewater; this could be a city anywhere in Canada or the United States, or the world for that matter. Don't you consider that as one of your primary roles as a broadcaster, not to give them what they want but give them what you think they should have?

Mr. Hirtle: I would ask Mr. MacLeod to enlarge on why we felt it was absolutely essential, with the limited budget with which we operate, to develop a newsroom and news operation other than what is called a "rip and read" situation. Before I ask Mr. MacLeod to do that, I would like to point out just a little factor involved in our corporate structure. The first responsibility I had when I went to Bridgewater in 1947 was to go out and sell a vested interest in the radio station. If I may quote Allan Waters, we had the guts to pioneer in establishing a radio station on the south shore of Nova Scotia. We have approximately 210 shareholders, one of whom is the honourable Senator Smith.

Senator Smith: I should have declared my interest perhaps.

Mr. Hirtle: In 1947, a 4 per cent preferred dividend was a reasonable investment. Today it is not, we recognize that. We still have the support of those 210 people, many of whom are retail business people who are very concerned about the job we do for the business community as well as the community in general.

The Chairman: Do you want to talk on the news Mr. MacLeod?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes. I think we should add that the area is served by three weekly newspapers. We don't have an entire monopoly on the news situation.

Mr. Fortier: Three weeklies published in Bridgewater?

Mr. MacLeod: In our general area.

Mr. Hirtle: Bridgewater, Lunenburg and Liverpool.

Mr. MacLeod: We don't have a monopolistic news situation as far as the local news goes. What we found with the advent of television and the lifting of the barrier on power increases, and so on, we were allowed to go from 1,000 to five and then ten, and so on. Other stations could come into our market while before we had a little preserve of our own and in order to survive we have to reflect our community lock, stock and barrel. So that if people in our area did not listen to CKBW they didn't know what was going on in their own backyards.

An example would be that in the communities on the south shore there is a volunteer fire department and when a fire breaks out someone rings the alarm and all the volunteers rush to the fire station and then CKBW comes on and tells them where the fire is.

Senator Smith: Tells whom?

Mr. MacLeod: The audience.

Senator Smith: I didn't want you to leave the impression that you were telling the firemen where to go.

Mr. MacLeod: The alarm goes to Bridgewater and everybody says "Is it my home?" and they turn on the radio. Little local services like this. When we speak of the news operation it is news, current events, community events, interviewing of people coming through; the whole ball of wax.

The Chairman: You say in your brief at number 24 that it takes between $35,000 and $40,000 to maintain your news department. Does that include the salaries of the people?

Mr. MacLeod: Oh, yes. For instance, I can go for a week, perhaps, without working on the news and then perhaps do nothing for two days but work on news. That is if something comes along that my help is needed in the news department. Ordinarily we have two men who do the routine and a program director who looks after sports, and the announcers are trained.

The Chairman: What do you spend on news aside from salaries?

Mr. Hirtle: Are you referring to stringers? We have about 22 stringers who provide us with news.

The Chairman: Are they paid on a per item basis?

Mr. Hirtle: Yes. In addition to that we take the voices as well as the BN regular service. We are a supplementary station of the network and we get voice reports from the network as well. Wherever possible we will use a stringer's voice if the story is of sufficient consequence. We are involved in getting news from what I shall call a larger community and we are involved with pretty substantial telephone tolls.

The Chairman: Thank you. Senator Petten, I think, was questioning.

Senator Petten: In paragraph 5 you tell us about the launching of Group One Atlantic. Now it is launched, how is the voyage? Is it a paying proposition?

Mr. Hirtle: Not at the moment.

Senator Petten: Would you recommend it to other people in the same situation as yourself?

Mr. Hirtle: Yes. This is basically the reason we did launch it because we found in discussion, and I have been travelling the Bay Street beat for 22 years, that it is very difficult to go to an agency representing X number of clients and sell your little market on the south shore of Nova Scotia. We grouped our station with another group of stations for sales purposes only, and we have found that the simplification of an advertising agency on behalf of a client placing an order with this group of stations, which means one broadcasting order, one invoice and one cheque and one set of instructions. We do much of the actual physical negotiations from Bridgewater, although we do have a Halifax office in which we have a salesman and secretary. I don't mind saying that this is in the throes of development, but in the past year out of Halifax office we were able to gross approximately $100,000.

The Chairman: Out of Halifax alone?

Mr. Hirtle: Out of Halifax alone.

The Chairman: May I ask you on Group One what does a spot announcement cost? Let us say that right now it is 20 minutes after 12 and if I wanted to buy a spot announcement at this time on your station, how much would it cost?

Mr. MacLeod: Fifty-four dollars for the whole group.

The Chairman: For the whole group?

Mr. MacLeod: For the whole group?

The Chairman: What if I am a car dealer in Bridgewater, how much does it cost him for a spot announcement?

Mr. MacLeod: If you are on our one-time rate, $8. This is $54 for the whole group.

The Chairman: The one-time group?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes. Now you are dealing with the local business which is entirely different.

The Chairman: If I am a national advertiser in Toronto, is Group One a must buy if I want on to your station? If I am Coca Cola and want to buy your station only, can I do so?

Mr. MacLeod: We are attempting to make it a must buy if there is distribution of the product in all markets.

The Chairman: With Coca Cola, the case in point, I am sure there is. So they could not buy just on Bridgewater, they would have to buy the group?

Mr. Hirtle: There is an advantage in buying the group in that they get a discount.

The Chairman: But the question is: Can I buy Bridgewater only if I am Coca Cola?

Mr. MacLeod: Not without sufficient reason and just cause.

Senator Smith: How long is a spot? Is it always the same length of time?

Mr. Hirtle: It is usually regarded as 60 seconds. What we refer to as a flash is usually regarded as 30 seconds.

I can give the chairman an example where there would be an exclusion in buying one station in the group and this would be in a particular instance where, for instance, Peter Jackson had a thousand dollar winner in our area and it would not be of interest to Imperial Tobacco to advertise that fact in the other Group One Atlantic stations. Under those circumstances it would be Imperial Tobacco's privilege to buy one station.

The Chairman: Are Group One rates available to local advertisers?

Mr. MacLeod: They are more expensive so I don't see any reason why a local advertiser would want to buy Group One.

The Chairman: They are more expensive to local advertisers?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

The Chairman: Has Group One ever considered doing joint programming or joint newscasts? I am sure you have considered it. Why have you not done it?

Mr. MacLeod: We have areas of co-operation, yes. For instance, when the Nova Scotia Fisheries Exposition is on in Lunenburg we have provided tapes of certain events to other stations. When the Annapolis Valley Festival is on, they provide certain tapes to us, and so on. Whenever any member of the group requests co-operation it is there for the asking.

The Chairman: If the high school hockey team from Truro was playing in your city . . . Is Bridge water a city?

Mr. MacLeod: A town. Five thousand population.

The Chairman: I was in Bridgewater last summer as Senator Smith knows. In any event, in that case would you feed that information back to the station?

Mr. MacLeod: If they requested it.

The Chairman: There is no set format of program for all the stations?

Mr. MacLeod: No.

Mr. Hirtle: We do employ Telex between all the stations and for this reason we discussed this recently as two weeks ago and the question of employing the Telex to disseminate information came up.

The Chairman: Has Group One ever considered package with a Halifax station? If I want to buy Halifax and Group One . . .

Mr. MacLeod: We are a little exclusive. We are waiting until they are good enough to join us!

The Chairman: Has that ever been considered?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes. The basis of Group One is that we are attempting to sell the national advertiser rate in Nova Scotia in one package, as compared to buying the urban market. We say "Buy Group One in rural Nova Scotia with a potential audience of 335,000."

The Chairman: Who is Group One's toughest competition for the advertising dollar?

Mr. Hirtle: The metro-Halifax stations.

The Chairman: Not the weekly newspapers?

Mr. Hirtle: No.

Mr. Fortier: Who are the shareholders of Group One? How are the shares apportioned between the different member stations?

Mr. Hirtle: There is no corporate arrangement in essence. Group One Radio Limited—is only our Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver sales offices—Group One Radio Limited, as distinguished from Group One Atlantic. Group One Atlantic is just a sales tool, if you wish. There is no association.

Mr. Fortier: Who are the shareholders of the limited company, the sales company?

Mr. Hirtle: I may be incorrect in my actual terminology as to members, but the President of Group One Radio Limited is Bev Martin and I believe his uncle, Bill Byles, has a substantial interest in Group One Radio Limited.

Mr. Fortier: Who are these people?

The Chairman: I know them. They are radio representatives.

Mr. Hirtle: Stovin-Byles Television Limited in Toronto.

Mr. MacLeod: This is just our representative firm. They obtain business for us on a commission basis. They have no voice in the station.

Mr. Fortier: I was misled by the Group One terms.

Mr. MacLeod: A similarity of names.

Senator Petten: In paragraph 6 you mention that sooner or later you may sell. In another part of your brief, if I remember correctly, you say the remuneration has not been that great from the station in early years, and where one could possibly make it worth while is when you sold the station. You say it has a market value of $500,000, but you doubt if you could get this in the present market.

Maybe I have gone a little around it, but do you see what I am driving at? Would you sell it because of the White Paper on taxation, or estate taxes, or would you sell it to make a profit?

Mr. Hirtle: If I could use an example, a personal friend of mine in Truro has recently sold the daily newspaper and five weeklies that he owned to an Ontario publishing house and was retained in a management capacity. I think he was very anxious to realize a capital gain and has successfully done so.

Mr. Rogers, the president of the company, myself and Mr. MacLeod have had a substantial vested interest in the company since its inception, and I think earlier in the brief a reference was made to the initial salaries paid the three of us as directors of the company, and there was no figure that was less than $100—would you believe $50 a week in 1947? We have progressed considerably since then, but having put all this blood, sweat and tears into the establishing of a relatively small corporation, I question, with the way in which perhaps certain legislation is moving, that we can realize anything for our 25 years of effort.

Senator Petten: I come from Newfoundland so I believe.

Senator Smith: I want to make this point. Mr. Hirtle, you and I are not too far apart in ages and what have we got to worry about when we have ownership of shares that might in the future be appreciated to the extent where capital gains tax would have any effect at all? Are you thinking about your own personal position and that of Mr. Rogers and Mr. MacLeod, or are you thinking of those who might later buy your operation and be in the time period when they may or may not be subject to capital gains tax? You know that when the D-day comes in five years time that that gain is only the gain that is proposed to be taxed according to the White Paper. I don't understand what your personal worry is. I am a little puzzled by your own attitude on this thing in view of the age you and I are now getting into. I am a little more concerned about the incentive there would be for someone to start another radio station in the area or some other area. They would have to take another look at whether this would be a good economic thing to do because they may or may not be faced with a capital gains situation right from the beginning of the operation. This company has built up its gain, and in five years time I would hope that John Hirtle would not be working as hard as he has worked over these many years.

Mr. Hirtle: I would think if I were to retire at the normal retirement age—I am ten years from retirement—the thing that has me concerned now is whether Lester Rogers and myself, who own 55 per cent of the common stock of Acadia Broadcasting—can, in effect, locally, find an investor who would pay, according to the formula generally developed within the industry, the money that we feel should be realized for the sale of Acadia Broadcasting. I don't believe that any members of our staff would be in a position to realize this kind of money.

Senator Smith: Does the capital gains concept have anything to do with whether or not your station is now salable to others?

Mr. Hirtle: I would say "yes".

The Chairman: You have a concern, Mr. Hirtle, but the kind of concern a lot of Canadians would like to have. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Hirtle: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Is it a concern which is translated in your mind as attracting special treatment by the Government? In other words, should broadcasting companies such as yours who have acted as pioneers in your community be treated differently from other corporations or other companies?

Mr. Hirtle: No, certainly not.

Senator Petten: In paragraph 11 of your brief you say that "Broadcasting is over-legislated. No other media has been subjected to so many enquiries or Royal Commissions. No other media is required to live within so many legislative regulations. No other media is subjected to the punitive measures that can be applied against broadcasting." Despite all these regulations are they not compensated for by the fact that the CRTC also protects you against competition, or would you rather see a totally unregulated industry? Say I want to go to your neck of the woods and put up a radio station, I can't.

Mr. MacLeod: I think, sir, that we make it clear that legislation is necessary to control broadcasting but not over-legislation. May I give you some examples?

Senator Petten: If you would, please.

Mr. MacLeod: This is the statistical report we had to file at the end of our fiscal year. It is 24 pages long. That is an auditor's nightmare, breaking down all the little nitty gritty of our expenditures. Have you ever examined one of those, sir?

The Chairman: I have examined one. I don't think that is an example of over-legislation.

Mr. MacLeod: Well, it is a hardship to us.

The Chairman: I am sure it is but Senator Petten's question really was: Is it a hardship which is not in part compensated for by the advantage you enjoy and the fact that Senator Petten and I cannot operate a radio station, if we have the money and the desire; the CRTC would not let us.

If you have other examples I would like to see them.

Mr. MacLeod: I think the CRTC would be acting in the public interest.

The Chairman: And they would also be acting in your interest, wouldn't they?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes, in our interests, too.

The Chairman: If you have other examples—know these things are not fun to make out.

Mr. Hirtle: I could just cite an example. I am spending more time doing work for branches of Government than I do in broadcasting.

Senator Smith: You ought to hire more staff!

Mr. MacLeod: This is a little form we had to fill out for a transfer of shares up to roughly six or eight months ago. Very simple. Now they are replaced by, I believe, an eight page form and it taking us as long as four months to get a routine stock transfer through the CRTC. This is holding up estate settlements, and so on. I am not referring to changes of ownership or control of the company. I am referring to a hundred dollar shareholder who wants to give his shares to his son or whose estate has to be settled. Four months to get a routine transfer through. When it comes to the food and drug advertising we have to have approval in advance by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

The Chairman: Are you against that?

Mr. MacLeod: Is it fair that we should have to have it approved in advance, a process which takes as long as three weeks, while our competitive media can print it immediately?

The Chairman: Which would you prefer to see? Would you prefer to see that their material has to be checked or that yours does not? The public are being protected in broadcasting and you say they are not being protected in print.

Mr. MacLeod: I am saying there is discrimination.

The Chairman: I take your point. I am wondering which you would prefer to see? Would you prefer to see that the food and drug regulation, as it applies to broadcasting, be removed; or do you think it would be in the public interest to see that there is a similar regulation in other media?

Mr. MacLeod: I think the regulation should apply to all media to protect the public.

The Chairman: Rather than seeing it removed from broadcasting?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes. Because today you don't know what you are eating or drinking. All of a sudden it comes out that the glass there contains cyclamates and you are going to get cancer. The public does need to be protected. I don't argue against that point. I think we should be able to advertise anything that is on the label of the product. If it is cough syrup and it is approved by the Department of National Health and Welfare to be on the market, and certain claims are made on the label, and those are approved, I see no reason why we cannot broadcast the claims on the label without going through a three weeks delay. The drugstore who wants to advertise is going to say "I am not going to wait three weeks to get on the air. I will run this in this week's newspaper instead."

Senator Smith: On this very point may I ask what have you done to try to get this change? Have you done anything through CAB or on your own behalf? What have you done?

Mr. MacLeod: To a previous administration—Liberal Mr. Rogers wrote a series of letters and they did result in some lightening of the burden to the extent we were allowed to name item and place. At one time it was illegal for us to use the phrase "fresh corn". You could say that somebody had corn to sell but you couldn't say it was "fresh corn" because you were making a claim about it and we had to submit the copy. On cosmetics, soaps, patent medicines—we can now name the item and place providing we make no claim. We can say "You can buy Super Plenamins at Rexall drugstore." We cannot say "Your family needs Super Plenamins because they contain 150,000 units of vitamin A." We cannot make a claim. Now we can name the item and place, and up to two, or three, or four years ago we couldn't go that far.

The Chairman: Isn't the Department of Consumer Affairs moving in exactly the opposite direction to the one you are recommending? It is my understanding, just following the press and the things they are doing, they are moving in the other direction. They feel the public should be receiving increasing protection.

Mr. MacLeod: I would agree with that theory, the public does need increased protection with today's new drugs, new products coming up, new food, new hormones that go into face creams. The public does need more protection. The point I am making is that once the product is approved and goes on the market and the label is permitted to go on and it makes certain claims, then we should be allowed to air.

Senator Smith: If I pick up next week's Bridge-water Bulletin and find an add for Super Plenamins saying "Super Plenamins are good for you, take your spring tonic in the form of Super Plenamins..."

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

Senator Smith: You mean you cannot broadcast that kind of claim?

Mr. MacLeod: Not without prior approval.

Senator Smith: And this is a regulation under the supervision of the Food and Drug Act administration and not the CRTC?

Mr. MacLeod: It is a combination of both.

The Chairman: It is the Food and Drug Regulation. We should make it clear that they can broadcast it after it is cleared.

Senator Smith: Can you make a claim if it is cleared?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

Senator Smith: And what you complain about is that you have to wait three weeks, or something.

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

Senator Smith: Do you ever lose business because of this point?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

Senator McElman: A supplementary. I understand all these aggravations of forms you have to fill in and so on. To get back to the basic question, as I understand it U.S. broadcasters are subject to similar aggravations, and yet in the U.S. broadcasters licences are handed out, particularly in the radio field, almost like wheatcakes. Would you prefer that sort of a situation?

Mr. MacLeod: No. I don't think it would be in the public interest in Canada. That is a personal opinion.

Senator McElman: Then you would agree that you have some protection in this country licence-wise, and looking at the economic aspects, the viability of your station. You have protections in this country that don't apply at least in our neighbouring nation.

Mr. MacLeod: Right. I qualify by saying that protection is in the public interest, not our private interest.

Senator McElman: Oh well, is it not very much in your economic interest that you have such protection?

Mr. MacLeod: You need at least 75,000 fairly prosperous people to start an AM radio station. Put another radio station in our area and all you have is two very poor radio stations and it is just a question which one is going to go belly-up first.

Senator McElman: I ask again is it not in your economic interest? Let us say there were . . .

The Chairman: In fairness I must say that I think the witness has answered the question once, but go ahead, pursue it.

Senator McElman: Let's say there was a very wealthy entrepreneur in your area who could stand the gaff of a break-even or less-than-break-even situation and simply wanted the prestige of owning and operating a radio station. Is it not in your very real economic interest that he would not receive such a licence under our regulations?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

Senator Petten: I wonder if you would tell us about the turnover and staff. You recruit staff locally, you say?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

Senator Petten: Do you have much of a problem with them leaving and going on to possibly greener pastures or the larger stations? Do you have much of a turnover?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes, it is a constant problem with us. When we get back to Bridgewater we will count the announcers. There just is not an adequate training program anywhere in Canada for the type of personnel we require. There are institutes such as the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute in Toronto which is turning out broadcasters after a three year course. There is the Career Academy, a four months course costing $1,000 which teaches some of the basics. To really find staff we will have to winnow through 50 or 60 auditions to find a possibility. We take somebody as green as grass and we spend a couple of years training him and putting a considerable investment in time and effort into his training and then he says "Now I know my job and I am worth more money and either you give it to me or I go on to a metropolitan station." A lot of our lads have moved on to greener pastures because we cannot meet the metropolitan stations as far as salary scale.

The Chairman: Mr. MacLeod, a few minutes ago Mr. Hirtle said he started at $50 a week in 1947. I might say that was $12.50 more than I made in private radio four years later. What would you state a disc jockey at in your station now in round figures?

Mr. MacLeod: In order to have a 19-year old boy and hold him, to train him so that he might become a competent broadcaster, around $75 a week.

The Chairman: So the pay scale in private radio stations like yours has increased considerably.

Mr. MacLeod: Just to get them to come into broadcasting in competition with any other type job they might take.

Senator McElman: Would you consider paying a higher rate to bring in a first class broadcaster, electronic journalist from, say, Halifax, to improve the calibre of programming?

Mr. MacLeod: We have attempted to do that, sir. They won't leave the big leagues for the bush leagues.

Mr. Hirtle: There is a status symbol involved.

The Chairman: What concerns me about your answer, and I accept it, you say they won't leave the big leagues for the bush leagues. I am sure that Senator Smith, who lives in your community, does not consider himself a bush leaguer, and I know you don't consider your audience as living in the bush league. Broadcasting is, if anything, more important to the citizens of Bridgewater, I would suggest, than it is to the citizens of Toronto where I live where we have lots of stations.

Does it concern you that you have to use inexperienced people? What is the solution to the problem? In other words, you mentioned the bush league. You are not a bush league broadcaster. You would not describe yourself as that nor would we. What can be done in small stations? That is one of the reasons we wanted to have a station like yours here before the committee. It is fine to have Allan Waters and CFRB and we are terribly interested in them, but it is also important to us that we talk to people like you. The listeners in Bridgewater are as important as the listeners in Toronto. You serve them to the best of your ability but what can be done to help you serve them better?

Mr. MacLeod: May I go back to an earlier question in the brief? We say our best staff members are those who are born and brought up in our area, and who want to remain in our area, who don't want to migrate. We have tried to bring in experienced news writers and pay them higher than average salaries for their part of the country but they just won't stay, they want to go to the metropolitan stations where there are more exciting things to do such as covering the Legislature, or where the Supreme Court sits, or where they can be parliamentary correspondents and where they have an unlimited news budget and a larger staff to work with.

Senator Smith: Mr. MacLeod, don't these people ever balance off the great benefits there are from living in our particular area? I am not apologizing for saying things like this, because I am sure our chairman knows the situation. Don't they balance off the great benefit of being able to play golf on either one of three golf courses that exist there, seaside golf courses, the most beautiful things in the world, for about $55 a year. You cannot even get in the front gate of a Toronto golf club for less than $1,500. There are other things that enter this that are just as free as anything and I can't understand these city slickers wanting always to remain city slickers.

Mr. MacLeod: In my experience I have only known one man who was bright enough to know that situation.

Senator Smith: Is that James MacLeod?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

Mr. Hirtle: If I may enlarge on your point and still answer perhaps the question of the chairman. In the last, I would say, probably three years, we have had two people come to us from metropolitan Montreal. They had some basic training and came to us to enlarge upon their training. One of the boys is still with us. We gave him to understand fully he would not become in any way shape or form qualified to make a move under two years. The other chap is now on the news staff of CFRB. We have contributed, through the dint of training, three of the present managers of Nova Scotia radio stations. On the same basis my engineer has been with me since the inception of the station; my sales manager has been with me since the inception, and Mr. MacLeod has been there since 1949. We have a traffic clerk who has a photographic mind who has been with us 18 years, so we don't need a computer. Our program director has been with us 16 years. We have key people who are the basis and background and the backbone of our operation so we have to live with this business of being a training ground for junior people.

The Chairman: This is not a criticism. I don't think you should describe yourselves as being in the bush leagues.

Mr. MacLeod: We don't. We are quoting what others think of us, I suppose.

The Chairman: Well, you shouldn't.

Mr. Hirtle: If I may just bring up a point. In our brief there was a reference initially to certain people who were "no more qualified to operate a radio station than a doctor, lawyer or Indian Chief". I crossed out "Indian chief" because I was afraid somebody would say "racist". I could just as well use the expression "butcher, baker, candlestick maker." This was the intent.

The Chairman: Could I ask a couple of other questions? You are complaining, I gather, about the Nova Scotia Labour Code restrictions, the number of hours worked?

Mr. MacLeod: The Canada Labour Code.

The Chairman: You are complaining about that?

Mr. MacLeod: I am not complaining about it. I brought out this point on Monday afternoon when I was invited to sit in on the session with the regional director of the Canada Manpower Centre in Bridgewater. This provision of the Labour Code makes it difficult to train junior staff. We are way above the $50 minimum salary when we bring these people in. It is enough of a hardship to have to support them like the Salvation Army for a year until they learn to be useful, let alone to have to pay them overtime to learn. A lot of our broadcasting is done at night.

If I may carry that subject further, the first year a man comes to our station he has to go through various cycles, seasonal cycles of our operation. There is what we call the Christmas rush, the mid-winter lull when we sit around and do our routine work. We have our exhibition season, we have various spring activities, and so on. When a new man comes we would like to send him out to observe how each of these different things is done during his first year. The second year he is with us he is told "All right, last year you saw how it is done. This year you go out and do it." So it takes a full year with us to see how a radio station operates. A radio station does not operate the same on January 1 as it does on July 1. They are seasonal.

The Chairman: Do you pay overtime to these people then?

Mr. MacLeod: We have to.

The Chairman: Isn't it a good thing? The starting salary in Bridgewater now is $75. That is hardly inflation. That is the fact that the private stations in this country have started paying a living wage to people. Isn't that a happy development?

Mr. MacLeod: A very happy development, sir. I started there at $32.50.

The Chairman: Don't you think it is good that people don't start there at $32.50 now?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

The Chairman: I am not putting words in your mouth. I think this has been the great shame of private broadcasting in this country and presumably it is now ending.

Mr. MacLeod: The shame of private broadcasting . . . during the years we have always paid what we could afford to pay. It has taken us 20 years to build the station up to a point where we could afford to pay $75 to a 19-year old.

The Chairman: I am thinking of stations that couldn't make that statement. I accept your statement at its face value.

I have a couple of other questions. At section 8 of the brief you say that when newspapers and radio stations are jointly owned, radio appears of secondary importance. Do you have any specific example in mind when you made that statement, Mr. Hirtle?

"We can express the opinion that radio appears of secondary importance in such an affiliation.

What situations were you thinking of?

Mr. Hirtle: I think in many instances the broadcasting end of a partnership such as this is very often the tail wagging the dog.

The Chairman: I know what you mean, but what an example? You must have had something in mind when you wrote it. I don't want to tie you down, but surely you had something specific in mind.

Mr. MacLeod: Perhaps we could satisfy the senate with one answer. We both started our professional careers at CHNS in Halifax, which was owned by the Halifax Herald Limited, and although we were both junior announcers at the time it was obvious that the board of directors who were running the broadcasting company were newspapermen and not broadcasters and we felt the direction was flowing from the newspaper to the station.

The Chairman: In section 15 you say:

"Freedom of the press carries with it the responsibility not to interject into family listening topics that would be distasteful or unsuitable for those of immature years."

Presumably the judgment is made by you and Mr. Rogers. It is an awful responsibility. Who is John Hirtle, if I may say with great respect, to determine what is distasteful or unsuitable for the listeners of Bridgewater?

Mr. MacLeod: May I give you an example when I say it CHNS many years ago an announcer went on the air and described a news item where a little girl was killed in an automobile accident and the reporter went into such details of the accident—she has been decapitated and this was part of the news story. The next day that particular announcer got a phone call from a little girl's mother and the mother said "My little girl heard that news item and she cried all night and kept repeating 'mummy, they cut her head off.'"

There has to be some judgment used in how far to go.

The Chairman: I can see that, but how do you make that judgment?

Mr. MacLeod: Hopefully we do it through experience of broadcasters.

The Chairman: When does judgment become censorship? Is there that danger?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes, an ever-present danger.

The Chairman: Which concerns you and which you live with?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

Senator Smith: Mr. Chairman, will you give me a chance for a question? At the very last part of the last paragraph in the material you were good enough to send us you wind up with the statement:

"If you owned a radio station and your licence was going to be reviewed at intervals of two to five years by a politically appointed body, would you have the courage to take a political stand?"

I quote that to also say that this is not the first time we have had evidence that there does exist fear on the part of the broadcasters. Apparently they are fears entertained mostly by smaller broadcasters, the fear of offending somebody in the political sphere or in one of its agencies, and apparently it is a real fear because we have had it expressed. The big fellows haven't indicated they are particularly concerned.

What puzzles me is that at paragraph 26 of the first part of your material you refer:

"At the federal level, our efforts have often been met with contempt."

You use words like: you "have been vilified and ridiculed by those set in authority over us."

If you mean what you say in the last paragraph you must be scared to death now that the CRTC is going to take away our licence after attacking them in that form.

I found it interesting and I would like to have you say a word.

Mr. MacLeod: Senator, the cats are away and the mice are playing today at our station. One of our employees with less than a year's experience could put us in hot water and we could be punished to the extent of $25,000 for a first offence, and $50,000 for a second offence—no more Acadia Broadcasting Company.

The Chairman: What kind of offence would that be that the penalty would be like that?

Mr. MacLeod: It is difficult to say. There are so many rules and regulations of Broadcasting Act and regulations of the CRTC.

The Chairman: That would occasion a $25,000 fine?

Mr. MacLeod: That is a hypothetical question because the fine has not been imposed.

Mr. Hirtle: It still is a viable threat.

The Chairman: If I may pursue Senator Smith's question. If you were the chairman of the CRTC would you not want some of that kind of authority? In other words, is it not in the interest of the citizens of Bridgewater that when you two gentlemen are kind enough to come before our committee and be in Ottawa that you have the kind of mice, to use your word, in whom you have enough confidence they are not going to do these things.

Mr. MacLeod: Yes; but they could make an honest mistake.

The Chairman: Do you believe if they made an honest mistake it could result in a $25,000 fine?

Mr. MacLeod: We don't know.

The Chairman: Has it ever happened?

Mr. MacLeod: Not yet.

Mr. Fortier: That is the maximum, of course, Mr. Chairman. Section 29 of the act says that an infringement of any provision of the Act or any regulation enacted under the Act would make the broadcaster liable to a fine not exceeding $25,000 for a first offence and not exceeding $50,000 for any subsequent offence.

Mr. Hirtle: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I might answer Senator Smith when he reads the question:

"If you owned a radio station and your licence was going to be reviewed at intervals of two to five years by a politically appointed body, would you have the courage to take a political stand?"

I have been accused, as you may or may not know, of being a fence-sitter. I number you among my personal friends and I also consider the late Honourable Robert H. Winters a personal friend of mine. At the same time, my father was the honorary president of the P.C. Association, so I get tarred with that brush. But I have never taken a political stand. I have been accused by Gerald Regan, who is the Leader of the Opposition in the Provincial Legislature, of being a fence-sitter. I feel perhaps in my judgment that is a logical position to take.

The Chairman: Why is it a logical position to take?

Mr. Hirtle: I feel I have to try to be all things to all people.

The Chairman: We have had Mr. Bassett before the committee, from CFTO television in Toronto, and they are coming again. He is a very active Conservative. We have had Mr. Waters here this morning and he is an active Liberal.

Senator Smith: I want to remind you, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Rogers and Mr. Hirtle, the president and vice-president of the company, still would permit Mr. James MacLeod to be the Liberal candidate back in 1958 in the constituency. I call the vice-president who is running the show being non-partisan. Perhaps it is a group that you could describe as non-partisan and perhaps it is growing. I am sure he has opinions and if he were not a broadcaster and in the newspaper situation I think that Mr. Hirtle would from time to time take a stand. I don't know what this stand would be, but you know what my hopes would be.

The Chairman: I am interested in the point you raised as to whether or not . . .

Mr. MacLeod: We are pointing out a fear in the industry.

The Chairman: It is apparent to me in the last two days that it is a fear of small broadcasters and that the big broadcasters don't have it. We put this very directly to Standard Broadcasting people and we deal with it with CHUM people. They clearly indicated they did not have this fear. On the other hand Countryside yesterday morning sure had it, and obviously you fellows have it.

Senator Smith: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could conclude my part on this whole program by indicating that somebody who has been pretty close to the CRTC has told me—and I have a note of it—that if there were more broadcasters like CKBW there would be no need for broadcasting regulations. Somebody who knows the situation in general is paying you the greatest kind of compliment while you use the worst language I have heard against the CRTC. It was just a puzzle to me.

Senator McElman: I was going to ask a supplementary. In view of the political reference, is it the opinion of the witnesses that the CRTC then is politically motivated or politically controlled?

Mr. MacLeod: We have the fear, sir, we will put that way. Whether or not the fear is justified, I would have to leave that up to you to decide in your conscience.

Senator McElman: A fear that it is politically motivated?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes, we have the fear. Appointments to the CRTC are made by the party in power.

Senator Smith: So are judges appointed on the basis, Jamie.

Senator McElman: Have you any evidence to base that upon?

Mr. MacLeod: Nothing concrete, sir; like a fear of falling, a fear of high places, or what have you.

The Chairman: I wonder perhaps if we could terminate this part of the discussion by asking Mr. MacLeod if he were perhaps the Prime Minister of Canada or a member of the Cabinet, if there is any recommendation he could make to our committee which we might recommend in our ultimate report, as to some way in which his fear could be removed. In other words, what can be done that is consistent with good broadcasting in Canada that would alleviate your fear?

Mr. MacLeod: Well, some of the Broadcasting Act obviously has been designed to control the large broadcasting stations but if you are a mosquito you would hate to be hit by a sledge hammer.

The Chairman: You have not answered the question, really. How should the system be changed to alleviate our fear? That is my question.

Mr. MacLeod: You have given me a problem. It could be solved by the Prime Minister.

The Chairman: It is a problem you think should be solved. Obviously you have this fear.

Mr. MacLeod: The tenure of office of members of the CRTC should be for a length of time that they could not be supplanted following any election or change of government.

The Chairman: That is the situation now.

Mr. MacLeod: The Broadcasting Act—I see no reason for the $25,000, $50,000 fine business. I feel it should be like any other federal statute, the maximum amount is $10,000.

The Chairman: You would have less fear if the maximum fine was $10,000?

Mr. MacLeod: I wonder why broadcasting was singled out, sir. The federal statute, I think, the maximum fine—I may be wrong—is $10,000.

The Chairman: You would feel better if the fine were $10,000?

Mr. MacLeod: I think it should be treated as the Government is treating other things.

Mr. Fortier: I think it should be pointed out that the fine is not imposed by the CRTC. The fine would be imposed, Mr. MacLeod, by a court of law. If you read section 29 you will see every licensee who violates the provisions of any regulation applicable to him made under this part is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction. So it is not the CRTC who assesses the fine, it is a regularly constituted court of law.

The Chairman: I don't want to spin this out endlessly. You have the fear and we respect your fear and we would be interested in any solutions you might want to recommend to the way in which the thing could be structured to alleviate the fear.

Perhaps I could close off the questioning by expressing a fear I have and you can make me less fearful by your answer. I was rather alarmed by the reference in an appendix to the brief:

"What is wrong with 'Americanization'? " Then you go on and there is a very pro-American paragraph. It is in the appendix at page 12.

I should make myself very clear. I am not anti-American. You make this clear in your brief. You say:

"Despite our close ties with the U.S., we feel we have maintained our identity as Canadians."

I would like you to comment on this. If you feel as you do so strongly in the opening part of that paragraph, perhaps you won't maintain your identity for long. In other words, how are you pro-Canadian? How do you demonstrate? You say you have maintained your identity as Canadians. How do you maintain your identity as Canadians and feel as you do about Americanization?

Mr. MacLeod: There you get into personal feelings. You might well say "Why do you love your wife? "

The Chairman: You say "What is wrong with 'Americanization'? " I guess what I think is wrong is the ultimate end of Americanization is our country would disappear.

Mr. MacLeod: I submit to you, sir, this proposition. There is such a thing as a Canadian. I am a Canadian citizen, I am a seventh generation Canadian on my mother's side and a fifty generation Canadian on my father's side. My forefathers came to this country and broke the virgin soil and set up their farms and their leaseholds, and so on. There is engrained in me a sense of identity that I am a Canadian. When I was in the Air Force during the Second World War and I was in Great Britain, I felt I was visiting my grandparents. When I go on a vacation to the United States, I feel like I am visiting my cousins, but in my heart when I am here I am at home and I am a Canadian and I do not want to be an American.

The Chairman: You don't want your cousins to move in and take over your house?

Mr. MacLeod: No.

The Chairman: Neither do I.

Mr. MacLeod: On the contrary, It is a Canadian identity. We have taken the best of two worlds. We have taken the culture of the old world and the technology of the new and are clever enough to stay in the middle between the two and we have no close alliance now with Europe and really no close alliance with the United States, and we are having the best of two worlds. Why object to it?

The Chairman: I agree with your statement but I don't think it is inconsistent to suggest that we have also taken the worst of two worlds and that is what concerns me. We have a national purpose to sort out what is good and what is bad in all the cultures that are flowing in upon us. It is only if we do so, it seems to me, that we can remain distinctly Canadian.

I am not questioning your Canadianism for a moment, but I must say I was alarmed. I defer to your Canadianism, which is as strong as my own, of course.

Senator McElman: There is one area that alarms me a little bit. In paragraph 18 on the main brief you say:

"We do not believe there is an establishment which controls the mass media in Canada or any one of the media. There are, however, in our opinion, major organizations which exert a great deal of influence. We would point out the influence exerted by a relatively small number of columnists, editors and commentators in the leadership conventions of the major political parties held in 1967 and 1968."

What are these major organizations which exert a great deal of influence on the media?

Mr. MacLeod: CBC is one, sir.

Senator McElman: It is not in the Establishment sense then that you are speaking as influence; the lesser use of the word "establishment"? You are talking about the private sector?

Mr. MacLeod: I am saying that there are groups here, there are major organizations which exert a great deal of influence. There are very prominent newspapers in Canada which exert a great deal of influence.

The Chairman: Which ones?

Mr. MacLeod: The CBC.

The Chairman: Which newspapers?

Mr. MacLeod: Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal press.

The Chairman: Do the Toronto newspapers exert great influence in Bridgewater?

Mr. MacLeod: Yes.

The Chairman: How does that work?

Mr. MacLeod: It feeds down the line. Now we are getting into the political field and I am a rather rustic politician right now. Let us go back to the Diefenbaker years.

The Chairman: Before you do, you didn't pick a vintage year to be a Liberal candidate.

Mr. MacLeod: No, I discovered that. In 1957 the press was enamoured of Mr. Diefenbaker. He could do no wrong. When the press turned against him he could do nothing right. In the Liberal Leadership Convention we had the press—by "the press" I include radio and television, we are all members of the press—well, shall I call it, the hysteria of Trudeau-mania which established a man who was almost obscure the Liberal party overnight into the leadership. There was a great deal of influence there in the mass media.

The Chairman: The question we have to ask is: Was it created Trudeau-mania, the people or the press?

Mr. MacLeod: I can only give a personal opinion on that. My personal opinion is a few of the press did.

The Chairman: Could the same kind of mania have been created for another candidate? This is not partisan discussion. Could the same thing have happened to somebody other than Mr. Trudeau?

Mr. Hirtle: Certainly.

Senator McElman: You say:

"A relatively small number of columnists, editors and commentators" exercised this influence. Once they started the ball rolling, the other media joined the song. Is that what you mean?

Mr. MacLeod: That is about it.

Senator McElman: They were influenced by a small little group of people who have gained ascendancy in the prestige in the media?

Mr. MacLeod: That is right. Your little people will say "Well, so and so is such a well known columnist if he is such a strong supporter of so-and-so perhaps I would follow his lead". And it builds up into a snowball effect.

Senator McElman: Would you be surprised, Mr. MacLeod, that when we heard from the representatives—one or two who remained in that group—of the media themselves, they denied vigorously that there had been any such attempt made.

Mr. MacLeod: I leave it up to you, sir. You saw television, you heard radio, you saw the press.

The Chairman: Perhaps on that note I could include . . .

Mr. Hirtle: Mr. Chairman, could I return to one point that Senator Smith made. I think we came here and we are prepared to stand up and be counted. I would like to say to you, Senator Smith, that in a community the size of Bridgewater and/or Liverpool you have to become involved in the community. Perhaps you don't always sit on your haunches, perhaps you do take political stands. I can cite to you an example of which you have some knowledge. We are getting very interested in the community of Edgewater about the introduction of the Michelin Plant. It is going to create 500 new jobs in a community of 5,000 people. Both Mr. MacLeod and I are members of the Industrial Commission since its inception and I have no qualms at all about coming to Oawa with the Michelin negotiating committee and negotiating with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for a considerable sum of money to provide services for such an industry. So I don't think this is necessarily backing down on taking a political stand.

Mr. Fortier: You commenced broadcasting in 1947?

Mr. Hirtle: With Acadia Broadcasting.

Mr. Fortier: In the community which you have described and you offered over the years the services you have described. Would it be possible in 1970 for someone like you in a town like Bridgewater to commence broadcasting afresh?

Mr. Hirtle: I would say it would be very difficult.

Mr. MacLeod: The day of the pioneer is gone.

The Chairman: So is the day of senators gone who won't return at 2.30 if we don't adjourn.

Without elaborating I will simply say that we are grateful. The views of broadcasters like yourselves are important. It has to be part of our record. I guess the thing we wish for you is that the mice have not done too much harm while you have been up here. Thank you for coming. We will hear from Bushnell Communications at 2.30 p.m.

The Committee adjourned.

—Upon resuming at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call this session to order. The brief we are going to receive this afternoon is from Bushnell Communications Limited. Sitting on my immediate left will be the chief spokesman, Mr. Stuart W. Griffiths who is the President and Managing Director. Sitting on the extreme right at the front is someone who perhaps does not need much introduction to this group, Mr. Ernest Bushnell who is the Chairman of the Board. On my immediate right is Mr. Roy Faibish who is the Executive Vice-President of Bushnell Communications Limited and on Mr. Faibish's left is Mr. Charles O'Connor, Secretary and General Counsel.

The procedure we follow here, Mr. Griffiths, is a very simple one. We have the brief that you were kind enough to supply in compliance with our guidelines, which has been distributed to the Senators and has been read by them. We would ask you to make a brief opening statement of 10, 12 or 15 minutes, and following that we would like to question you on your opening statement and on the contents of your written submission and perhaps on other matters which may interest us as well.

If you wish to hand off any of our questions to any of your colleagues then, of course, we would be delighted. May I say for your guidance that, as the Senators have heard me say many times, I think it is particularly significant in this kind of hearing to point out this is not a junior grade hearing of the CRTC. It is not an inquiry into the affairs of Bushnell Communications Limited. It is rather an attempt to analyse the broad media spectrum in Canada, and Bushnell Communications Limited already plays a vital and significant role and therefore I think it was important to us that you come before the Committee.

But I also want you to realize, and I want to underline for the benefit of the Senators once again, as I am sure they realize, that as you come here this afternoon Bushnell Communications Limited has a substantial number—I believe more than a score—of applications pending before the CRTC and we are as anxious as you are here this afternoon to avoid asking questions or to avoid you making statements which in any way, sense or form, could be embarrassing in your delicate relationship, shall we say, with the CRTC. I know you realize that, because we have talked about it; it is not in that spirit we want you to come before the Committee but rather because yours is an important company and you and your colleagues, all of whom are friends of mine, have significant things to say to the Committee; and so welcome, why do you not go ahead?

Mr. Stuart W. Griffiths, President and Managing Director, Bushnell Communications Limited: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I suppose I could play the role of the feckless fellow from up the Ottawa Valley trying to describe our interest in broadcasting.

I could say that Bushnell Communications is a small television station in a medium size Canadian city with a rebroadcasting transmitter in another little town about 75 miles away and that we have interests in cable systems in Ottawa and several small towns nearby. That might accurately describe Bushnell at the moment but it is not the picture that the press has been portraying during the past months and, I am sure, that such a description would not be the reason that you have invited us to appear before you today.

But it is a more or less accurate statement of what we are. What it does not convey is our ambition or our promise or our ideas about the world in which we take part.

Our world is the world of broadcasting—uncomplicated by newspapers or magazine publishing or manufacturing. Bushnell Communications is a public broadcasting company, the largest shareholder owning not more than 13 per cent of our equity. We came into being in 1961 here in Ottawa at the same time that a number of so-called "second stations" began and eventually formed the second English television network, CTV, the alternative television channel for many Canadian viewers. Bushnell and its station CJOH-TV was one of the founding members of the CTV, a co-operative, mutually-owned and financed distribution network which now provides service for about 78 per cent of English speaking Canadians. By comparison, the CBC serves about 96 per cent of Canadians with a budget of some $200 million. CTV is less than $15 million and this poses some typically Canadian problems.

In Canada we commonly take our standards from the United States and while emulating the richest, most powerful country on earth may set up a high style of living it does not do very much for our development as a separate nation or the perpetuation and development of our own characteristics. If it was simply a matter of being able to afford to copy United States ways and foibles it would be a relatively simple matter to control the Canadian strain—but for the majority of Canadians access to the United States way of life is free—at least in a vicarious kind of way through movies, magazines, radio and television. In many parts of Canada, the United States television station provide the alternative channel to the CBC and in some cases it is easier and more usual to choose the United States channel in preference to the Canadian. Any attempt to limit the ability of Canadian viewers to watch U.S. channels is usually met by howls of rage, the sounds of which echo quickly through the hallowed halls. It seems Canadians are deliberately cultivating a kind of television Brinksmanship. We are like drug addicts shooting larger and larger doses of imported and inexpensive dope to dull the monotony or pain of our everyday Canadian ways.

Television of late years has come to be identified as one of the chief sources of the dope—this honest being won after a long struggle with the movie houses and the magazines. Some of us even defend ourselves in our roles by saying that we are simply "pushing" giving the customers what they want—and addicts always want more.

Some of us, even without the prodding of the CRTC, have tried other remedies.

We formed the CBC and subsidized the production of Canadian radio and television programs in an effort to provide a Canadian alternative. The addicts wanted more. We formed the CTV in order to pool several stations' Canadian requirements in the belief that working together was a better way to make Canadian programs than working separately. Still on the whole, the most popular elements of our schedules are U.S. programs. To increase the choice of the addicts, cable televisions has imported even more U.S. television and still more is demanded for now we have created pockets in many parts of the country where television services are very unevenly available and quite understandably, the would be addicts in these areas, seeing the blessings of addiction in other parts of the country, clamor for access to the drug.

The poor bloody Canadian broadcaster, even if he wants to give up the seamy life of the "pusher", now finds himself pushed. He's hooked too. He's hooked by the demands of choice for what Canadian addicts are asking for is not to be less Canadian but a wider choice on their television dials and at the moment, United States programs seem to be the easiest way to provide the answer. Accepting this answer will eventually change us into viewers, whatever our language, who have less and less knowledge of our own every day life and history.

So it is now up to broadcasters and broadcast regulators and Senators to do what we can to change matters—and it is very hard. To-day, while we are talking here, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is hearing the first comments on their proposals to make our Canadian broadcasting less American. Undoubtedly from these discussions will come some increased requirements for Canadian broadcasters and good thing too. A few days ago the CRTC suggested some new guidelines for cable operators designed to ensure that Canadian stations would have a priority on cable systems before United States stations. This will ensure that at least for a time, the parts of the country that cannot easily receive U.S. television stations, will have only a limited access to them. It of course can do nothing for the 65 per cent of Canadians who have direct access to U.S. stations. The cable operators are claiming that this will inhibit the development of cable. The Canadian Association of Broadcasters is claiming that the CRTC's proposed new Canadian requirements will put them out of business. Even the CBC views with apprehensiveness some of the suggestions.

What the CRTC is doing is all that is can do—it can regulate and perhaps it can also be enlightened in its regulating. But its efforts will be in opposition to what a substantial part of the public wants if it relies only on regulation, because in the long run it is difficult to create.

This is what has to happen if we are seriously concerned about remaining Canadians, and whether it is water or minerals or broadcasting, Canadians have to put some value on them being Canadian.

Broadcasters can purchase U.S. programs at a fraction of the cost of making comparable Canadian programs. Even spending a great deal of money making Canadian television programs and making them available is no guarantee that viewers will watch them. But we really have no other choice than to go on making as many as we can and making them as well as we can, not in imitation of U.S. programs but trying to find the crevasses and cravings in a viewer's mind, which, when we do, and are skilled enough to build a program to fit, means he will watch a Canadian rather than a U.S. program.

Canadian broadcasters have watched the growth of cable in this country with some horror because unless they do something they see their audiences and their ability to do something about their industry being reduced. The viewer does not think of cablevision in this way—he sees it as a means of increasing his choice. He is not consciously being less Canadian and it is pointless to appeal to his patriotism.

Some broadcasters, Bushnell among them, are determined to do something, and if they can, in a creative way. It all comes down to programs in the long run. The viewer wants increased choice—more programs. The regulator wants a more Canadian character to our broadcasting—more programs. The broadcaster wants to survive first and then, depending on who he is and what his circumstances are, to contribute to his industry which is daily less and less of an industry and more and more a matter of human communication, enlightenment and information.

What a small broadcasting company can do is limited but important. What some of us have come to conclude is that we must grow larger if we are going to contribute in any effective way. We must increase our ability to make more and better programs, we must have the capital to buy the machinery to make them and we must have the ability to attract, develop and hold people with the skills to make them. And we must do all these at a time when the likelihood is that resources are decreasing while costs are increasing.

Bushnell is a small company but it has always been predominantly interested in programs—making programs. For a small company it has done quite well at this—and it has shown its interest in building a plant to make programs that is quite unusual in this country and certainly disproportionate for the size of Ottawa.

But small companies, even those with good motivation, come to the end of the road of resources and the ability to commit for the future. For this reason, about two years ago Bushnell made its decision. It decided to expand and increase the base on which it could operate, increase its circulation so it could improve its service, and plan its future as it saw broadcasting developing. Its thesis was quite simple. Broadcasting was a public business—it reorganized its company and became a public company. Broadcasting was programs and stations—it built and purchased studios to increase its ability to make programs and it negotiated to purchase several additional stations in Montreal, Kingston, Peterborough and North Bay. Television now embraces cable, and in our opinion will do so more and more, so Bushnell involved itself in cable, first in its own backyard and then in other areas, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Trail, Nanaimo, Nelson, Red Deer, Cobourg, Renfrew, Arnprior, Hull, Ottawa. Most of these stations and cable companies are promises, for although we have negotiated to acquire them we must first obtain the approval of the CRTC and we hope to have this opportunity before too long. It is this decision on Bushnell's part to be more involved with programs that has caused the speculation in the press and to some extent, apprehension in the Toronto papers and which has, I am sure, caused you, Mr. Chairman, to ask us here today. You will understand from all of this that we are at the moment mostly shadow—we hope to demonstrate in the years ahead.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Griffiths. May I simply repeat what I said at the beginning, that certainly we are interested in your development but I think it would be misleading to suggest that the only reason we asked you here today was because of the speculation in the press about the future of Bushnell Communications. We are interested in that and I am sure we will be asking about that. It certainly was not the only reason. I think perhaps during the questioning you will see that there are other views which we hope you will express.

As I said, we will put our questions to you and if you wish to hand them off please do so; and notwithstanding my comments about why we asked you here, if any of the questions are such that you feel they would compromise your position at the present time, simple indicate.

Mr. Griffiths: Fine.

The Chairman: We will start the questioning with Mr. Fortier.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Griffiths, it is a matter of record that the field of broadcasting in Canada has had a number of entrepreneurs, a number of pioneers, a number of small people who have started from scratch with a small radio or a small television station. Do you foresee any future at all today in Canada for the small pioneer type of broadcaster or are his days counted?

Mr. Griffiths: I think his days are counted. I think there will be some pioneering, however. I think it will take place in the small communities. There are many small communities that really have inadequate service today and I would suppose that there are communities in a sense that really will not come easily to the attention of large organizations.

Such communities' needs usually become known to the community itself first and then out of that need usually comes some kind of action, whether it is a radio station or a cable company or whatever, so I foresee that for some time in the future many individuals will start a broadcasting enterprise.

Mr. Fortier: To be gobbled up by the large concern eventually.

Mr. Griffiths: It is not a question of being gobbled up. I think it usually starts as a small enterprise in a community that has no facilities and for which the community is grateful when it starts. The standard, however, quickly change and as soon as that station, programs are judged against the programs made in other larger centres or other parts of the world somehow or other in the viewers mind the disparity between the ability of the small station and the large organization gets lost in the mist and pretty soon the community is not just asking for a local service; it is asking for parity with the kind of services that large cities and large communities have.

At least, that has been the history of broadcasting in this country and it has contributed to the raising of the standards of broadcasting generally. But at the point when this pressure is felt, in many cases depending on the size of the community and the resources of the people who have pioneered, they can go a long distance to satisfying the community's need. They can join the networks which will increase the capacity to give a good programming service; but sooner or later they come to the point where they cannot really provide very much more, and yet the demands have increased. The demands are from viewers and to some extent the demands are from regulars, who quite rightly want to see the over-standards increased in this country; and it is at the point where, I think, the pressure becomes inescapable for many small stations. We are at that point in many small stations today, I think, and we will see an increase in this kind of pressure and for that reason an increase in amalgamation in broadcasting in the future.

Mr. Fortier: So that in your vision of things to come in the communications world in Canada, there will be no room eventually for the small man, will there?

Mr. Griffiths: "No room" is a sweeping statement. In the long run even in big companies a man and his stamp on the program is really the characteristic of the program, so that individuals become very important, but they become more important in the creative process than they do in the managerial or the entrepreneur nature of broadcasting.

Some of the programs that people watch have the unmistakable stamp of an individual on them and certainly an individual's participation in broadcasting in this way, both as an organizer and as a performer, will continue, but I think that the backstage boys' days are less and less.

Mr. Fortier: Broadcasting, as you say in the paper which you have just read, and giving it as a reason for your company becoming public—it is a public thing?

Mr. Griffiths: That is right.

Mr. Fortier: You are leasing or renting public property so far as television and radio are concerned. Would you view favourable the government becoming more involved in the field of communications?

Let me explain what I am trying to get at. Instead of having one CBC, having maybe two or three or four government-owned communications networks to insure that as broad a base of people as conceivable could participate in the development of the industry?

Mr. Griffiths: I am not sure that governments inevitably move in that direction in broadcasting. They have not in many countries. The activities of governments in many countries have limited the participation, often to the benefit of the government, I do not really look forward to seeing any increase in government as such participating in broadcasting. I see a role for public subsidy and public participation. I take it that is what you mean by government?

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Griffiths: ... in the hardware aspects of broadcasting. There are some parts of our country which are simply uneconomic regions in terms of delivering programs to them. They are in the far north or they are difficult to get at and I think that if we are going to operate as a federal organization in this country, then the whole country, as a whole, has to eventually accept the responsibility for providing some parity in service; but I would like to see the functioning of the programming as much as possible out of government hands.

Mr. Fortier: Out of the CBC?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I worked for many years in the CBC and I think that without the CBC in this country broadcasting would be in a pretty sorry mess, but I think it is being demonstrated that there are alternatives to the CBC and perhaps they are more efficient.

I would like to see more of the CBC resources being spent on programs and less on organization and such like. To me, in a sense, participation by governments and public bodies tends to multiply this organizational complex and as we are seeing with the CBC—as the President of the CBC testified yesterday before the CRTC—the only way, in such circumstances that a corporation, if its income is frozen, can cope with this situation is to reduce the quality of its service. That may include reducing the complexity of its organization, but it is the quality of its service through its program service that the viewers most readily see.

I think there is a different pressure on private broadcasters and there may be a different set of standards also. I am not for the moment speaking about standards which I think can develop but I am speaking about the simple efficiency of using machines and people who make programs. I think, considering our circumstances in Canada, with the need we have, we should be making every effort to be as efficient as we can in making programs, radio and television, or for cable in this country.

I just feel from my experience working in a public organization and now in a private organization and for a while in a sort of quasi-public private organization in Great Britain, that the best hope for this is to keep the participation of governments to a minimum in broadcasting.

Mr. Fortier: So that you do not envisage that the CBC would develop on a course which will be parallel with all the "public" corporations such as Bushnell?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, broadcasting is changing very rapidly today. The CBC does some kinds of programs which need to be done in this country, which would not be otherwise done.

The Chairman: For example?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, as an example, an opera that costs $175,000 to produce or the Olympic Games, where it is difficult to recover the full cost of the production.

Mr. Fortier: Is that a role which the CBC should continue to play?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, you use the word "CBC" because that is what we have today as an organization. I think that we need to use money to subsidize the production of programs that Canadians need and want, but there are alternative ways of financing these other than through an organization such as the CBC.

Cable operators today are charging their subscribers a fee for delivering a service which for the most part they can already receive by putting up an antenna; but people seem to be cheerfully willing to pay $50 or $60 a year for that service.

We used to think in Canada that a licence was a pretty unpopular form of collecting money and the Government certainly found that to be the case, but the cable operators are demonstrating that people will pay money for something that they value, and it does seem to me that there are alternatives to the CBC in financing on this kind of a subscription basis.

I am not suggesting a licence. I am simply suggesting a subscription basis of payment for television or radio. I think this may solve some of our other problems which have affected the broadcasting industry for some time.

Mr. Fortier: Do you not run the risk of ending up with the general public subsidizing those uneconomical ventures, uneconomical from the point of view of the private broadcaster?

Mr. Griffiths: Who does that now? The public is subsidizing now and so I see no difference in that, if those programs are going to be made. One has to judge that programs—not necessarily of $150,000, but there will certainly be uneconomical programs that should be made in this country and for that matter, private broadcasters make many of those programs today.

Mr. Fortier: With the added resources that will be available to corporations such as yours, do you not think this is an area where obligations will go with the responsibility?

Mr. Griffiths: Yes, I think so and I think quite rightly, as a matter of fact.

It is not an easy road to set out to make programs, whether they are expensive or cheap—nobody wants to make programs that people reject or do not want. There is no real index to that acceptance, based on the cost of the program. You can make simple and easily made programs which people find essential and want. You can also make very costly programs which they reject. That relates to the skill of the person who plans the program and his motivation, but I think that we have in this country a broadcasting system—this may not be your question—that is financed partly by public subsidy and partly by advertising revenue, both for the CBC and for the private industry. The characteristic of our broadcasting system in this country is that it is financed in this way. If you think of the total, the CBC, the private, everything as our system, described by the Broadcasting Act, it is financed in this way.

I have come to the conclusion that advertiser financed broadcasting is an inefficient way to finance broadcasting but that is simply my conclusion after some time spent . . .

Mr. Fortier: Should the CBC get out of commercial television?

Mr. Griffiths: I think it would be fatal for them. I think they would have very little relevancy if they did that. At least the advertiser keeps one toe of the CBC foot on the ground.

Mr. Fortier: But they derive so little income in an event, if you look at the total picture.

Mr. Griffiths: $30,000,000 out of $200,000,000.

Mr. Fortier: $20,000,000 to $25,000,000.

Mr. Griffiths: They actually got $40,000,000, they said yesterday.

The Chairman: Was that both television and radio?

Mr. Griffiths: Yes.

The Chairman: $38,000,000 and $2,000,000.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: You make much of the point, Mr. Griffiths, in your vision, which is very adequately expressed in your two briefs, that the medium is changing.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes, it is.

Mr. Fortier: Although you do say that cable and television, as we know it today, are complementary. You make much of the fact that people are looking for a wider choice of programs, so, given these two premises, the changing in the media and the objective of wider choice of programs, what is the over-all message going to be, if I may use a McLuhanist term?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, one could speculate.

Mr. Fortier: I am sure you have speculated in the Board Room.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. I find myself speculating and being hounded out of the Board Room but I persist. I also find myself speculating in public meetings along with the President of the CBC and he hounds me out of the room, so he seems to have very little interest in my speculation.

The Chairman: Here today you are perfectly free. Nobody is going to hound you out of the room.

Mr. Griffiths: I do not feel menaced. I do think if we were free to, in a sense, organize broadcasting—I think your question is “How would one go about it? What could its promise be?”

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Griffiths: For the moment let us talk about television broadcasting. That seems to be the part of broadcasting that occupies most people's waking hours at the moment.

Put the case that you had a 20 or 25 channel system. We know we can make these systems; that technically is quite practical to do it. What we have not yet decided is what are we going to put on the system, on all the channels; but put the case that we have the technical ability and we will determine that we are going to make such a system and we are going to apply it to the country and it is going to become our broadcasting system in this country.

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Griffiths: It would probably cost Canadians from $150 to $200 a year, each household. That would produce about enough money to operate a 20 channel system, somewhere between $1 billion and a half and $2 billion a year. Much, much more than is now being spent on television production.

If you had to set out to make this—just to give you an idea—20 or 25 channel system, that would require every 24 hours somewhere between 800 and 900 hours of programs. Now, that is on a 24-hour continuous basis.

Supposing one of the practical things might be we could repeat more programs so that viewing could be more suited to the convenience of the people rather than the convenience of schedulers. So let us say in every 24 hours we decided we would repeat every program once, so we have reduced the amount of original programming needed to say 400 hours.

At the present time if one took the program output of all the three Canadian networks, one French and two English, we produce rather less than 40 hours a day, so we are looking about at a ten times increase in programming. Now, more than that is made because stations make other programs but I think on a network basis. What I would see really in a 24 channel system or a 25 channel system is say 10 of these channels being English and 10 of them being French and 5 channels being in the language that would be appropriate in a regional or a local sense, so you would have a combination of a great deal of national material in two languages and a great increase in locally available material produced regionally or locally.

Mr. Fortier: You consumed the B & B Report in a very short time.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. I think I anticipated that part of it. I think that if we had a system like that we should re-organize the basis of our present cable scheduling. We would not then be picking up at random stations from the United States or Canada or whatever and relaying the whole of the schedules, if you want, on a horizontal basis, a, b, c and d.

This system would mean that the operators of the system would be responsible for all the programming that has to be included on it, which would mean that they could carry all of the American programs and all of the Chinese programs.

Really 400 hours of programming, just as an aside, is rather more than the total available program source on any given day that we could presently get, if there were no restrictions from where we could take our programs; so it not only means an increase in Canadian production, it means a great increase in real production which really could contribute to the richness of a system.

Now, if we have this richness, and let us say the money to afford it, we could organize that button 'a' would not be station 'a', it could be the news channel. Button 'b' could be sports. Button 'c' could be children and button 'd' could divide up the day in a vertical sense and have much of this material being repeated. The news channel would be constantly updated so that whenever you wanted to see the news, you'd push the button and you would see what was currently available.

I think people could then make their own schedules up. They could choose what they like. They could organize their lives and I think that would be a better kind of a broadcasting system than we presently have. It would be a better broadcasting system than anybody presently has, so if you ask for a vision, there is a vision.

Mr. Fortier: Given this choice, which you know better than I do is not far away, what acceptance in this spectrum of vertical channels will American programs have vis-à-vis all-Canadian-content stations?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, it would not be that. You would not label channels U.S., Canadian or Icelandic or whatever it was. You would label them as drama, you would label them as sports and they would be whatever it was. There would be a mixture.

Mr. Fortier: Well, perhaps I did not put my question correctly.

Mr. Griffiths: But the point really is that even under this system there is no way of avoiding the fact that eventually Canadian programs have to stand on their own feet in the viewer's home, in the privacy of his home where he can exercise his choice in a kind of freedom that he may not even admit publicly.

I know many M.P.'s who in the daytime advocate Canadian programs and in the evening go back and watch U.S. programs. Perhaps it is even true of Senators.

The Chairman: The members of this Committee have no free evenings!

Mr. Fortier: What you are saying is: given the quality of the programs Canadians will look at Canadian content. Is that correct?

Mr. Griffiths: I am quite convinced of that.

Mr. Fortier: Your experience and your analysis lead you to that conclusion?

Mr. Griffiths: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: So it is really, as you say in your brief, a question of volume and production. The more production there is the more of a chance there is that there will be some good programs.

Mr. Griffiths: It is not just quantity, it is quality and the quality really more than anything relates to people. It relates to having good programs and being able to keep good people and not losing them possibly to other countries and to a great extent if we had a busy, creative process, such as I am describing, we would be more likely to keep our people in this country. We might even attract a few back. We might even attract a few Americans, who are talented, to make programs for Canadians.

Mr. Fortier: In this concept of things of which you have spoken you based your remarks on television and cable; what is the future of radio in this field, in this world, because I notice you have made an offer to purchase some radio stations?

Mr. Griffiths: Yes, we have made an offer recently but I am afraid through no fault of ours we are not going to be able to go through with it.

The Chairman: I was going to say we would be very interested in your vision of radio. You have given us your views on television. What do you see for radio?

Mr. Griffiths: I am afraid I do not call myself an expert in radio. I started in radio broadcasting but all honesty I think television is a more interesting medium and I think most Canadians think that way about it, but radio has an interesting and changing role.

First of all I would say that I see radio programs to some extent being distributed in a somewhat similar way as cable programs, or taped television programs on cable.

At the present time, as you know, most cable companies do carry FM channels on their systems and more could be available. So, I see that as a way of distributing radio programs in a technical sense, and this may well solve some of the technical problems that AM stations are having particularly in large cities, where the rising level of electrical interference is making radio listening harder and harder. It is driving people, in a technical sense, to forms of broadcasting such as FM which are less susceptible to interference and where the possibility of reception is improved; but I see radio becoming the part of broadcasting that is most acceptable to interested groups. I see it becoming much more a community service than it is now. I do not mean reading listeners' letters on the air and dedicating gramophone records.

Mr. Fortier: Is that not mainly what they are doing today?

Mr. Griffiths: Unfortunately that is true but I think so far there has been little access to the radio waves for minority groups in the country, in the community. It is not wholly the fault of radio operators. In many cases, and I suppose even in the majority of cases, the reason is that the minority groups do not understand the power they have to demand access. I think as they do they will become more conscious of this, and broadcast is going to take on the characteristics of the community where instead of perhaps tearing down computer centres, they occupy the radio stations or even peacefully go in and take part in radio broadcasting in order to put their position before a wider group of people, and I think this is a proper use of radio.

The service aspects of radio are obvious. We are a mobile population. It is more difficult to ride a bicycle watching a television screen; these things are obvious, and for that reason in a sense radio services will continue, but I think that radio broadcasting has gone through a period when it was lethargic and really was recovering from the shock of having been walloped by television. It is largely through that period now and I have seen actually more progress in radio broadcasting schedules and innovations in the last three or four years than I have seen in television.

The Chairman: Mr. Hartford who is the President of CRB Ltd. was here yesterday. He did not say to this Committee—I would have liked to have asked him but we did not have time—he said elsewhere, I think somewhere last week that in his opinion ten years from now AM radio would be all talk and FM radio would be all music.

Now, I may not be quoting him correctly but that is the way CP reported it. Would you comment on that? Will AM radio be all talk in ten years?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I do not see any reason why it should not. It does seem to me that technically FM is well suited to music. It is just as well suited to talk as far as I can see. I really see a decline in value of AM broadcasting. I think in the long run that FM broadcasting is going to be the kind of radio broadcasting that takes place.

The Chairman: Mr. Tietolman said yesterday that an FM station is an AM station operator's conscience.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, that is at the present time, and God knows that many AM stations' consciences need to have some kind of outlet but I think that we really do not have to look at it this way. If we only had FM receivers, we would listen to radio on FM and if we did, we would be rather more pleased with the results, I think.

The Chairman: I wonder while we are taking a rather futuristic look . . .

Mr. Griffiths: I might say in that respect that within a comparatively short time the larger part of our population is going to be living in urban areas, which are quite well suited to FM (the range is less than AM). Our population is adjusting to that purpose and as the population increases in the large areas, of course the incidence of interference increases.

The Chairman: While Mr. Fortier is preparing himself for a new line of questions and while we are still looking into the future, may I ask you the kind of question I am sure you did not expect to be asked. Your reply will be off the cuff, but will be of great interest to the Committee. Can you project the future for the next ten years for the daily newspaper industry in Canada? I realize that is not something that concerns you every day but I am sure you must have thought of it?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I read the newspapers every day and I notice they are changing.

The Chairman: Would you explain that?

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Griffiths did say something about newspapers.

The Chairman: Yes, and I am going to get back to that in a moment.

Mr. Fortier: Uncomplicated by newspaper or magazine publishing or manufacturing. That is your world of broadcasting.

Mr. Griffiths: At present.

Mr. Fortier: At present?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I think we rely less on newspapers. We do not rely on the newspaper any longer to bring us the news. We rely on the newspaper to enlarge the news and to tell us what selected people think about the news and to expand on the news; the news itself now I think is more swiftly delivered by radio and increasingly by television, with satellites delivering from country to country.

If one has the choice of seeing it and in a sense taking part vigorously in it, I think it is preferable to reading about it but nonetheless newspapers must have a role.

I think their role in the next few years is increasingly going to be this one. They are going to be supplementary to the everyday lives. I do not think we are going to feel cut off in a sense from the rest of the world if for some reason or other there is a strike or Mr. Kierans does not get his problems sorted out and some papers do not get delivered. I think that we are going to see great changes in the newspapers. The newspapers themselves recognize this. This is why I think many newspapers are now looking at broadcasting in a new way. They used to think of them as simply ancillary or complementary or even a protective medium for their operation of what was to them the most important thing, running the press. I do not think they do any more.

I think they see now the possibilities of their papers being delivered electronically. They see the possibility of their papers supplementing what people hear and say rather than reading about it for the first time. I think they see that newspapers are going to get smaller in size. Perhaps this is not a good answer to your question but I see newspapers continuing to be involved in broadcasting because for lively newspapers who want to take part in the life of the country, broadcasting is going to be perhaps a more exciting place to be involved than the cold black and white print.

The Chairman: But in the television era you envisaged a few minutes ago, there still would be the daily newspapers, would there?

Mr. Griffiths: I think so.

The Chairman: In this vertical concept.

Mr. Griffiths: Oh yes, I think so.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Griffiths, now that you have described what you see in the Bushnell crystal ball can you tell us how you relate . . .

Mr. Griffiths: I have not really described very much about the Bushnell crystal ball.

Mr. Fortier: Maybe in my own mind I have related your reasoning and your utterances to your company vision.

Mr. Griffiths: That is right.

Mr. Fortier: I do not think I am wrong in so doing am I?

Mr. Griffiths: That is right.

Mr. Fortier: How do you view the most recent CRTC pronouncements or proposals or guidelines? How do they fit into your concept? Are you happy with them?

The Chairman: Which ones?

Mr. Griffiths: Are you speaking of the Canadian content ones or the cable ones or . . .

Mr. Fortier: Let us start with the Canadian content one and then we will move on.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, we have put a brief in to the CRTC. It has not been heard yet. I do not mind telling you what it is. It is really that we endorse the principle of an increase in Canadian content. We lament the absence in the regulation of any incentive. It is really a blunt approach to quality. Really it is simply a continuation of the kind of regulation that has been in force since we have been in existence. Really up until now it has been a quantitative requirement that you had to have 55 per cent content over-all and you had to have 40 per cent between 6:00 and midnight. It really did not matter what kind of programs you had as long as they were Canadian. You equated quality with a symphony orchestra in terms of what was the program.

Somehow or other we think that is not a good approach. It has not really resulted in improved Canadian programs and we would like to see some incentives to make better programs fit in to the regulations rather than a purely quantitative approach.

Mr. Fortier: What would be the form of those incentives?

Mr. Griffiths: You could have several ways, I suppose. We have outlined eight or nine or ten points that we think might be worth looking at.

You could have a point system. We do not recommend it in our brief but there are some people who think that you could simply devote a minimal amount of a station's income to the making of programs and simply say that if a station made $1,000,000, 25 per cent of it had to go to make programs and it didn't matter how many they made. They could make more or less but spend that much money.

I think that is fraught with some difficulties but it is an approach and it might result in better quality programs.

We have not endorsed that, as I say. What we have, in fact, said is that perhaps you could see the development of a point system where, if there was an increase of Canadian requirement laid on the stations, stations could make that requirement by making fewer, better programs or more lesser programs so that the judgment of the value of the programs should really not relate to the amount of money but to the resources and ability of the station; considering that some stations are small and have few resources and other stations are large and have many and the networks have still more.

We think that might be an approach and a simplified way of getting at that might be to say that any program that is made in Canada is 100 per cent Canadian; if you make a specially good program, a bonus let us say, that takes a lot of effort and money to do it, that may be 200 per cent Canadian for purposes of an incentive, and that if you devoted that much energy and work to it, you should earn that.

That would be applied to the over-all requirements which the CRTC would set, the requirements to increase Canadian quantity, but the quantity would be to some extent, computed by considerations of quality.

Mr. Fortier: Do you agree . . .

Mr. Griffiths: I have not explained that very well but that is the emphasis we would like to see on it.

Mr. Fortier: Should this accent on Canadian content be a responsibility of the CRTC, the regulatory agency, to dictate to organizations?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, the CRTC, has been appointed by Parliament to implement the Broadcasting Act and the Broadcasting Act may be a little vague in the quality of the service expected but I certainly do not doubt that the CRTC is the instrument that should enforce it so in answer to your question, I think they are logical.

Mr. Fortier: If we may touch upon the Canadian content with respect to radio stations for a few minutes. Do you think by and large radio stations in Canada will have the difficulties which the CAB forecasts in meeting this 30 per cent minimum content?

Mr. Griffiths: I do not think either radio or television stations will have the difficulty that the CAB foresees.

Mr. Fortier: You think this is not a well-founded fear?

Mr. Griffiths: I think this is the first step in negotiations.

Mr. Fortier: You are a member of the CAB, are you?

Mr. Griffiths: That is right.

Mr. Fortier: Do you endorse the position which they have made known with respect to these difficulties?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, we have not publicly not endorsed it. That is perhaps not the answer you are seeking.

The Chairman: That is really not an answer to the question, no.

Mr. Fortier: I confess that it is not. That sounds as if it was whispered by Mr. O'Connor. It is a legal answer.

Mr. Griffiths: No, he did not. Our brief is not in conformity with the CAB brief on the matter of Canadian content. I think you should take our brief as our position.

Mr. Fortier: Yes. Why have not broadcasters, of which you have been one for some time, in the past either in the field of radio or in the field of television offered more Canadian content? What has prevented them from doing so?

Mr. Griffiths: You have, as a listener and a viewer.

Mr. Fortier: But I am not going to change, am I?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, if you do not change, then you cannot really expect them to change.

Mr. Fortier: I mean, you are going to give me a wider choice of programming now.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: And eventually you are going to give me the quality to which you referred earlier. Surely if that had been available five years ago—I will send the ball back to you—if you had made it available, I would have looked at it.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, you reassure me because—I am not lamenting this—but as a broadcaster it is a little heart-breaking to see the reaction to special efforts that you make to make what you think is an important or attractive or a purely Canadian program and to have the telephone lines clogged up with people simply asking "Where is the movie that was supposed to be on?"

I am not defending myself in that because we will go on doing that but I do say this: that the reason more Canadian programming, I think, has not been made in the past has been—there are several reasons. First of all it is much more expensive to make and with the added expense does not come any increase in audience.

If you have an important part of the broadcasting system of the country dependent upon advertising revenue, the chief thing that the advertiser is concerned about is as large an audience as he can get. Advertiser revenue is really not conducive to development of minority programming or even high quality choice programming. That does not mean that some advertisers do not like to see their advertisements in a high quality program but in the main the advertiser is chiefly concerned about the numbers. He is less concerned about the content. He used to be concerned about the content, in radio particularly and to some extent in television. He used to dominate the choice in programs. That battle has long ago been won. He now has very little to say about the choice of program. He exercises his control by simply buying or not buying any programs that have big or small audiences so that to some extent that is an answer to your question.

Another answer to your question is that some broadcasters are not interested particularly in making Canadian programs. Some broadcasters are really not very interested in making any kind of programming. They think of themselves more like a printing press turning out stuff and not being required to write. Not all broadcasters fortunately are that way but there are some who prefer to take their services from the network and do the least that they can themselves.

Sometimes those are people in small communities which have very small resources.

I think that probably the last reason that more programs have not been made has been the lack of inability of broadcasters on the whole to maintain the people of skill and capability to make the programs. Some stations the engineer has the most important place and the accountant is the next person and the sales manager somewhere in between and the last person on the totem pole is the producer.

Mr. Fortier: If I can summarize your answer...

Senator Everett: May I have a supplementary question?

The Chairman: Do you want to summarize it first? Why do you not summarize and then we will have Senator Everett ask his supplementary question.

Mr. Fortier: I think it was too easy an answer for you to say that I am collectively responsible.

Mr. Griffiths: I am thinking of you as a viewer or listener really, because in the long run you dominate...

Mr. Fortier: That is the way I interpreted it, but now I have listened to your full answer I suggest to you, you told us it was the advertiser—it was you who was responsible rather than I the viewer.

Mr. Griffiths: No.

Mr. Fortier: I do not think it is the chicken and the egg.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, you summarized it. I think I am correct in the sense that the broadcaster is responsible to you. Many of you prefer to watch American programs in preference to perhaps Canadian programs of lesser appeal or even of equal appeal. So, to that extent you are culpable. To the rest of it the broadcaster is culpable.

Senator Everett: Mr. Griffiths, can you give us two or three examples of Canadian programs that Bushnell has created over the last short while where the phone lines have been clogged when they ran?

Mr. Griffiths: They are usually special programs and the reason, of course, is that you have to pre-empt an existing scheduled program.

Senator Everett: I understand the basis of it.

Mr. Griffiths: But the type of program . . .

Senator Everett: I am thinking of special shows that have happened that Bushnell has created.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I should say perhaps the worst example, I guess, that I can quote to you is not one that we made ourselves but which gives you some idea of the depravity of viewers. On the day that Senator Kennedy was assassinated, we threw out our schedule and simply carried the story, from the United States mostly, and inserted what we could ourselves.

We had very many viewers who called up that day and demanded the regular schedule back, as an example.

That is not really the question that you are asking it in a sense, if you could imagine that the viewers could do that on that kind of an incident, you can imagine what they would do if we were to cancel a movie and put on a program that dealt with pollution in our area, as an example.

Senator Everett: Quite right. I think we understand the syndrome. What I would like to hear is the personal frustration that you at Bushnell felt, the examples of where you created a Canadian program and the phone lines have been clogged because of this unfortunate tendency of the Canadian public.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, most recently we had a series of programs that started last autumn which has a small but noisy audience called "Up Against the Wall".

This is a program that is really designed to be done and broadcast for a segment of our society that on the whole does not watch television; drop-outs, hippies, the coffee house habitués and such like.

Mr. Ernest L. Bushnell, Chairman of the Board, Bushnell Communications Limited: Senators.

Mr. Griffiths: Senators.

Mr. Fortier: They were included in the first description.

Mr. Griffiths: We started this program putting posters into coffee houses around the city and saying "Here's your chance to take part in broadcasting. You criticized. Now come and see what you will do yourself."

Out of this we have turned up 50 or 60 people which, after they realized what had to be done, dropped down to maybe half and from that core of people we have produced a program each week, with the assistance of a producer who has been seconded to the program and by large it has been a program which has come up from those sources.

In some respects most of these people regarded broadcasting as an instrument for social change and they have, one way or another, with skill or without skill, tried to use it in this way but sometimes their language has not been choice. On one of the programs a four letter word that is not usually heard on television was used.

The Chairman: It was used 19 times according to the survey.

Mr. Griffiths: According to the Toronto papers. The Toronto papers as a matter of fact varied—. One story said it was used three times. The next columnist said it was used nineteen times and the next columnist said it was twenty-three times.

The Chairman: What was the actual number?

Mr. Griffiths: It was used three times, twice innocently and once obscenely.

The Chairman: We were going to ask you about that particular program so if Senator Everett will allow us . . .

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. I should say this program is a program that has excited many viewers, people who want us to take the program off the air, not because of the language but because of the ideas that were contained in the program and some of the statements and concerns of these people.

We have persisted. We have kept the program on the air but that program has occupied the entire energies of one producer all season long, and a considerable group of other people, and these people in a sense are feeling the frustrations that I am describing, as an example.

Senator Everett: Well, only because they are appealing to a special interest audience.

Mr. Griffiths: As a matter of fact that is not the biggest audience. The biggest audience appears to be middle-class liberals and they are the ones who seem to take the greatest exception, small "I" liberals.

Senator Everett: Well, maybe we can deal then with the specific program.

Mr. Griffiths: That is right.

The Chairman: Why do you not tell us about the four-letter program? A lot has been written about it and a lot has been said about it. We have lots of background material.

Mr. Griffiths: Would you like me to put the four-letter word into the record?

The Chairman: As you wish.

Mr. Bushnell: No.

The Chairman: Seriously, much has been written. We know all of the things that have been written. What really happened?

Senator Kinnear: I don't know the name of the program. I would like to hear the name of the program.

Mr. Griffiths: The program was called "Up Against the Wall". On this particular program, on this incident, a young film director, producer, was being interviewed by two of the people who are regularly on the program. He makes underground films and as he was being interviewed, you started to see him and then you saw the people who were interviewing him and then as the interview went on we switched, or the producer switched the actual film he had been making so we were hearing the voices over and seeing the film.

The film was quite an innocent film. It consisted mostly of a curtain in a window being moved by a breeze. He was describing the symbolism of his film and the film dealt with love—all kinds. Deep natural kinds of love and casual kinds of love in which affection is not involved, and in describing his film he used quite accurately, without any obscenity, I would think, a common verb that described copulation because it related to his picture and it was the use of that word which caused public attention.

At the end of the program another word was used, more common word, and this was contained in another segment of the program in which they had been dealing with pollution and the pictures that you saw on the screen were pictures of garbage-strewn streams, and all of the pictures of pollution one could find around in any big city, while a voice over was reading a poem which had appeared the week before in the New York Review of Books by a young American poet; and it used the word "bullshit" in the sense that anybody says they are doing something about pollution. "Governments say so. It is bullshit." And it used it in that way, which is the vulgar way you often hear it on the street. People objected to this uncivil in the program too.

I personally do not take exception to that word in that context any more than I took any exception when I saw it in the New York Review but many of our viewers felt personally offended by the word.

Now, we compounded that. Those, I think, were innocent uses of the words. The next day we compounded our problem by ourselves becoming worried, or our producer becoming worried, with the public reaction. There had been about seven or eight phone calls, I expect, ten maybe, and he decided that on a late night program that we were doing the following day he would bring the producer back and have the producer try to explain why they had done this.

On this program the interviewers used the words again and I think this use of the words was not defensible. I think there it was used as a method really to excite attention.

Mr. Fortier: Were you censured by the CRTC?

Mr. Griffiths: No, we have not been.

Mr. Fortier: You have not received any . . .

Mr. Griffiths: They asked to see the program, which we showed them. We have received no . . .

The Chairman: Perhaps I could interrupt at this point. You have been specifically critical on several points of the Toronto papers, so I hesitate to quote the Toronto paper but I am going to.

Mr. Griffiths: I am not critical. I am just amused.

The Chairman: Well, perhaps you could confirm the truth of this. This is Patrick Scott in a column which appeared—I have not got the date here but at the time he said:

“By Wednesday the word was out that several major advertisers had given the station an ultimatum and that old Ernie Bushnell himself had laid down the law. The obscenity must cease, said Bushnell, or he would withdraw both his name and his influence from the company he had founded.”

Mr. Griffiths: Why do you not ask Mr. Bushnell?

The Chairman: Fine, I will ask Mr. Bushnell. Is that true statement of affairs, Mr. Bushnell?

Mr. Bushnell: Yes.

The Chairman: That is short and to the point.

Mr. Bushnell: Mr. Chairman, if I may, the reason for is that I had a slight operation on my tongue a couple of weeks ago, which a great many people have been hoping for these many years.

Mr. Fortier: Do you foresee—again looking into the crystal ball; maybe I am asking you too many of these questions but I think this has relevance—the day where one of the regulatory channels people will be given opportunity of using words which they themselves may see fit, without fear of being censured by public opinion or by a body such as the CRTC?

Mr. Griffiths: I would like to think that would be the case. I certainly think there is not much future in trying to develop two kinds of language, one we use lightly on television or radio and one we use in our homes but obviously, if we choose to use it in our homes, we are making that election. If we put it on a television channel, we do not make that election and have no way of knowing that the word is going to be used, so if that word is used at the time when young children are listening, I can see some objection to that.

might add these other programs were at half-past eleven, midnight, so that might not have been the argument there.

until, I would like to see more contemporary language being used. I do not think it has to be obscene language. I think many of the words we think are obscene today may in two or three years not be. We use today words in common conversation which five or four years ago would not have been used, so the language is changing all the time and I hope that we will, as we try to enlarge the participation of our community of individuals within the community, keep a timing of contemporary attitude to contemporary language.

Mr. Fortier: Leaving aside words, what about pictures? Would you have any qualms, for example, about showing on any one of your stations tomorrow or CJOH today “I Am Curious, Yellow”?

Mr. Griffiths: Yes, I think I would.

Mr. Fortier: You would; why?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, personally I think “I Am Curious, Yellow” is a sex exploitation film and I would have no objection—I am not objecting to scenes of nudity or copulation or anything of that sort. I think that picture was made with this purpose in mind and for that reason I think the values that are involved in that picture are not those that I would like to see on my station, but I would have no objection and I would fight with the Chairman of my Board to put on a film that might have similar scenes in it if they were in a sense—I will not say done in innocence, but done with some artistry and some purpose other than sheer exploitation.

Mr. Bushnell might have a different view and it is very difficult to legislate in these matters because everybody’s objection has the same weight, so to speak.

Mr. Fortier: You know how this movie and others like it are playing to packed houses in Canada and the United States.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: So that there are obviously a number of people who wish to see this sort of thing.

Mr. Griffiths: That is part of the double standard I was describing.

Senator Everett: What is your situation now regarding restricted movies on television?

Mr. Griffiths: There are no movies that are restricted. There is no censorship on television, not even provincial censorship.

Senator Everett: So the fact it was restricted by the provincial censor board for a showing in movie houses would in no way affect you?

Mr. Griffiths: No such requirement, I believe.

Senator McElman: Mr. Chairman, I believe Mr. Bushnell would like to comment on this question of censorship.

The Chairman: Certainly.

Mr. Bushnell: May I just add that I was listening last night and I noted that the CTV network announced that it would be showing a movie the next Wednesday evening which they advised would be for adults mainly.

There is no censorship but I think it is only right—I do not disagree with Mr. Griffiths on this—that people should be given fair warning of what to expect.

Mr. Griffiths: We customarily do that on a program . . .

Mr. Bushnell: Yes.

Mr. Griffiths: . . . where we have some doubts about a movie. For instance, we will put up a slide beforehand noting this.

Senator Everett: Have you shown a restricted movie yet?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I think we must have but I cannot think of any offhand. Some of the Italian movies, 8½ . . . The Women was, I think, restricted from some provinces in the country. Yes, I think, is the answer to your question. I do not know what numbers.

Senator Everett: In those provinces in which they were restricted.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. Well, we will, of course, only show it in this one. I do not know of any movie that actually succeeds in being banned in all provinces.

Senator Everett: I expect that is right. Do you think you have shown a movie that was restricted in Ontario to Ontario audiences?

Mr. Griffiths: I cannot think of any. Mr. O'Connor reminds me that The Women, for instance was a movie with Sophia Loren, I think, made in Italy. That was restricted to over 18's in the movie houses and that film we have shown, as an example.

The Chairman: At the end of your brief you are talking about your future plans. You say . . .

Mr. Griffiths: May I just say something?

The Chairman: Yes, of course.

Mr. Griffiths: On the matter of, for instance, in our news program we had one feature I can remember quite a long film—a small little documentary on nudist colony that was operating not far from Ottawa in the Laurentians and showed pictures of nudity in this, not depraved pictures, but we accurately in documentary sense gave a picture of that colony and had, I might say, no objections from our viewers.

The Chairman: At the end of your brief, in your presentation, you said that it is this decision by Bushnell's part that has caused speculation in the press and to some extent apprehension in the Toronto papers. Was that apprehension equal in all the Toronto papers or were you thinking of one paper more than another?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, we have had some apprehension in all three papers. The Telegram customarily views with alarm. The Star has from time to time, but I think perhaps a little less so, and George Bain wrote a series of articles some time ago . . .

The Chairman: I want to ask you about Mr. Bain.

Mr. Griffiths: . . . which in a sense were less directed at Bushnell but had some concern for the company's plans.

The Chairman: When you say the Telegram customarily views with alarm, that leads me to ask you about the rivalry—I did not say "hostility", I said "rivalry"—which is reputed to exist between yourself and John Bassett. Is this just newspaper talk or is there a real rivalry?

Mr. Griffiths: There is no rivalry between John Bassett and myself. I had not known John Bassett really until he became involved in television but I've come to know him and I have a great respect for him and I think if I were choosing a broadcasting partner in Canada I would choose John Bassett as one of the people.

But John Bassett owns or controls a station in the largest city in English-speaking Canada and the CTV network headquarters is in that same city and to some extent the CTV has reacted in much the same way that the CBC has in that Toronto tends to dominate production of programs and the point of view.

A piece of news invariably, if it excites a Toronto columnist, will find its way on to television. If that same piece of news is interesting in Vancouver but not in all of Canada, it may not necessarily find itself in television, so Toronto does exert a disproportionate effect on broadcasting. To that extent there is a rivalry and we think that should be rectified, not only in the TV but in the CBC also.

The Chairman: As far as the CTV is concerned, am I correct in assuming you believe that CJOH is capable of originating more programs that could go on the networks than is presently the case?

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. It is our intention to offer more programs as we can make them to the network. We believe they will be of quality equal to any that may be produced any place else.

Now, the choice of programs in CTV is done by a network committee and I could not ask for, you know, a different basis of choice.

If we submit and Toronto submits and the people choose the Toronto programs, they must be better, but I cannot say that has been the reason up to now. The reason up to now is that Toronto has been in the first position to make the best programs and it has done so.

Mr. Fortier: Is the CTV network worth preserving?

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. I think so, without question. I think it is worth improving.

Senator Everett: I think it was Dalton Camp when he was here who said as cablevision becomes more pervasive and the number of channels that are utilized grows, the networks will die just the way the networks did in radio. Is that your view?

Mr. Griffiths: That is not quite the way Dalton Camp puts it. I think what will die is the kind of network organization that we have today. I think what will survive is the creative capacity of networks because obviously we have to make more programs so if networks consist of creative people and facilities, they will not only survive but they will increase.

On the basis of organizing programs—basically the CTV network is an organization to sell advertising in order to put on programs. I think the nature of broadcasting organizations is going to change and to that extent I think the networks are going to die.

I think the CBC will undergo somewhat similar changes although its purpose is not just for the organization of advertising sales or support. It does have other characteristics which are not necessarily ones that are needed in a different kind of system. Not all of CBC's employees are making programs.

Senator Everett: Did network radio die in the United States?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, no. It goes on today but certainly in a much different form. The number of networks was reduced with the increase in television.

It has been fairly difficult to run networks when sizable numbers of listeners really only listen in the early hours of the day and perhaps late at night. It is not a very economical basis for network operation. It is not like the days when radio networks really provided the basic cultural information and entertainment service in this country. They do not any longer.

Senator Everett: I am not sure what Stanley Burke was saying but I thought he was saying that cablevision would completely localize all television broadcasting.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, Stanley Burke has said some strange things from time to time and that may be one of them. I think cablevision certainly has the ability to provide increased local participation but I do not think it is limited to that. I think cablevision is capable of doing anything that conventional television is doing.

After all, it is the same thing. It is just a different form of distribution so that any visual signal you send down the line is going to have the same impact on the screen as one transmitted through the ether.

The Chairman: I do not want to ask you about all kinds of things that have happened in the past but this one is, I think, of interest to us and that is the hiring and retiring of Laurier LaPierre and Patrick Watson at the station.

Why precisely did they leave? There has been a great deal of newspaper comment and speculation but perhaps you could answer that and then I could ask you the next question.

Mr. Griffiths: We hired them for different reasons in a sense although they have been associated in the public minds together. We did not hire them in that way. Laurier LaPierre had been associated with the station for several years. I had been trying for several years to attract Patrick to our company because, in my opinion, he is one of the best broadcasters in Canada. We wanted to improve our capacity as programmers. My belief was and still is that Patrick would assist us to do that.

After several years of cogitation about it, Patrick agreed to come. He left, I think, because after some time of attempting to be both a creative person and an administrator he really came to the conclusion that it was the creative role that most interested him.

It was not a parting in dudgeon or anything of that nature but it was a quick decision he came to and made; one which I was sorry to see him make but one with which I sympathized. He is still an associate of ours and so is Laurier.

The Chairman: Why did George Bain leave?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, George had been a contracted journalist to us for three or four years and he left because, as he said, he wanted to write two or three or four articles which he did not think he could write if he was on the payroll of the station, and I respected his viewpoint.

It is my intention to offer him another contract as soon as he returns from Latin America. I do not know whether he will accept it.

The Chairman: I wonder if you could tell us about this. There was a controversial—I should not say “controversial”—there was an experimental news format involving Laurier and Patrick Watson in which the news included their own editorial viewpoints.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes.

The Chairman: It was an experiment.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes.

The Chairman: Could you tell us about it? We may be terribly interested in how it worked and presumably it has been abandoned; why?

Mr. Griffiths: Well I hope not all abandoned.

The Chairman: That is what we wanted to know.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, the news is changing considerably in broadcasting and it is changing, I suppose everywhere.

Up until fairly recently the concern of news broadcasters or stations making news broadcasts has been to deal with subjects objectively. The CBC is still concerned with this. I am less concerned with objectivity. I am more concerned with fairness. Even if you have a news staff which is trying its blindest to be objective, it can only exceed in being objective to the extent of its ability to be so or to the extent of the sources of its information.

We tend to think that the material carried in the Canadian press or American press is objective material but we all know anything that comes out of Vietnam through the Associated Press is not objective. It is from an American viewpoint.

The same is true of material coming out of many countries so for the same reasons we should not really expect objectivity in material originating in the country of people's attitudes to it; so we feel the experiment should be to put on a program that deals with the news as factually as we could and then let people's biases show and announce them as biases. I say “That is the position”, in the belief people are capable of making up their own minds and being critical or able to accept or reject arguments that they see advanced by personalities.

Now, to that extent this was an experiment. It did not work partly because the participation of the biases was uneven. Although we tried to set up various viewpoints, some people with viewpoints were better able to express their point of view than others with a different point of view but less ability to connect with people at home, and that probably is a continuing problem in trying to develop this kind of program.

We did find that over a period of time people start to connect with Patrick. He is a good communicator. He has a point of view. He was able to express his point of view and often to elicit information from other people and to some extent I think he was successful in keeping his own views in public notice so that you could allow for them. I think Laurier was less able to do that. Laurier was emotionally involved in many of the issues in which he dealt and his emotions showed. That is not necessarily a bad thing there are other emotionally involved people on the program but in some cases there were not, so to that extent the program was unbalanced and on occasion was unfair.

We still will carry on experimenting because we think that part of the problem is that people at home are not to rely, or now do rely, on electronic media for their news information. We have a greater responsibility as distributors of this information to try to assure the validity of the material that we transmit, and this includes improving our sources of material and not just taking the Canadian Press and not just taking AP, not just confirming middle-class liberal prejudices that most people have but in a sense trying to find a wider sphere and to require and to inject into our newscasts a wider segment of opinion.

In this respect this is the very opposite direction to the cold man who stands up and reads you "Here is the news," but we think this is a better development of the news and this is what we intend to persevere with.

Does that answer the question?

The Chairman: Yes. So your project has not been abandoned?

Mr. Griffiths: No.

The Chairman: Your policy continues.

Mr. Griffiths: I would welcome your reaction to this approach to the news or that of the Senators.

The Chairman: Are there other questions the Senators may have? Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: I have a few and maybe I should limit it to one.

The Chairman: All right.

Mr. Fortier: I think the members of the Committee should hear from Mr. Griffiths his reaction to the CRTC announcement of last Friday.

Mr. Griffiths: As far as cable is concerned?

Mr. Fortier: As far as the cable industry is concerned.

Mr. Griffiths: I see some cable people sitting in the room. They may shoot me as I leave the room but I took comfort in the CRTC's announcement.

Mr. Fortier: I cannot say that surprises me.

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I think that first of all it was an advance as far as some cable operators were concerned over what had been announced previously. Up until then there had been an absolute ban on the importation of stations by microwave and this did permit some limited importation for some cities cut off from the American border. This represents an improvement in their broadcasting choice. To that extent it was good. They may not have had the full range of stations that were available but at least it was something.

I also took consolation in that I thought the language dealing with networking was improved and more positive than any announcement that the CRTC have made in the past, and the system of priority which it announced as a means by which wider services could be incorporated in the service, having accommodated the priorities, was to me a logical one.

As a matter of fact it was along the lines of some suggestions we had made to the CRTC in consultation ourselves.

Personally I think the question of blackout is one that the CRTC itself will be looking at some more, if there are practical problems. I really see no point in blacking out stations on the cable in a city like Toronto where access to those stations is generally available anyhow. I think the CRTC are open to that sort of suggestion so really I think that this was most encouraging statement that the CRTC have made on cable to date. I was surprised at some of the reaction that I saw of cable TV.

Mr. Fortier: They are going in the right direction, as far as you are concerned.

Mr. Griffiths: I think what CRTC is going to have to do is to measure these announcements. I think they must take the consequences of these announcements.

Sometimes just thinking aloud can cause the most diabolical complications to people. One company was ready to go out with a public underwriting and the floor fell out from underneath them. I do not think the CRTC thought that one through enough. I think they will have to in future as they start to depend on the public more and more for financing but in general, these are my comments.

Senator Everett: There are many questions which come to my mind but I have just one supplementary question. It seems to me in your brief you mention the eventual failure of the advertising financing system in Canada to provide as varied a television service as viewers want. You talk about the tremendous enlargement of the number of channels that are going to be available and the responsibility evolving on the cable operator.

Mr. Griffiths: You are wondering how I made that translation?

Senator Everett: No. I was just wondering when I read the CRTC recommendations, it seems to me that they have given notice that they are not about to let that happen and that seems to be in conflict with your view.

I wonder if you would like to comment upon that?

Mr. Griffiths: Well, I do not ever expect to be wholly in harmony with the CRTC but perhaps...

Senator Everett: You sounded earlier as though you were.

Mr. Griffiths: I am from time to time; most of the time in fact. I think the CRTC understands that cable is going to be at some speed the main means of distribution of television broadcasting in this country.

What the CRTC has to face, and it is a very difficult thing, is that they do not want to preside over the liquidation of one system that has provided some kind of service before there is another system that can provide an equivalent or better service, and at the present time cable operators are neither able financially nor in terms of facilities or in their mental adjustment to the acceptance of their role in programming, to replace conventional broadcasting.

I think that is something that is going to have to develop over the next years. I think they will develop very quickly. When that develops, the speed with which that develops is the inverse to the speed with which the conventional system will disintegrate.

Senator Everett: Do you think the CRTC will be then forced to change its views?

Mr. Griffiths: I think the CRTC always is trying to be contemporary, or something in advance, or anticipating. I think the natural consequences of its action will be to revise its point of view. Its history to date has been that in terms of cable. I see no reason for it to change.

Senator Everett: In effect what you are saying is that their present policy is not viable in terms of the inevitable future of cablevision.

Mr. Griffiths: I think that and I think the CRTC say that themselves.

Senator Everett: Thank you.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Griffiths and Senators should perhaps say—not in the sense of apology but in the sense of explanation—we have felt, and I think you appreciate it, somewhat inhibited in asking you so many questions which would jeopardize you.

Mr. Griffiths: Not at all.

The Chairman: I was going to say notwithstanding those inhibitions which have been on our part, you have been very frank and very full and you have said many things which are terribly useful to us.

Perhaps I could read a quotation from one of the awful Toronto newspapers. This was the 28th February, 1970, an article which begins:

“‘Chief Troublemaker’ reads the black and white sign on Stuart Griffiths, desk high atop CJO Ottawa television station. The only trouble is that nobody but Griffiths seems to think it is a joke. For the past year Griffiths has been the man talked about, speculated upon and gossiped about by Canadian broadcaster.”

Of course, to be all those things you would have to be the busiest Canadian broadcaster and that is what we thought twice before asking you here, but I hope we have demonstrated by our approach we have been interested in your views and not simply the grand old man as it sometimes has been referred to.

Mr. Bushnell: May I make one comment.

The Chairman: Yes, of course.

Mr. Bushnell: It was I who bought that little picture for Mr. Griffiths. I would just like to clarify one thing if I may. I will only take a few minutes.

The Chairman: Do you want equal time on that?

Mr. Bushnell: No, not necessarily. Mr. Griffiths and I have not only been colleagues but very close friends for these many, many years.

When I made such a blunt reply in connection with a certain program and said “Yes”, that, I may say, was my personal reaction.

Mr. Griffiths and I and our colleagues, Mr. F. and others, sit down around the table and discuss these matters and I think it is my function as Chairman of the Board to bring such matters to attention of the Board. We brought this one particular incident to the attention of the Board. No one was rapped over the knuckles for what had been done but the Members of the Board said that so far as possible we should try to have these particular words, which were used, omitted from our programs.

Might I conclude by just making one further observation? It might be helpful to the members of the committee to know of the composition of our Board of Directors, now in number nine, initially seven; but of those seven, six are still the Directors who were appointed at the time that this company was given its charter.

They are a Chartered Accountant, Mr. Dunbar Bishop from Montreal. An economist, Dr. O. J. Firestone, who is I am sure well known to many of you, and is a resident of Ottawa and on the staff of the Ottawa University.

A motion picture theatre vice-president, Mr. David Greisdorf, again one of the members of our original shareholder's group.

An architect from Ottawa, Monsieur August Frigon-Martineau rather. I am looking back a long time when I mention Dr. Frigon.

A lady, who has recently joined our Board, Madam eanne Sauvé, a broadcaster and well known, I am sure, as a great Canadian citizen.

We have the Executive Vice-President of a large investment company, Mr. David Bulloch. And then three of us programmers, I would call it, broadcasters of some experience. Some of us learned our broadcasting prior to the advent of the CBC but three of us, one time or another in our respective careers, have been members of the staff of the CBC and they are Mr. Griffiths, our President and Managing Director, Mr. Faibish, the Executive Vice-President, and myself.

I would just like to say one further thing. I believe that some of you good people were able to visit our studios last night. I should have been there to welcome you but my doctor at the moment tells me to take things a little easier. That edifice, if I might call it that, is not built to do honour Ernie Bushnell. It is a national building and it is there for one purpose only and has been equipped for one purpose only—at considerable expense, I might add—to produce Canadian made programs.

Personally I have been through five, what might be called, crises in my career starting back with the Aird, Frigon, Beament Commission. We are still in business.

We accept any challenge that anyone can put before us. We look forward to the future with confidence.

Thank you.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Bushnell. Again Mr. Griffiths, thank you. We would have liked to ask Mr. Faibish some questions but time does not allow.

Thank you so very much for coming. I say to the Senators that in five minutes, at 4:30 we will receive the brief from Monarch Broadcasting Company.

The meeting is adjourned for five minutes.

—Short recess.

—ON RESUMING AT 4:30 p.m., April 16, 1970.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call the session to order. The remaining witness this afternoon is the Monarch Broadcasting Company Limited, CHAT in Medicine Hat. Here with me is Mr. Orv Kope, who is General Manager of CHAT Radio and CHAT-TV.

Mr. Kope has been at several hearings so I think he has some familiarity with the procedure we follow here.

You make an oral statement of ten, twelve or fifteen minutes and then we ask you some questions on your oral presentation and on your written brief and perhaps on some other matters which are of interest to us; so why do you not just proceed? Welcome, and thank you for coming.

Mr. O. Kope, General Manager of CHAT Radio and CHAT-TV: Mr. Chairman, Honourable Senators: Our brief strayed from the guidelines that you sent us mainly because in our case we concur with the brief that has already been heard by this Committee that was presented to you by CAB, and we thought that in our case you just may like to hear the way it is.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Kope: How we at Medicine Hat do things and possibly how we will continue to do things.

As you all know, I am from that city that Rudyard Kipling referred to as having "all hell for a basement". I am pleased to be here today to tell you a little of what has happened with our operation over the past twenty-four years, and later to answer any questions which you may have.

CHAT Radio was one of the Stations which burst upon the Canadian scene after the Second World War. Plans were drawn on the basis of available equipment and capital and we still operate from the same single-level building and with a lot of the original equipment.

The station launched into community service from the outset. For instance, if there was a blood donor clinic or a drive for needed funds for a worthy cause the station covered whatever events would be most noteworthy and the staff participated in every way possible.

In those days—if Senator Hays were here, he would attest to this—the roads in the rural districts were still trails and because of the lack of motorized transportation many farmers and ranchers still made their trip to town in horse-drawn buggies and wagons. Those who had cars or trucks did not wish to drive at night and with no telephones, the result was that CHAT became the message centre of the area. This type of contact with our listeners has remained over the years and we take pride in the fact that most of the people who are in our sphere of influence regard us as personal friends.

As the market progressed, the station grew in experience and began to build up the monthly billings; more and more excursions into the unusual were made possible. More imagination was used in programming—in the production of commercial messages—in self-made sound effects and—yes—even musical jingles. In fact one of our commercial jingles was so successful that it was purchased by a national firm and was played on many radio stations across Western Canada.

That, of course, also was the era of promotions such as mystery sounds and mystery voices with jackpot possibilities that kept many people listening. Just to remember a very successful promotion outside the station, at our suggestion the Medicine Hat Exhibition and Stampede Company hired a flagpole sitter, with the young lady located right at the City Hall corner, and CHAT's involvement included a complicated two-way remote conversation via land line with our control room announcer and the lady flagpole sitter on her high perch. The daily conversations kept interest high and promoted the local Stampede and Exhibition quite successfully that year.

Since its inception, CHAT has always gone to "where the action is" and has continued to report and comment on the Medicine Hat and district scene with directness and accuracy. The flexibility of radio has made CHAT the prime news source for the area and our news department of five capable people has an insatiable appetite for the facts. We carry four major newscasts daily, twenty-one newscasts on the hour and half hour and a ten-minutes CBC presentation at nine a.m., and The World at Six which is a half hour CBC presentation each evening.

Like any modestly budgeted local operation worthy of the name, CHAT has been and continues to be the springboard for leaps into greater things.

As I mentioned in our brief we supply basic training of the best possible type and versatility is available to young people who can apply themselves to broadcasting as a challenge and vocation. In addition to those people we mentioned in our brief, there are others who got their start with us, such as Cathy McIvor who is a writer for some of the ABC shows out of New York; Merv Stone who is the chief film producer for the CBC; Irv Shore who is Mr. Morning Man in Edmonton; Lloyd Colthorp, a Vice-President at CHAN — CHEK TV., Vancouver and Victoria.

Although we cannot take any personal credit Medicine Hat can boast the contribution of people to the world of entertainment, art and photography, sports, journalism, finance, industry and politics. Why in the theatre has not heard of Tommy Tweed and Bruno Gerussi? And certainly everyone knows Alexander Chernywech who a few years ago was favourite performer on the Old Time Dancing Party of CHAT and today is Canada's champion Old Time Fiddler and known as Al Cherny, a regular on the weekly Tommy Hunter Show.

There is Roloff Beny, a Medicine Hat artist and photographer commissioned by the Secretary of State during Centennial Year to photograph Canada. His book, "To Everything There Is A Season", has become a Canadian classic. Joseph Fisher and Al Kaleta, former NHL hockey stars; Clyde Gilmour of the Toronto Telegram, Bert Cannings of CFCF, both native sons of Medicine Hat. Walter Gray and Graham Trotter, also journalists. Mr. Bill Currie, former president of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and now Vice-Chairman of the Board, Western Division. Mr. Arthur Atkins, former President Ogilvie Flour Mills. Mr. Ken Jamieson, Chairman of the Board, Standard Oil, New Jersey.

In the political arena, Mr. H. A. Olson, Canadian present Minister of Agriculture, and also from our present Premier of the Province, the Honourable H. J. Strom, and of course, a former Member of Parliament our beloved, the late Senator F. W. Gershaw.

If I may, I would like to stray from my written presentation for just a moment here and say that I really do not know why broadcasting supposedly is the chosen instrument of that which has to do with the arts or Canadian culture or the identity of the country.

For instance, I mentioned earlier that the Canadian from Medicine Hat, Mr. Roloff Beny, was commissioned by the Secretary of State during Centennial Year to photograph Canada and the book is now selling on the stands at $30. a copy and it is a beautiful edition, and yet that book was printed, published and bound outside the country—Italy, the United States and Great Britain; I would hate to call people from the country of Great Britain foreign but that is the way it is turning out in our business today.

However, I do have something with me which is very Canadian. It is a book called "Saamis, the Medicine Hat." It was written also during Centennial Year. It is the story of Medicine Hat written by Senator Gershaw and I do not know whether you have read it, Senator...

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Kope: I would like to present it to you on behalf of the people of Medicine Hat and our station. I would like to think once you have finished it you will probably allow the other Senators to look at it as well.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

Mr. Kope: I also mentioned in our brief we are very active in community involvement and one of the things we have done—we think we have the greatest girls' choir in Canada. They are called the Teen Tones and we are responsible for this recording. This recording, by the way, is on sale. We tried to sell enough of these and with other projects to send our girls to Osaka this year to be Canadian ambassadors, it is as usual like in a lot of things we start a little late and we couldn't get them there, but we are planning on sending them to Great Britain next year to act as ambassadors for Canada and the Province of Alberta and also Medicine Hat, and as I said we are raising money by means of this album. Senator, I would like to give this to you also and even though I cannot give it to you, I will collect $5. from you after the hearing over.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Kope: Now, I cannot, as our brief suggests, stress too strongly the part which we play regarding community involvement. Whatever happens in our broadcast area we are there, if not with our microphones with at least a news report.

We pride ourselves on having a finger on the pulse of the Community.

Over the years we have, at least in our opinion, been pretty good corporate citizens. We pay our bills, our taxes, and our people are well looked after. We have expanded our operation, kept in stride as much as possible with technology and maintained, at least we believe, a good image. But to continue to operate, to continue to keep involved, to continue to be a good corporate citizen, we must remain flexible. To cite an American expression here, we have to stay loose and not lose our cool.

We have hit the odd home run in our ball-park and we don't mind taking our turn at the plate, but when the umpire narrows down the strike zone, ties a hand behind your back and then hands you a heavy bat and says, "Go to it, boy", and when the league governors decide you are going to play more games for less pay, it makes the game a little lopsided and all the fancy words and the fancy series are not going to change that one bit.

Senator Smith: You can still bunt.

Mr. Kope: If you keep one leg tied, you cannot do that either.

Mr. Chairman, Honourable Senators, you are looking at a person who believes that he is as much a Canadian as any other man in Canada, a Canadian who served in the RCNVR during the last war, a Canadian by choice, a Canadian who has also a little smidgin of talent and a Canadian who is also a broadcaster and very proud of it; and as a Canadian broadcaster in a market the size of Medicine Hat and also being a grass roots citizen of the community I can say, because I am in the market place that if I am left alone I will do the job. My people, our audience, are not really concerned about American influence. They will still be good citizens of Canada as long as they can also have the freedom of choice—and if this Committee can be of any assistance, if you will keep the strike zone where it is, or even widen it, if you can untie that hand from behind my back, I will take my turn at the plate and do my damnest to hit another home run in the name of national unity and the Canadian identity.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Kope. Thank you for the book. Thank you for the record. I thank you also for reminding us it is the baseball season.

Senator Sparrow will start the questioning.

Would you like me to repeat the question?

Senator Smith: Dr. Gershaw wrote that book, The Short Grass Country. You will remember that one. He was a very fine man.

The Chairman: I do not think that will be necessary, Senator Sparrow.

Mr. Kope: Yes, he was. We loved him very much.

Mr. Kope: Well, I suppose you are asking me: How can we keep and maintain staff? Is this one part of your question?

Senator Sparrow: I am sure the Chairman expressed our appreciation for you being here but we are particularly pleased because we have been dealing to a great extent with larger organizations, group ownership and this type of thing, and I think it is important to us to have you . . .

Senator Sparrow: Yes.

Mr. Kope: I am glad he qualified that, are you not?

Mr. Kope: Really we have people who have stayed with us a long, long time mainly because they want to stay in a smaller community where they do not have what you might call the rat-race of bigger centres.

Senator Sparrow: . . . because you have the opportunity of a greater listening audience to discuss the problems that may arise from a broadcaster in a smaller community. I think your brief says there is a population of 27,000. The first question perhaps would be to explain further to us—although you did reasonably well in the brief—the particular problems that a broadcaster would face in a community and in a market of that size; and I would particularly refer, I suppose, to the types of community programming problems that would pertain to that and also staffing problems? I appreciate you refer in your brief, in numbers 53 and 33, to staffing and training, and you also spoke in your verbal presentation about training good staff and they leave you. You showed a little pride in the fact that they had gone to the great heights, which is a good thing, and in fact are contributing to Canada as a whole now but this must in turn create extensive problems for you.

Usually these have been people who have been born and raised in our community, and like all other markets similar to our size we have people who use us as a springboard. They can get their experience from us and go to the bigger cities and really it is not the money all the time. It is the idea of being able to get to a larger market, the prestige, being heard, the possibility of or the desire to get to the top like on one of the networks or possibly even down to the States.

I wonder if you would elaborate on that and while you are chatting with us—I used the word “chat” just quickly and I did not mean it that way as a pun.

Mind you, we are having a lot less trouble lately than we were and that is mainly because our viability has been better, our revenue has been coming in better. We can afford to pay them more money and as a result we have kept a lot of people. Where we used to pay them say $250 or $300 a month, they are now getting $400 and $450 a month.

The Chairman: I certainly hope not.

Senator Sparrow: I am sorry. To what people are you referring?

Senator Sparrow: Would you elaborate perhaps a little further for us on the effects that the CRTC may have on you as a broadcaster in a small community, particularly with respect to Canadian content? You said, I believe, in your remarks that you agreed with the CAB position as far as broadcasting is concerned and the regulations; but I would like to know the particular burdens that are on you because of the CRTC regulations and also what benefits there may be, because I think there may be benefits to you in your particular area, of certain CRTC regulations.

Mr. Kope: I am referring mainly to announcers and announcing staff because these are the people who usually move on.

Writers are usually women. We lose them for various reasons. They get married and decide to become housewives and mothers rather than continuity writers, but mainly as far as the announce staff is concerned these are the people that are concerned and with which we have difficulty.

Senator McElman: They have another type of continuity.

Mr. Kope: Another type of continuity. Well, you write the script one day, but that is a difficult thing for us to do.

Mind you, now we also have television we can give a an exposure on both media and this helps to keep m also, but it used to be real tough in the earlier ys when we used to be radio. It was a tough thing th which to contend but not as much any more.

Senator Sparrow: Supplementary to that then, while are talking about this. Could a radio station and a 7 stations survive in that community if they were parately owned?

Mr. Kope: Not the way we are operating them. I nk possibly they could. I do not think they would good operations.

would have to say our operation on television is ond to none and I believe our radio station operates l same way.

s a matter of fact we are very proud of our radio u. television operation. We are on the air many more rs than a lot of stations in markets our size. We e on the air at 8:00 o'clock in the morning for rance and we are never off until 1:00 in television. h radio we are around the clock. A lot of stations n many markets of our size do not operate to this ent.

e spend a lot of money in terms of programming in op radio and television, production aids. One of the ons I think we are successful in that market is euse of our news operation. We have a fellow with s who has had at least 25 to 30 years experience in es. We make sure that in all our newscasts there is t at one local item.

. other words, when people turn away, they always et to come back for fear they have missed othing and that is the way we try to operate.

Senator Sparrow: You referred, I believe, to 80 per er of your advertising dollars coming from local and 20 per cent from national.

Mr. Kope: Yes.

Senator Sparrow: Who covers the national market if ot to not?

Mr. Kope: You mean, who sells for us?

Senator Sparrow: No. How is the market covered for ational advertising?

Mr. Kope: Well, magazines come in, for instance, nd billboards which I really do not think count a lot, but the actual national dollars of the major media go to the Medicine Hat News, which is owned by the Southam people and/or either radio or television, which is owned by Monarch Broadcasting Company.

The Chairman: Is that what you meant or did you mean how did they sell it?

Senator Sparrow: No, I did not mean how did they sell it. I was wondering what the penetration was from all these sources. Are there other TV stations that come into your area or other radio or outside newspapers, or is it all serviced through the Medicine Hat News itself or in newspapers, radio and TV?

Mr. Kope: Do you mean the national advertising money that goes into our area?

Senator Sparrow: Yes.

Mr. Kope: It goes into the three major media, radio, television and newspapers. I do not think I am following you.

Senator Sparrow: No, I think not.

The Chairman: I think he is asking you about the extent to which residents of Medicine Hat are reached by national news which does not appear in the Medicine Hat News or television or radio.

Mr. Kope: Is that what you are saying?

Senator Sparrow: Yes.

Mr. Kope: Cable is one, outside signals from other radio stations, Calgary, United States, some from Saskatchewan. A good concentration of readership from the Lethbridge Herald, the Calgary Albertan and the Calgary Herald. I think that would be all.

The Chairman: This 80/20 radio, does that apply to both radio and television?

Mr. Kope: It used to in radio and television. It still does in radio. We have been a little bit more fortunate than most television stations lately in terms of national revenue.

I would say that would be in the neighbourhood now of possibly 65 or 70 per cent local and the remainder national.

The Chairman: 65 or 70 per cent local.

Mr. Kope: That is right.

The Chairman: How about the Medicine Hat News? What ratio do they reach, do you know?

Mr. Kope: I have no idea.

The Chairman: You do not know what they are running nationally? I find that amazing.

Mr. Kope: No, I do not. I could go through the problem, you know, of measuring the thing and finding out.

The Chairman: I am surprised you do not want to know.

Mr. Kope: It really does not make that much difference to me.

The Chairman: Why? I will bet you want the national advertising they are running?

Mr. Kope: Oh yes. But as far as I am concerned any national advertiser who wants to get the message across has got to use radio and television because we are with the community, as far as I am concerned, much more than the newspaper.

The Chairman: Do they not get any national advertising that you do not get?

Mr. Kope: Oh yes.

The Chairman: Let me ask you one further question about the Medicine Hat News, just on this advertising element. Do you feel that the Medicine Hat News is tougher competition both for audience and for advertisers because it is part of the Southam chain?

Mr. Kope: Yes, I do, mainly because they have a sales office or a rep., with which you are familiar, in Toronto and these people are selling on behalf of not only the paper itself but on behalf of the chain. As a result they receive much more national advertising than say a paper in, well . . .

The Chairman: Lethbridge?

Mr. Kope: No, because Lethbridge is with FP Publications.

The Chairman: Red Deer?

Mr. Kope: Red Deer is a good example. Swift Current. I forget what the name of the paper is.

The Chairman: I think it is a weekly only, but the Red Deer paper is a good example?

Mr. Kope: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, that is in advertising. How about in terms of audience and the coverage and the job they do?

Mr. Kope: I think they do a fine job.

The Chairman: But they would do a better job than if they were not part of the Southam chain?

Mr. Kope: No, I do not think so because I think they can draw from personnel. I think the experience of the Southam chain can help a local newspaper and really let it go a little further. I think eventually stations our size and markets our size are going to be absorbed by conglomerates because it's the only way we are going to be able to operate.

I believe this.

Senator Sparrow: Radio and television.

Mr. Kope: Radio and television.

The Chairman: You see no future in Canada for a small independent operator?

Mr. Kope: Yes, I do, but not to the extent that there is today because I think it is much easier and a station can do a community a much better service in a lot of instances. I am not saying in every instance particularly if these new regulations come into effect they will get help from the people who have resources and money and who can span the gap when the gap is tough.

Senator Smith: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Smith: On this particular subject about competition for audience; I notice in paragraph 4 of your brief you have to compete with about ten radio signals which are well heard in that particular area.

Mr. Kope: That is right.

Senator Smith: As well as six channels on the radio system. How much worse could that situation be seeing that you are having a very successful time.

Mr. Kope: Yes, but . . .

Senator Smith: With that kind of competition.

Mr. Kope: Yes, we do.

Senator Smith: There are lots of places where the competition is not anything like that.

Mr. Kope: But you must remember one other thing. We own part of that cable system too and we have applied to buy the rest of it from Famous Players; I forget whether I mentioned that in my brief or not.

Television could never have come into Medicine Hat had it not been for radio. I am now saying that radio and television will exist in that market only, from a viable point of view, as long as we own the cable system also.

If we cannot, we are going to have to cut back our operations on both radio and television to exist.

The Chairman: If the CRTC said to you "Okay, CHAT, you can have either cable or the broadcasting set-up", which would you take?

Mr. Kope: Well, since we own all of them, I would say all.

The Chairman: No, but if they said . . .

Mr. Kope: I would have to think at this point in time I would have to say cable. I would have to say cable, again depending on what they are going to do with the cable regulations.

You see, local programming, for instance, on cable is practically impossible in Medicine Hat. What do you program?

The Chairman: You do not agree with the new CRTC regulations on cable?

Mr. Kope: No, I do not.

The Chairman: Or on Canadian content?

Mr. Kope: No, I do not.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: I have been reading of late, Mr. Kope, that the advertising dollar is starting to leave television and going back to print. Is this the case in your area?

Mr. Kope: Not now.

Senator McElman: Has it in recent months?

Mr. Kope: No, it is not true in our area but I can see it coming true, the reason being—I do not know whether this has been explained to you before. For instance, there are so many advertising dollars to spend. Now, if an advertiser wants to get into television and he cannot get on the major stations in Toronto or Montreal where he has to have coverage, I can see him then pulling his money out of television and going to a different media. It may be radio, it may be newspaper, because he has to have that coverage in those two areas on either one or both of those stations that are in those areas now; otherwise why go to all the expense of doing a television commercial and putting all the money into the production that is required for a television commercial if it is not economically feasible?

The Chairman: I think maybe Mr. Spears wanted to ask a question.

Mr. Spears: Well, there was something that arose there. Mr. Kope, you have spoken of the reliance of your television operation on radio. We were told earlier today by the people from Bridgewater that a radio station cannot be viable in a community that is smaller than 75,000 which was the figure they gave. You have a smaller market area than that and you have both a radio and television station. What is your secret? How does this happen?

Mr. Kope: I work at it. I would say I do not know Mr. Hirtle's position in Bridgewater. All I know about Mr. Hirtle is that I think he is a tremendous operator.

The Chairman: Did you think that prior to this morning?

Mr. Kope: Oh yes.

The Chairman: You have known him?

Mr. Kope: I have known John Hirtle for a long time. I have admired him greatly.

Mr. Spears: But you have a smaller community supporting a radio station.

Mr. Kope: Well, I do not have a smaller community in terms of people. I have a larger community. I have got 27,000 people in my town. He has got 5,000 people from what he said this morning.

Senator Smith: Oh yes, but he covers half a dozen towns in all that rural area. There are 75,000 people.

Mr. Kope: Okay, fine. He has got that many people. How many merchants has he got? How many potential advertisers are there in that area as compared to ours? I cannot answer that question, I do not know.

Mr. Spears: But you operate your radio station around the clock? What is the reason for that? Who is listening at 3:00 a.m.?

Mr. Kope: Oh, I just about said that naughty word but I do not think I dare.

The Chairman: What was the word you almost said?

Mr. Kope: My answer to that one is this and I am not being facetious—who is listening at 3:00 a.m. in the morning in Medicine Hat? Well, the answer obviously—anybody will say nobody till somebody swears on the air and then everybody has heard it.

Ours also is an industrial town. For instance, Ogilvie Flour Mills, Dominion Glass. People work around the clock in 24-hour shifts. As a result there are watchmen in factories; there are restaurants which are open around the clock, there are industries which are open and people have the radio on and it is also a service in terms of people who have insomnia who sometimes like to listen to us.

We realize we do not get many.

Mr. Spears: It really is a very small audience.

Mr. Kope: Yes, very, very small. We realize this. It is one method also, by the way—and I must be completely honest—of not shutting down our transmitter because it is much more economical for us to leave the transmitter on in terms of tube life, so why not run around the clock?

The problem is that we then have to hire a man. According to government rules you cannot leave a transmitter on in this country unless you are broadcasting something on it, so we will hire a youngster who is trying to get into the business and air check him every so often, but we will let him run that shift say from midnight or one o'clock until six in the morning, until the experienced man comes on.

Senator McElman: Or until he uses one of those words.

Mr. Kope: Well, if he does, he had better not let me hear he did because he is done right there and then.

The Chairman: I would like to talk for a moment or two about this rather bleak future that you paint for broadcasting in Canada, that the independent operator is going to disappear, presumably because of the 30 per cent regulation.

Do you seriously believe that?

Mr. Kope: I do not think he will disappear. I hope I did not . . .

The Chairman: No, I may be misquoting you.

Mr. Kope: I say that it is going to be tougher for him to operate. I think it is going to be easier for him to operate if he is under the wing of one of the conglomerates or one of the Maclean-Hunter or Selkirk Holdings type of thing; simply because there is not enough material available, people or records; for us right now to comply with this regulation.

There certainly is not enough local talent that we can put on the air and a microphone is cruel, as you know, to local talent. It is not good for any talent that really is not that good so therefore it is awfully tough for us to do something when we really have not got the tools nor can make the tools to do it.

The Chairman: Do you agree with the objectives of the CRTC in this area of trying to have more Canadian content?

Mr. Kope: Yes, I do, but it is like the birth of a child. It takes nine months and no regulator can do it in five.

The Chairman: All right, I take your point, but the private broadcasters have done nothing about it in 25 years.

Mr. Kope: Oh, I disagree with you.

The Chairman: Tell me why I am wrong.

Mr. Kope: Well, you are wrong first of all because we do have talent and we have nurtured talent in terms of people who write and who announce and who really play musical instruments in a lot of instances; not so much any more because they go on television, but we used to have local programs where the kids came in and played the piano, played the violin.

We have a Western group in town right now that we tried to get to go on television. We tried to get them to go on radio but there is that continuity thing again. You cannot do it for any more than three or four weeks in a row because they are just not available to you.

One thing we do on radio—and this, of course, is a different thing, but we do bring in groups. We will bring in groups and we will have them do three or four numbers or five or six numbers, whatever the case may be, and put it on a cartridge machine and save their collections this way.

We try to do this as long as it is competitive or at least nearly competitive with the type of music we play ordinarily, but there is no way I am going to put anything on my station which is going to drive listeners away.

The Chairman: Would you play this on your station?

Mr. Kope: You bet. That is great.

The Chairman: Well, what is wrong with having more and more and more of this?

Mr. Kope: Because there isn't any more.

The Chairman: There has not been up until now but if the CRTC makes this regulation a fact of life or in some modified form, then this kind of music will have to be created.

What is why maybe the regulation is useful.

Mr. Kope: Well, let us go back. I think what you are trying to say to me is why can the Americans do it and we can't you?

The Chairman: That is not what I was trying to say but I will ask you that.

Mr. Kope: All right. Away back when, and this is in the good old days, there used to be the era of the big bands, Glen Miller, Tommy Dorsey, Benny Goodman, who really never had any exposure either until they would get to a Frank Dailey's Meadowbrook or a Glen Island Casino or some place, a palladium type of thing, to be heard by the people who will come to that particular performance, be it a dance or whatever.

I was then and there possibly they might get a network contract, might, in those days of network, but it was only after they became famous that they were on recordings and after a guy gets on recordings and he can sell them, he has got it made, as far as I am concerned.

There has not been any place in Canada and particularly in the West and the smaller centres where talent can be heard. We are now in the Province of Alberta finally opening up cocktail lounges and various other establishments where talent like this can get a chance to be heard and can get a break.

Now, I do not think it is up to the radio or television station to do this until at least that talent basically becomes at least half competitive with what the advertisers are used to hearing.

The Chairman: Well, I have records at home by Mart Kenny. He was in that big band era.

Mr. Kope: You bet. He was the only one Canadian that ever made it that way.

The Chairman: But he made it.

Mr. Kope: Oh yes.

The Chairman: And it seems to me that the regulations will help more people to make it.

Mr. Kope: Well, my favourite band today is the Boss Brass, great Toronto musicians. There are no better musicians in the world.

The Chairman: Right.

Mr. Kope: That trombone section is fantastic, but I said to Lyman Potts, who has them on CTV, "Why don't you get these fellows together and bring them out to Alberta and really I will sponsor them for a week; get them all together some place so the Canadian people can really hear this band in person."

Lyman's answer to me was "Well, I would like to, but they are too damned busy in Toronto making money to take a week or two weeks off so they can be heard by the Canadian people"; so is it my fault, as a broadcaster, that I cannot get the people in the Province to hear what I think are the best musicians in the world in person?

Senator McElman: Why cannot they hear them on recordings?

Mr. Kope: Because really the recordings are played by the stations. I know they are played by my station and I know they are played by three or four stations in Calgary.

The Chairman: But surely there are groups now performing in both Calgary and Edmonton?

Mr. Kope: Yes, there are.

The Chairman: Good ones?

Mr. Kope: Yes, but as I say this was true even a year ago but it takes time, a natural birth for it to happen.

The Chairman: Do you not think that the CRTC by its suggestion and by its discussions which are taking place now and by this discussion we are having today, is giving a new impetus to Canadian music?

Mr. Kope: Anything that can further Canadian identity or Canadian talent, I am for, because as I say I am as much a Canadian as anybody else but as I say, also, you cannot do it overnight. You cannot put a date on it and say on September first thou shalt, because you cannot. It is just not available.

The Chairman: All right. Senator Sparrow, do you have any other questions?

Senator Sparrow: If these regulations that are proposed at least sound the death knell of the small broadcaster, is this the straw that breaks the camel's back, so to speak, or were you faced with that anyway? Are we spending too much time with this regulation alone or was it only a matter of time anyway?

Mr. Kope: I really believe—I think it has been mentioned to this Committee—that the Canadian stations as a whole have driven American stations, if you want to put it this way, back across the border.

The Chairman: You are talking about radio.

Mr. Kope: Yes, I am talking about radio now and I think that is a great and wonderful thing. I think the only reason they have been able to do it is because they have become involved a lot more in their own communities. They have learned how to do with media a lot better than they used to, and mainly this had been done, not in the field of music or any other type of art, but mainly in the field of news and reporting of the news.

As I say they have got something on that makes the people come back. If you do not go back, maybe I missed something they say.

I honestly believe that it is not really the death knell of Canadian stations but what I am saying is that Canadian broadcasters will put on more Canadian when that material becomes available through natural evolution.

Senator Sparrow: Just to digress for a moment about local groups and imagination. Where I come from we have a number of local groups who use imagination, two bands in particular. One is called Custer's Last Stand, and the other one is called The Elastic Band.

If you need any imported talent, I can arrange that for you.

Mr. Kope: I am assuming one of their favourite songs is "Don't Run for the Round House, Nellie, the Brakeman will Corner You There"?

Senator Sparrow: So you have heard them?

Mr. Kope: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, I want to form a group and call it "The Senate".

Mr. Kope: Who is your guitar player? You have to have one to be a success.

The Chairman: The other name is "The Fathers of Confederation".

Senator Smith: Let us get back to our discussion a few minutes ago which was dropped. I am very interested in Mart Kenny and Norma. Was that his wife's name?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Smith: In those days if they did make it big did they make it big in the States or were they just big in this country?

Mr. Kope: I think they were just big in this country and the reason they were big was because they took the time and made the effort and the hard work that goes with it, travelling across the country and being seen in person.

I think this is the first thing that has to happen with this kind of talent. I do not think a radio station can do it. I do not think a record can do it.

An example, The Mills Brothers, I used to hate until I saw them in person. Now, as far as I am concerned, I will do not like their records as much as I think I should, but boy I like them a lot better than I used to because I saw them myself on stage.

Senator Smith: I know Mart Kenny and his band came down to the Maritimes and they were a great success wherever they went. I always believed they had a combination of two talents which I believe is common to a lot of potential Canadian entertainers. One is that they were darned good musicians.

Mr. Kope: Yes.

Senator Smith: And they were darned fine people, and they made friends wherever they went. They didn't have to have public relation gimmicks to make them go.

Mr. Kope: I agree with this.

Senator Smith: Now, I am one of those people who believe that this country is full of talent if they only give them a chance and perhaps 30 per cent may be too high but I hope the fall-off is not too high.

Mr. Kope: No, but really believe me, I want to see more of it too but talent has to give itself a break. There have to be places for talent to be heard. For instance, in our Junior College, just no more than a month and a half ago, the Poppy Family from Vancouver came in. It is about the first time really in six years that we have had what I call famous Canadian talent come to our town. The only reason they did is that they were on their way across the country and they thought we would be a good stop between Calgary and Regina. It cost the kids in the school $1,000 to hear them and they lost $400 on the deal but still they came and it was the first Canadian group, to the best of my knowledge, that ever had a hit record to the extent that the Poppy Family has.

I think this is great. I think there is going to be more of this but they can compete—they can compete with the American groups and I think that is important too.

Senator Smith: The whole country is full of these kids. I do not know whether I should take the time to tell you but during the recess at a friend's home in my home town in Nova Scotia I heard what I thought was a heck of a good beat going on. I said to myself it is wonder that these people would have that music turned up that loud. They had a beautiful record player and I thought Lord, they must be out and they have left their record player turned on too loud.

I went into the living room and the thing was off and where was the beat coming from that attracted me? Down in the basement. It was a kids' band in a high school, half a dozen of them, and it was the best kind of a beat you ever heard.

I said to myself if that was one of the most publicized beats in the world, it would not have sounded any better to me and I hope I can tell a good beat when I hear one.

Mr. Kope: I agree with you and I hope some day the record industry in this country will do something about it so maybe we, as broadcasters, can do something about it.

Senator Smith: We have been told that it is too expensive to make records.

Mr. Kope: I will give you an example. I will tell you how expensive it is. There is a fellow—I will not mention the company—but I said "Why would your company not put a record like this together?" This is the best teenage group in Canada, and I swear to gosh it is. I do not know of any better nor have I heard of any better. These girls are wonderful.

He said, "Well, can I hear them?" I said "Sure". I took him back in the control room and he said "Yes, they are not bad". He said "I will tell you what I will do. Give me the album and I will send it away and we will reprint it under our label and if you promise to buy the first 500 copies, we will get you distribution on it."

I said "Why do I have to buy the first 500 copies?" He said "Because then that gets us off the hook".

All right, sure. If we are going to go with a 30 per cent Canadian content, at least let the record companies do something about it and make that 30 per cent available.

Senator Smith: Would you agree it is a reasonable thing to suggest that the government or one of its agencies, such as the Canada Council, subsidize Canadian records, instead of giving somebody $3,000 to go to Paris and paint pictures on the Seine? Let somebody else stay home and make a record and give $3,000 to the record company as a guarantee he would not lose money on it?

That has been put forward to us, seriously.

Mr. Kope: I would like to say that there is merit in that. I would also like to say that it depends on what kind of music is made available on the discs and if the talent can be varied enough, I say "Fine", but remember in the record industry you have to sell internationally before you can make it back.

There is no way you can make a dollar on a Canadian record because you just cannot sell enough of them.

Senator McElman: How do they do it in Quebec?

Mr. Kope: They are not making that much money in Quebec.

Senator McElman: They are viable.

Mr. Kope: Not that viable. The reason I think they can do it in Quebec is because they have not got a French nation right down below them that gives them any competition.

Senator McElman: Platters were regularly available from France.

Mr. Kope: Yes, and still are.

Senator McElman: They just would not accept them.

Mr. Kope: Well, there is another thing that happened, that a lot of these records you hear in Quebec—and I am not too well versed on it—but I understand that a lot of them are American songs with French words, which I think has to be taken into consideration because then it is not all purely Canadian under today's concept.

The Chairman: I do not think that the CRTC has asked for purely Canadian content. I do not think they insist upon Canadian music written and composed by Canadians and sung by Canadians or played by Canadians. I think this would be Canadian content. I am sure a lot of that music is international.

Mr. Kope: I just remembered something. I think I should cover it because it might add to this discussion. About four days before I left to attend the CAB convention and the other hearings and the hearing here, I had a phone call from a favourite minister of ours who broadcasts regularly . . .

The Chairman: You mean a clergyman?

Mr. Kope: Yes, a clergyman, a man of the cloth. He phoned me and said "What is this all about that you are talking about on your radio station and I read the newspapers?" I said "What is it you are referring to?" He said, "Look, I am on your radio station every fifth Sunday on the Sunday morning church broadcast." I said "Yes". He said "Do you mean to tell me when my choir sings O God, Our Help in Ages Past and Nearer My God to Thee and The Old Rugged Cross, that this is foreign?"

I said "Well no, not this year, but under the regulations next year when you need two of the categories, it will be". He said "I will never believe it". I said "You will never believe what, Reverend?" He said "That God is not a Canadian".

The Chairman: Well, are there any supplementary questions on that?

You began your statement by saying that your broadcast was short and to the point because you agreed with everything . . .

Mr. Kope: Agreed mostly, I said.

The Chairman: You agreed mostly with the CAB. What were the things that the CAB said that you did not agree with?

Mr. Kope: Offhand, I cannot . . .

The Chairman: I am not trying to make it difficult.

Mr. Kope: No. Just a minute. I think Crépault's figures were wrong in one instance with reference to what was spent in terms of talent in comparison with the CBC. I disagreed with that and I disagree now. I have not taken the time to look it up. I do not know what it was but I think he was a little high.

The Chairman: I think we might send him a letter reminding him of that.

Mr. Kope: Do not tell him I said so.

The Chairman: Oh no. They have promised to send us a letter.

Well, do you agree with the statements Mr. McGregor made?

Mr. Kope: Oh, you bet.

The Chairman: You think the more commercial a station is . . .

Mr. Kope: The more commercial a station . . .

The Chairman: . . . the more audience it will have.

Mr. Kope: I do not think that is what Mr. McGregor said. I think what Mr. McGregor said was if a commercial is on a program that program is more acceptable. I think that is what he said. Is that not correct? He did not say the more commercials you had on—I mean he said if the commercials are in the program the program is more acceptable.

The Chairman: I think, Mr. Kope, he went a good deal further than that.

Mr. Kope: Well, when he made the statement . . .

The Chairman: Were you here that day?

Mr. Kope: You bet I was. I was sitting over there. I said nice going, Bill, I never thought of that myself. Well, this is true, because we have done this and I will tell you why.

You have got two guys walking down the street. One is wearing a real Dapper Dan suit of clothes. And his shoes are shiny and his hair is cut and he has not got any whiskers and he is walking beside a fellow who has not shaved for four days, his shoes are bare, his hair is all over his head. Which fellow are you going to go after? It is the guy who looks like a success, and that is the way it is with television and radio programming; a commercial on it makes it look successful and sound successful. The more successful a station looks and sounds the more successful it is going to be.

You start putting on sustaining things. In other words why put it on if it is not salable? If it is not salable it is not worth putting on in a lot of instances.

I say the more commercials—not that you have on the station, but the more commercial programs you have the more successful you are going to be because most people are going to want to buy it on your station because . . .

The Chairman: Well, first of all is there a role in Canada for the CBC?

Mr. Kope: Yes, definitely.

The Chairman: Do you think the CBC should go all out in a commercial drive?

Mr. Kope: No, I do not think so.

The Chairman: Why not, if it would improve the station and sound successful?

Mr. Kope: I do not think then it would be fulfilling its mandate. I am talking about the job that the CBC does now in comparison with what I think it has to do.

I would love to see the CBC go out and be more commercially successful. I think they would get more viewers on television. I think their radio network would be a lot better. I believe that.

The Chairman: Do you think that commercials are Canadian content?

Mr. Kope: If they are done in Canada, yes.

The Chairman: Do you think they should count towards the 30 per cent?

Mr. Kope: Yes.

The Chairman: Senator Sparrow, why do you not go on?

Senator Sparrow: Just continuing on that point. You agree in principle with this proposed content regulation. Should there be different regulations for different markets then?

Mr. Kope: Yes, I do believe this.

Senator Sparrow: Would this solve the problem?

Mr. Kope: Yes, it would. It is easier in a community like Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal to get this type of talent and to record it for themselves and to play it on their stations, it is for the Medicine Hats, the Swift Currents, the Lethbridges, and the Red Deers, whatever the case may be.

Eventually I think this stuff may filter its way down into our areas but I do think it takes a lot more time.

I do believe, and it has been mentioned at the CRTC hearings, that every situation should be taken on its own individual merits. I am a great believer in this and I think the Canadian system will build a lot faster and be a lot stronger if this is done.

I do not think you can have blanket legislation because it just does not work in a lot of instances.

Senator Sparrow: Are there areas in the regulations that protect you now that you feel are good regulations or would you rather be wide open in your market?

Mr. Kope: No, I do not want to be free. I want to have freedom but yet I want to have some guidelines. I think that is only natural.

The Chairman: You say "guidelines". Do you mean guidelines or regulations?

Mr. Kope: No, I mean guidelines.

The Chairman: Well, what would you do with the proprietor who does not meet those guidelines?

Mr. Kope: Then I think he should be taken to task.

The Chairman: Okay. I have just two other questions. The first one is, at the opening part of your brief you discuss how Medicine Hat got its name and I was interested in that part.

You conclude however by saying:

"Medicine Hat is a small community, free from many of the complexities associated with large metropolitan centres. There are no serious conditions associated with crime, race, colour or creed. Traffic, pollution and congestion problems are minimal. Indeed, it is a very beautiful city to visit and contrary to the old adage, it's also a most pleasant place in which to live".

Are there not any problems in Medicine Hat?

Mr. Kope: Yes.

The Chairman: What are they?

Mr. Kope: Well, for one thing, Senator. I think I opened the brief by saying we have 27,000 happy people.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Kope: But I did not mention after that, "and a few old cranks". And these are the only people we have trouble with.

The Chairman: For example, there is no drug problem with the young people?

Mr. Kope: Certainly there is. I mean, we are no different, I think, than any other Canadian community. We have our problems in terms of drugs. We have our problems in crime and petty crime. All I am suggesting is that because of the size of the community, it is not as prevalent.

The Chairman: What is the biggest local problem in Medicine Hat? I assume you all have the national problems, taxes and inflation, but what is the biggest local problem?

Senator Sparrow: Apart from broadcasting.

Mr. Kope: Right now I would say something which will hold our younger people and I think we are doing something about this now. There is a big complex being built in terms of YM-YWCA, a brand new arena is now being built. We are getting back into junior hockey again. We have got a Junior College going. There is a new college where first and second year university courses which will be offered. This will be built.

It has been in the Vocational School and this will be built inside of a year and a half. I think this will all add to it too.

The Chairman: The last question I have—you know, Medicine Hat is a long way from Ottawa. How many miles—do you know?

Mr. Kope: Oh, a couple of thousand.

The Chairman: You are not as aware, I am sure, of the crisis in national unity as those of us who live here in Toronto or Montreal and yet the Broadcasting Act compels you, as a broadcaster, to contribute to national unity.

How does CHAT radio and CHAT television fulfil that particular mandate? How do you feel you contribute to national unity?

Mr. Kope: Well, in the first place I think we do as much Canadian as we possibly can. I also have to say there are Canadian programs and have been Canadian programs on television which have out-ranked American programs on the cable.

One of those programs was Wojeck and This House Has Seven Days, as a matter of fact, which I was sorry to see leave the air. This I think is contributing towards Canadian identity and Canadian unity, just be telling people that which is of Canada.

Here we go into news and public affairs again. I think this tells people about Canada and I really think that Canadians today are more proud to be Canadian.

than they ever were in their lives before, but do not ask me why. I do not know why. I just think that happened.

The Chairman: How do you handle the special problems of French Canada? Do you attempt to interpret the situation in French Canada to your viewers and listeners?

Mr. Kope: No, we do not. There is no need for us to really. How we can do this—I have thought about this often. This is probably through an exchange with one of the French broadcasters and possibly this can be taken into consideration. That is a good point but just how we would do it, I don't know really.

I will tell you one thing that is happening in our schools out there and that is that their French classes are becoming a lot more prevalent than what they were and a program such as "Chez Hélène," I think, contributes to this quite a bit.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Senator McElman: What do you think of the proposition of Western separatism that has been talked about quite a bit?

Mr. Kope: Well, what the heck. If Quebec can do it, so can we.

Senator McElman: You deal with it just about that seriously?

Mr. Kope: No, I am being facetious. No. I am not a Western separatist and those who think they are have got holes in their heads. I think they are just trying to create a loud noise. To me it is one country and it always will be.

Senator McElman: As far as your station is concerned, you just ignore it. Is that your position?

Mr. Kope: Oh, we report it, I mean, if there is a big do. I understand in Lethbridge there is a seminar going on which has been called by the University with reference to this.

We will take the news reports that we get from the wire. We will also make sure our man calls one of our other people we are associated with in Lethbridge to let anything interesting, but if it is just a bunch of guys blowing their tops...

Senator McElman: You would not comment on this editorially. You would carry it in the news?

Mr. Kope: If we thought it would be worthwhile carrying, yes, but that would have to be the decision of the fellow who does the editorializing.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions?

Senator Smith: I would like to ask a question in relation to something which was mentioned a few minutes ago. I think Senator Sparrow asked the witness whether or not he thought that smaller stations should be excluded from the high standards established in various areas by the CRTC.

The Chairman: I am not sure Senator Sparrow said "excluded". I think he said "should there be different standards".

Senator Smith: Well, is that not excluded from the high standards?

The Chairman: Well, all right.

Senator Smith: A different set of standards. Where would you possibly draw that line and is it a practical thing to be followed?

Mr. Kope: I think so.

Senator Smith: Based on the revenue of the particular station?

Mr. Kope: This would be one method.

Senator Smith: We have had this from other people. We had it from Bridgewater.

Mr. Kope: That is one method. That, along with possibly the amount of people in your coverage area or what BBM, for instance, says you have. Just what measurement you would take, I do not know.

Senator Smith: You think it could be worked out?

Mr. Kope: I think it could be worked out. I have not got the answer. I have never thought of the answer.

The Chairman: Mr. Kope, on behalf of the Committee I would like to thank you for coming. I think it is one thing to have the views of the giants of broadcasting and those we have and those we welcome, but by the same token I think we have to also have, to make the Committee meaningful, the views of the small broadcasters from all parts of the country and the Medicine Hat market, as I am sure you have probably said many, many times when you were making a sales presentation, is in fact unique.

We appreciate that. You have been here when I have said to other broadcasters that notwithstanding the fact that I am sure it is an imposition to appear before the Committee, I think the broadcasters would be offended if we did not make some reference to broadcasting in an analysis of the over-all media picture, and so again on behalf of the Committee and on behalf of myself personally, thank you for coming.

Again thank you for the book and also for the record which I shall certainly play and I will let you know what it is like.

Mr. Kope: Thank you too, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: May I say to the Committee the final session for this week is at 8 o'clock tonight, the Institute of Canadian Advertisers.

Thank you.

The Committee adjourned.

—Upon resuming at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I might call this session to order.

This evening we are going to receive a brief from the I.C.A., the Institute of Canadian Advertising, and just a moment or two ago, the president of the Institute, Mr. Warren Wilkes, who is seated on my immediate right, asked me if he should introduce his group or should I, and I said I would introduce them because they are all friends of mine.

I think however, Mr. Wilkes, perhaps in a moment or two I will call upon you to introduce them.

I think the Senators would also be interested not only in their capacity in your organization but as well, their agencies. We all appreciate that you are not here representing your individual agencies but I think it might be interesting to us and I believe the Senators will be particularly appreciative.

The usual introduction I make at these sessions will be prefaced by saying that we are very grateful to you for coming. I have said on numerous occasions and in numerous places in all parts of the country that the Senate Committee on Mass Media is not, and I underline "not," is not a committee on advertising, and I hope that you, and the members of your organization will be aware of that fact, except of course as advertising relates to matters which are of particular cogency in a media study.

I am thinking in terms of franchising and perhaps examples of advertising pressure which, I must say, are rather conspicuous by their absence in our study.

I think also you would agree that in any study of mass media the views of the advertising agency industry would be of a very special interest and that is why we have asked you and that is why we are delighted that you have found yourselves available to be with us this evening.

Now, the procedure we follow here is very simple. We turn to you for an opening statement which we try and confine to approximately 10, 12 or 15 minutes. Following that we would like to ask you some questions on the oral statement, on the written statement which you have submitted, which most of us have seen, looked at and studied and perhaps on other matters which we may wish to ask you about.

You should feel perfectly free to refer any of the questions to any of your colleagues.

I should say to the Senators only that Mr. Wilkes, as well as being the President of the Institute, is the President of Tanby Advertising Limited.

With that introduction, why don't you begin by introducing the rest of the members of your team.

Mr. Warren H. Wilkes, President, The Institute of Canadian Advertising: If I may, Senator.

On the left is Mr. Maurice Brisebois Executive Vice-President of Vickers & Benson Ltd. and a director of our Association.

Next to him is Mr. A. M. Shoults, Scotty Shoults who is President of the James Lovick Advertising Ltd. and who is Second Vice-President of the Institute of Canadian Advertising.

On my right, Mr. Dennis Jotcham, who is the Vice-President Eastern Division, of Foster Advertising Limited and is Secretary-Treasurer of our Institute.

Next to him is Mr. George Sinclair President of MacLaren Advertising Co. Limited and the immediate Past President of our Institute.

Next to him, Mr. Jack Milne, the Managing Director of our Institute.

At the back of the room, we have also asked to come with us, our trustee, Mr. Don Campbell who with the firm of chartered accountants, Campbell Lawless & Punchard, and Mr. Hal Roach, the Chairman of the Board of McKim Benton & Bowles Ltd.

Now Mr. Chairman, Honourable Senators, Ladies and Gentlemen. The advertising agencies of Canada, as stated in our brief, are intertwined with the mass media of Canada and have been more than superficially interested in your examination since its inception and we are honoured and delighted with this opportunity to appear before you.

Now, if I may, before going ahead with our formal opening statement, I would like to call upon Mr. Brisebois to speak to you for a few minutes.

The Chairman: Mr. Brisebois?

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Brisebois, Director of the Institute of Canadian Advertising: Mr. Chairman, Members of the Special Senate Committee, on behalf of my colleagues at the Institute of Canadian Advertising, I wish to thank you for having invited us this evening. Recently had the pleasure of representing our organization before the Commission on French language and linguistic rights in Quebec, or the Gendron Commission, and as I mentioned at that time, the members of our Association are bilingual from coast to coast. Of course, they prepare advertising in both official languages of our country. I therefore invite the members of the Committee to ask questions in either French or English. I thank you very much.

[Text]

The Chairman: Thank you very much. Do you have other comments, Mr. Wilkes?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to go ahead with our opening statement.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Wilkes: Advertising makes a significant and positive contribution to Canada's social and economic welfare and the ability to improve, enhance and enlarge its contribution, depends to a considerable extent on a better overall understanding of mass media functions, roles and responsibilities.

Mass media constitutes the communications network upon which advertising depends, while advertising is a major source of revenue for all forms of mass media.

In some respects we find ourselves in an awkward position. In the first place, most of your concerns lie with media and are outside the agencies' bailiwick. Now, Senator Davey has already alluded to this. This means that we are in no position really to comment upon many of the topics suggested in your guidelines for briefs.

In the second place, ICA is an association and the viewpoints of its members do not always coincide. For this reason, our views on certain issues may appear somewhat vague or general. We are not trying to avoid commitment but are simply reflecting the normal modus operandi of an association.

Part 2 of our brief, to be found in the English version on pages 12, 13 and 14 and in the French version on pages 17 to 25, examines issues that have already been the subject of discussion before you, and we are prepared to comment further if desired.

You may have other equally significant issues to question us about and we shall do our best to answer you.

However, from a purely selfish standpoint, we find one issue of overriding concern to us. That is the question of agency franchisement, again to be found in the English version on page 13, paragraph 53 to 58, and in the French version page 23, paragraphs 53 to 58.

For many years, the publishers of newspapers and magazines and the owners of radio and television stations and outdoor plants and other mass media, have paid advertising agencies a commission on advertising placed on behalf of agency clients.

Now, this process stems from the beginning of the agency system in the last third of the 19th century when the first agencies were literally brokers of advertising space to potential advertisers. They bought and sold at whatever price they could and the difference was the agency's revenue.

Later with the formation of media associations, the process became more formalized with the medium setting the price to both the advertiser and the agency. The system became more or less worldwide and since has become known as the "commission system."

As long as media paid agencies a commission, they have the right to say to whom they will pay that commission and will, most probably, base their decision on the agency's ability to pay and its likelihood of paying promptly.

One efficient way of establishing these facts is through the facility of the medium's specific associations, which of course is the raison d'être for media franchising or recognition systems.

Historically, the media franchise system provided some measure of control over the standards of advertising agency performance but now that it has become primarily a device for determining credit standing, a control of performance has largely disappeared.

To our members this is all very fine but they would like to ensure the highest ethical standards and more professionalism in the agency business so that the public may be better served. They argue that this can only be achieved through self-government and self-accreditation and would like ICA, our institute, to act as a central guarantor of capability, skill, ethics and possibly credit.

Such a system should have muscle and teeth which we have not yet found. It has been suggested since advertising is an important part of the entire communications process, reaching and influencing all Canadians, that government should be prepared, in the interest of the public, to help our industry find an answer to this problem.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues and I welcome your comments and questions and hope we can make this dialogue a useful one to both your committee and to the advertising agencies of Canada.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Wilkes. It is our hope as well that the dialogue will be useful to us both. I think the questioning this evening will begin with Senator McElman.

Senator McElman: Mr. Chairman, I understand that this matter of franchising, the CDNPA is now meeting, is it not, and this is one of the prime subjects for discussion?

Mr. Wilkes: That is correct.

Senator McElman: Is it not true that the agency commission runs of the order of 15 per cent?

Mr. Wilkes: Right.

Senator McElman: And is it not also true that yours is one of the few elements of industry that has had no increase over a long, long period of time?

Mr. Wilkes: That is very true, Senator.

The Chairman: Maybe there should be a Royal Commission on advertising which could be subtitled "15 per cent is no Royal Commission"!

Mr. Milne: Hear, hear.

Senator McElman: Have you yet received your framed letter of commendation from Dr. Young?

Mr. Wilkes: No, but I think that is in order as well.

Senator McElman: More seriously, I note from the brief submitted for release today by the Association of Canadian Advertisers Incorporated, that they too favour getting this system away from the media and more oriented to the agencies and the advertisers.

So it would appear that your chief stumbling block at this point are the media themselves.

Mr. Wilkes: I think that is a correct statement. I think it is also correct to say that since there is a move towards the concept of more fees being paid for services provided by advertising agencies, either as an alternative to or as a supplement to the commission presently being paid, that the idea of media moving away from the basic franchised concept really concerns us in terms of our ability to maintain the ethic and the standards of the business.

And this is where, as I indicated in my opening remarks, we would like to feel that we were positioned more strongly to have a more effective voice if you like in our own destiny in that respect.

Senator McElman: My understanding is that the only basis for refusing a franchise in practical terms on the credit rating if you will of the agency. Is that correct?

Mr. Wilkes: That is essentially correct.

Senator McElman: Then as long as somebody has a credit rating, even though his ethics might not be up to the standards of the Association, he could conceivably be accredited under the existing system?

Mr. Wilkes: That is exactly right.

Senator McElman: That is the weak link; is that correct?

Mr. Wilkes: That is what we feel, yes.

Senator McElman: Perhaps it might be useful, Mr. Chairman, to read from the brief of the Association of Canadian Advertisers Incorporated.

The Chairman: Is this the brief to this Committee?

Senator McElman: Yes, and it has been released today's reference to this sub-committee.

"The media commission arrangement today is an anachronism, inasmuch as it gives the misleading impression that the agency still is employed and paid by the medium. Notwithstanding the "franchises" granted by media to agencies, the advertising agency acts for its advertiser client and not for the media."

That is the statement.

Mr. Wilkes: That is essentially correct; they pay the bills.

Senator McElman: Are any of your representatives appearing before the CDNPA for discussion of this or are they discussing it behind closed doors?

Mr. Wilkes: Well, Senator McElman, we have had some dialogue with them over the past 2 or 3 years on this whole subject, and it appears as though they are acting under advice which suggests to them that the proper course of action for them to follow at this particular time is to—perhaps the words is "reduce" the effective franchise system to one of essentially a credit rating procedure and nothing more.

So, to answer your question precisely in terms of are we before them during their meetings over the last couple of days and today, no, we are not. But I think it is fair to say that we have been in pretty continual contact with them over this whole subject.

Senator McElman: Do you find it is an anachronism to have an association, that the CDNPA whose members so often raise Old Ned when a municipal council may close its doors for any particular discussion that they themselves close their doors when they have a meeting?

Mr. Wilkes: No, sir, I don't think I do. I think as a group of business people they are entitled to carry on discussion with respect to their own business in private.

The Chairman: I gather as yet there is no advertising agency consensus on franchising?

Mr. Wilkes: Well, now, I was just going to allude or refer to a questionnaire which we sent out to all of our members and which has been condensed into some answers which really reflect the view of all our membership which necessarily is not the same. You know, we have a wide variety of views.

I may read this—on the subject of agency franchisement—it is not too long—Member comment is distilled along these lines as far as their answers are concerned. "As long as media pay agencies a commission, they have the right to say to whom they will pay the commission and will base their decision on the agencies' ability to pay and its likelihood of paying within a given period. One most efficient way of establishing these facts is through the good auspices of their specific association.

To the large majority of our members, this is all very fine but they want more status and respect for the agency business, hence more ethical conduct and professionalism and argue that this can only be achieved by self-government and self-accreditation. They would like ICA to act as the central clearing house guaranteeing advertising capability in skill, ethical conduct and credit competence to media, suppliers and even new advertisers seeking advice. Also they would welcome some sort of 'examination' concept to evidence reasonable levels of "skill and competence.

Obviously, such a system must have muscle and teeth but with rumoured changes to the Combines Act, this may be impossible to achieve. One member suggests that since advertising is an important part of the entire communications process reaching and influencing the entire population, Government might be prepared to treat us differently in the interests of the consumer."

The Chairman: Is it the latter statement that you had in mind when you made the reference in your brief to government helping you?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes.

The Chairman: How specifically could the government help you in this area? I am not just clear on what you mean and I think this is the place to say what you have on your mind specifically.

Mr. Wilkes: Well, I am just wondering if one of my colleagues might answer that question.

The Chairman: Which one?

Mr. Wilkes: Well, perhaps Mr. Jotcham.

The Chairman: Mr. Jotcham?

Mr. Dennis Jotcham, Secretary-Treasurer, The Institute of Canadian Advertising: I think I was the one member that suggested that this might be the case, but it happens, when one looks at the problem of enfranchising ourselves, as it says here, one runs into the Combines Act and the question of fair trade practices and all that comes with that.

If we become an agency which must control ethical conduct and incompetent and all these other things, and we are incompetent in competition with each other, we obviously get into a situation where we are ruling people and we can tread on some pretty thin ground if you like, opposite the Combines Act.

The Chairman: Doesn't the existing situation tread on some pretty thin ground as well?

Mr. Jotcham: Not necessarily.

The Chairman: Not necessarily but I think potentially it does.

Mr. Jotcham: No, because there is no reason why an agency needs to be a member of ICA.

The Chairman: To be a member of ICA?

Mr. Jotcham: Yes.

The Chairman: But an agency—as far as a newspaper is concerned, for example, an agency must be enfranchised to collect commissions.

Mr. Jotcham: That is right, but in terms of controlling ethical conduct, if we are to choose who will be agencies and who will not be agencies, they must become members of the Association if we are to control their ethics. They in no way have to join our association and can go out and get commissions in any case, then we would lose control of the ethical part of it.

The Chairman: Well, the point I am after is this. Is the existing situation ethical? Is it ethical—not as far as ICA is concerned but as far as advertising is concerned?

In other words, as I understand it, if the 6 of us decided to form an advertising agency and didn't apply to the CDNPA for a franchise, we really couldn't form an advertising agency, could we?

Mr. Jotcham: Yes, that is quite correct, and if the enfranchisement by the media is deleted except in terms of a credit rating, we lose the control of the ethical situation.

The Chairman: Marketing says in its March 23rd issue that a pool in December indicated agencies are split over the issue. Is that true?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes, I think that is true. There is a fairly wide variety of opinions within our group on this subject.

May I just get back to the statement which you made a few moments ago regarding the 6 of us getting together to form an advertising agency.

The CDNPA says they won't franchise us and do that put an end to it. I think you indicated yes and think you are right up to a point, but it is a fact that you could start an advertising agency with CA enfranchisement or you could get the business press or whatever but you would not have the daily newspaper franchise.

The Chairman: Well, that is part of my next question. Senator McElman's question led into the CDNPA and I am wondering does the CDNPA assume any more importance than the broadcasters or the Business Press Association?

In other words, if the CDNPA does something with the broadcasters automatically follow suit?

Mr. Wilkes: No. Over the years the CDNPA has been generally regarded as the strongest of all of the franchises and the most meaningful and you step down from there through CAB, Periodical press magazines and other associations. I would say—and think I would be supported in this—gradually weakening as you go down the scale.

The Chairman: So to sum up this franchising issue the agencies are split and the ICA isn't. You want to see a change made?

Mr. Wilkes: That is right.

The Chairman: That is a fair summation of your position?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes.

The Chairman: Well then, to put the thing right in perspective it is presently being discussed today at a closed meeting of the CDNPA in Toronto and presumably the recommendations which are going to be made are those that Clyde MacDonald spoke about in the March 23rd issue of Marketing. Mr. Costello quoted as saying—Costello emphasized that the upcoming franchise talks are not a result of the CDNPA appearance before the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media.

At that hearing it was suggested and denied by the CDNPA that media franchising agencies might construed as a conspiracy. So really the thing is really very much up in the air at the present time.

Mr. Wilkes: That is exactly right.

The Chairman: If the CDNPA makes a recommendation, will you then approach the broadcasters or will they approach you—how will it work?

Mr. Wilkes: I think it is implicit when the CDNPA abandon their traditional role as an enfranchising body, that there will be little left of any enfranchising because as I indicated earlier, it weakens as you go down the scale anyway.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Wilkes: I guess, if you want to be specific, there are known instances where agencies that do not have other franchises have been able to get commissions from broadcasting stations, so this is an indication if you like of what might be described as a weakness in the franchising setup.

Mr. Milne: Mr. Chairman, may I make a comment?

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Milne?

Mr. Milne: One of the reasons for commenting and asking if you wish government support in what we are attempting, is that one route to franchising obviously is a route followed by the doctors, lawyers and engineers and others through Provincial legislation.

This becomes literally, in a country of this type and size, as an impossibility seeking legislation from 10 or 11 provincial governments. If it were possible to find some method of seeking federal legislation which would enable us to come to self-recognition, then we could shorten the process and get to what we want much faster. This is what we mean when we say that maybe the government can play a role which it has not, up to this point, been able to do.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Are there any other questions on franchising?

Senator McElman: Well, Mr. Chairman, tied with franchising. Reference is made in several places in the bill to special fees.

Paragraph 59, page 14 reads:

"As stated above, the bulk of advertising agency revenue currently is in the form of media commissions. Special fees paid by advertisers to advertising agencies constitute a growing—though still secondary—portion of total advertising agency revenue."

Would you elaborate on that as to what the special fees constitute?

Mr. Wilkes: I think it is fair to say, Senator McElman, that originally, fees began to be paid to advertising agencies for special services in the field of research, for example, for special services in particular jobs of work such as the organizing and writing, and getting the people together for a major sales presentation for a product when he is presenting something to his dealers.

I think you could go on into public relation services, the handling of press releases and so on and so forth where services were being provided to agencies that were outside the framework of the traditional mass media on which we got commissions.

Then, with growing pressure on agencies—and you alluded to it in your earlier remarks—that we seem to be holding the price line pretty well, this traditional 15 per cent has gone on for years—agencies, and they still feel this pretty strongly, began to feel a profit squeeze. More services, more costs, higher prices to people, and so on and so forth.

And in order to be properly compensated in what might be described as high cost handling accounts, and some accounts are much more expensive than others, they began to introduce fees, and based them on a variety of approaches. Time charges multiplied by overhead and a profit factor and so on and so forth, and this tendency to charge fees by agencies as a supplement to the commission system has grown and grown to the point where some agencies—well, let's put it this way.

Most agencies now charge fees for some things—perhaps not everything. Some agencies have gone so far as to put their whole operation on a fee basis so for all practical purposes, the advertiser is paying the net, that is the figure after 15 per cent is taken off, and then paying charges for all the people who are employed on his behalf in the agency, and pays fees based on these time charges and services rendered.

Does that answer your question?

Senator McElman: This then would have been brought about by the strictures of that set percentage, I would take it, to a large degree?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes, I think it has to a very large extent, and the resulting profit squeeze.

Would anyone else like to comment on this.

Mr. George Sinclair: Past President, Institute of Canadian Advertising, President, MacLaren Advertising Ltd: Well I might just supplement that if I may.

The Chairman: Mr. Sinclair?

Mr. Sinclair: Our own Association, through our trustee who is here with us tonight, compiles industry figures and I should put quotation marks around the word "industry," because while we represent 85-odd per cent of agency volume in this country, there is a remaining 15 per cent of volume through agencies which are not members of ICA, and we are the predominant body.

However, the figures show on fees, that in 1966 there were gross commissionable billings of $329 million, and in addition, fees to agencies of $44-odd million or 11.8 per cent of the gross revenues of agencies came from fees. In 1968 that 11.8 per cent had grown to 12.35 per cent.

The fees are partly of course the result of the fact that agency commissions do not relate to work done. My company might prepare an advertisement for a magazine whose page rate is $6000 and we will get 15 per cent of $6000 which would be a little over $800 some odd for preparing that unit.

It might be a great deal more work and would call for a good deal more research to put together an advertisement in a highly technical publication which might have only a thousand or two circulation for highly specialized purchasers of some highly specialized pieces of equipment but the page rate of that publication might be $200 and the agency revenue is $30.

The madness of this is evident and the need for fees in these circumstances is dramatic, so that what tends to happen is in a technical or industrial advertising situation, fees are very general.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: Well then, in effect, some of the member and non-member agencies are already getting away from the strictures of the 15 per cent quite obviously?

Mr. Sinclair: Well, that is right.

Senator McElman: At page 6 in your brief you refer to the membership of the Association, the General Members, Fellows, and Corporate Members. And as I understand it, the 49 who are Corporate Members make up the strong part of the agency business in Canada?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes.

Senator McElman: Just 25 per cent are foreign owned subsidiary companies. Could you tell us what percentage of the national billings they account for?

Mr. Wilkes: I think it is about 30 per cent, or perhaps Mr. Campbell is in a better position to answer that one.

The Chairman: Mr. Campbell?

Mr. Donald Campbell, Trustee, The Institute of Canadian Advertising: I am afraid I don't have that information, Senator.

Mr. A. M. Shoults, Second Vice-President of the Institute of Canadian Advertising: I think it was about 25 per cent four or five years ago, and it has gone up to about 31. I believe 31 would be about right today.

Senator McElman: I understood it was close to 35 or 36.

The Chairman: We have the percent as being 34 per cent. At least 25 per cent of the agencies account for 34 per cent of the billings.

Mr. Shoults: Well, I don't have the precise figures.

Senator McElman: Could anyone tell us what the approximate increment is annually? Their gross income, what does it amount to?

Mr. Shoults: I think in the last five years it went from 25 to 31.

Senator McElman: 25 to 31?

Mr. Shoults: Yes. In other words, they were growing faster than the Canadian side of the business.

Senator McElman: Is there concern in your Association that perhaps with the percentage they now have and the growth factor involved, that you are before too long going to become a United States dominated organization?

Mr. Wilkes: Well, I don't think that we are really concerned about that factor, Senator McElman.

It is true as you indicate that about 13 of our members represent quite a substantial volume of business but this is a fact of life and it is a competitive situation which we fully understand. We are all members of the same association and I suppose it is fair to say that perhaps some of the conflicting views within the association are brought about by the actual competition of the membership.

The Chairman: If I may pursue that. We have 34 per cent of billing—that is by our figures. You have 31 per cent or thereabouts and we have 34 per cent and we have Mr. Shoults saying that it is going up 1 per cent a year and that blends in with our research. We think it is going up 1 per cent a year, so going up 1 per cent a year and compounding that and projecting it into the future, it seems to me that in 10 years the Canadian advertising industry will be yet another American industry.

Do you mean to say that that isn't of great concern to the two-thirds of the members of the ICA who are Canadian agencies?

Mr. Sinclair: May I answer that one?

The Chairman: Sure. Of course.

Mr. Sinclair: Our problem, Senator, is that we are not as representatives of the Institute of Canadian Advertising and this includes as members the American agencies.

The Chairman: Right.

Mr. Sinclair: We are therefore in a position that if you were to canvass individual members you will get a considerably divergent point of view.

Senator McElman: At least 25 per cent of it.

The Chairman: I take your point, Mr. Sinclair, and I think in fairness to Mr. Wilkes, I think he made that clear in his opening statement that is one of the problems in dealing with an association like this.

However, just in passing—I won't ask a question but I would like you to be aware of a comment. A brief that we received yesterday from Standard Broadcasting-CFRB, said, and I quote from p. 49:

"It is within the power of advertising agencies to exert a profound influence on the life style of the Canadian people. The advertising they create, to a considerable extent sets the standard of taste and the levels of consumer demand for the nation. The degree to which our advertising industry borrows from foreign cultures and attempts to persuade listeners or viewers to alter attitudes and habits unique to Canada should be of concern in the preservation of our own way of life.

To the greatest possible extent, such agencies should be controlled by citizens of this country. The decisions which will affect profoundly the buying habits of consumers and the marketing procedures of our industries should be taken by those who understand and wish to protect those attitudes which distinguish Canadians from other inhabitants of the North American continent."

I then asked Mr. Hartford about the statistics that we have been discussing and I asked him to make a comment and he expressed the opinion, and I quote him, he said "It is almost too late now."

Most certainly taking the point about you being an association and not pressing the issue any further, I would simply say that there are some of us who certainly share the concern of those members of the Association who are concerned, and at the same time understanding the position of the other agencies and not being critical of them, but it seems to me to be an area of concern.

I would just ask one other question on this and I don't think this will prejudice anybody to answer. Is it true—it has been reported to us—the largest single advertiser in the electronic media in Canada, Procter & Gamble—I am sure one of you comes from an agency which has some Procter & Gamble business; but maybe you don't—but it is my understanding that they have repatriated their entire marketing function back to the United States. Is this true?

Mr. Wilkes: I don't know whether it is true . . .

The Chairman: It is not true?

Mr. Sinclair: I don't think so.

Mr. Thomas: I don't think it is true.

The Chairman: Would you like to comment on that, Mr. Thomas? I know you are not here as a witness . . .

Mr. Barry Thomas, Media Director, McKim/Benton & Bowles Ltd: I am an ex Procter & Gamble man and I know it is just not true at the moment. I believe Quaker Oats might have done part of that but I know for sure that Procter & Gamble have not done that.

Senator McElman: Has any major advertiser done it?

The Chairman: I believe Quaker Oats has done that.

Senator McElman: Well, I was wondering in addition to Quaker.

The Chairman: And Procter & Gamble has made no move in this direction?

Mr. Thomas: I thought you asked if they had completely repatriated?

The Chairman: Well, I am now asking if they have partly repatriated? I would be very unfair to you because you are not here as a witness, and so I don't mean to draw you into the discussion.

We have perhaps said enough about this, but it was a thing that did come to the attention of our researchers on the Committee that Procter & Gamble who, I am sure, are the largest electronic advertiser in this country, were moving, were repatriating if you will, their marketing procedures to the United States.

I think this would be a great concern but however if it is not happening, it is of no great concern.

Senator McElman: Could Mr. Wilkes or Mr. Milne perhaps quickly run down pages 7 and 8 and indicate which of the members are the American agencies?

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Milne: The companies that are American?

Senator McElman: Yes.

Mr. Milne: Well, this is how I consider them and it is my personal opinion

Bozell & Jacobs of Canada Limited; Leo Burnett Company of Canada Ltd.; Doyle Dane Bernbach (Canada) Limited; Foote, Cone & Belding Advertising Ltd.; Kenyon & Eckhardt Ltd.; MacManus, John & Adams of Canada Limited; McCann-Erickson Advertising of Canada Ltd.; Needham, Harper & Steers of Canada Ltd.; Norman, Craig & Kummel (Canada) Ltd.; Ogilvy & Mather (Canada) Limited; Spitzer, Mills & Bates Limited. I am not too sure about and I would ask direction about that one.

Mr. Sinclair: Yes, that is one.

Mr. Milne: J. Walter Thompson, Company Limited and Young & Rubicam Ltd. Now, there may be other agencies in there that are not either American or Canadian.

Mr. Shoults: BBDO is a large agency but it is not a member of the Association.

Mr. Milne: Well, it is Baker, BBDO Limited. It is still a Canadian operation although Baker have the controlling interest.

Senator McElman: I don't immediately recognize any of the names as being French-Canadian agencies. Do you have any?

Mr. Brisebois: One which has been recognized as French agency through the years and as a matter of fact is a very old agency is the Canadian Advertising Agency.

Now, I made the statement in the beginning French that most of these agencies work from coast to coast. A lot of them have offices in Montreal of course, and work in both French and English with large French-Canadian staffs, and they are Canadian in the true sense of the word.

The Chairman: Thank you. I believe Mr. Sinclair wanted to say something, Senator McElman.

Mr. Sinclair: Well, Mr. Chairman, in view of the line of questioning which indicated an interest in non-Canadian participation in Canadian advertising agencies, volume, it occurred to me that you might like to hit the point made that there are of course three major sources of Canadian advertising volume purchased from the media in this country.

They are Canadian-owned agencies and still are a do a majority of the business. They are the American-owned agencies operating in Canada and there is of course a very considerable volume of advertising reaching the media from foreign advertising agencies who have no operation in Canada.

Insertion orders or time contracts sent from other countries and honoured of course, and welcomed to the media in this country.

The Chairman: Could you estimate the amount of such billings?

Mr. Sinclair: No sir, I have no source of that information. One advertising director of a major newspaper said about 10 per cent of his national volume came to him from ex-Canada origination.

The Chairman: These would be mostly American presumably?

Mr. Sinclair: Mostly American but not entirely.

The Chairman: That is a very interesting point, thank you.

Mr. Shoults: I would like to make one observation in that. Our agency and our Toronto office I would think would probably have 12 per cent of our billing in the United States. In other words, we do the same thing although we don't have a branch in the United States.

Senator McElman: Well, this was the next question I was going to ask, Mr. Chairman. What approximate volume would your member agencies be billing annually in the United States? Is there any way of checking that?

Mr. Wilkes: It would be very difficult to do it, Senator.

The Chairman: Well, in round figures.

Mr. Wilkes: Well, most of it—you are talking dollars now—most of it would be travel advertising in the United States. There may be some other specific instances, but I would think if it was $5 million it would be fairly substantial.

Mr. Milne: One of the major advertisers in the United States being the Canadian government.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Jotcham: Mr. Chairman, the question came up—I think you said in reference to Standard Broadcasting?

The Chairman: In the Standard Broadcasting brief.

Mr. Jotcham: In the Standard Broadcasting brief about the influence of U.S. . . .

The Chairman: Well, the influence was about all of the advertising agencies but it went on to say—the opening sentence said “It is within the power of advertising agencies to exert a profound influence on the life style of the Canadian people.”

It then went on—we want to ask you about that in a few minutes—but it then went on to express some concern that a substantial and growing portion of that influence through advertising agencies was being directed through American advertising agencies.

Mr. Jotcham: I see.

The Chairman: Okay?

Mr. Jotcham: In other words there is a lot of American business coming to Canadian advertising agencies who employ us because of our knowledge of this market place?

The Chairman: No, I don't think that was the point. I think the point was that the Canadian advertising agency business is being taken over by American agencies. I think that was Mr. Hartford's point.

Senator McElman: Well, we know that there are 13 in this list now which we have just had related to us. Is there a base year that we can tie to, say 1965 or 1960 when you can tell us how many of your corporate members were at that time other than Canadian owned?

Mr. Milne: We can go back and examine the thing for you Senator, but we don't have that information with us.

The Chairman: You may let us have that information.

Senator McElman: Could you tie back then—if you are going to do this—to the years 1965 and 1960 and let us have that information?

The Chairman: If you will. And I think with that question I think I might say, as Chairman, we have dealt with that subject sufficiently, particularly given the point that both Mr. Wilkes and Mr. Sinclair made that you are here as an association and we take that point.

Senator McElman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Milne: Senator Davey, may I just make one other point?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Milne: I will be away for the next 10 days so is it all right if I send it to you when I come back?

The Chairman: By all means.

Senator McElman: At page 6 you state that one of the objectives of the ICA is: "To maintain a strong code of ethics binding upon all member companies and their personnel." How would you enforce your code of ethics?

Mr. Wilkes: Well, this is very difficult to do and this is what we talk about when we say muscle and teeth. We do have a standing committee to deal with complaints that arise with respect to the ethical aspect of our business and this is the way they are handled at the present time.

However, I must say that generally speaking we don't have very many complaints.

The Chairman: Would those complaints be from consumers or from members agencies?

Mr. Wilkes: They would be from advertisers.

The Chairman: From national advertisers?

Mr. Wilkes: That's right.

Mr. Milne: Mr. Chairman, I would say that we also have a second way of supplementing our code. The whole advertising industry as explained in the brief, form the Canadian Advertising Advisory Board which is financed by the advertisers, the agencies and all the media associations and the ancillary suppliers.

The Canadian Advertising Advisory Board is doing a number of things along these lines and it has been advertising, as you probably are aware, for the last several months the advertising code of ethics.

The Chairman: Here is an ad that they ran.

Mr. Milne: Inviting people who have a criticism about advertising to send it to them. This campaign is appearing on radio and television, newspapers and magazines and you name it. Someone has estimated that we have voluntarily obtained something like 6 or 8 million dollars.

The Chairman: Has this been a successful campaign?

Mr. Milne: Emphatically so.

The Chairman: You are getting lots of complaints?

Mr. Milne: No. This campaign doesn't attract complaints. This campaign just asks you to write for the code, and there have been hundreds and hundreds of request for the code and we are keeping track of these on a statistical basis.

A copy of the code then goes out to each person who asks for it; there is a complaint card and then they are asked to make their complaints, and these have been coming in.

There have been several hundred of these coming in and we are working very closely in developing these. Yes, there has been a number of complaints.

The Chairman: Relating to Senator McElman's question on enforcing the code of ethics, could you give us an example of the ICA calling a member agency to task or reprimanding him or booting him out of the organization or raising the roof generally?

Mr. Milne: I could give you several examples.

The Chairman: You may not want to do so publicly.

Mr. Milne: Well, I could do it privately but what I wanted to say—but as the managing director, it is my function, and I frequently get calls from a member agency complaining about the actions of another agency and I attempt to sort these things out between the two members privately without any correspondence—simply on the phone or over luncheon. These are the kind of things that we sort out between ourselves.

The Chairman: No agency has ever been publicly reprimanded?

Mr. Milne: Well, I have only been with the Association 2½ years.

The Chairman: Since you have been with the organization?

Mr. Milne: Not during my time.

The Chairman: Well, during Mr. Wilkes' time?

Mr. Wilkes: I have no recollection of anybody.

The Chairman: Has any agency ever been kicked out of the Association?

Mr. Wilkes: No.

Mr. Campbell: I think so.

Mr. Wilkes: On ethical grounds?

Mr. Campbell: Not on ethical grounds.

The Chairman: On other grounds?

Mr. Campbell: On financial grounds.

Senator McElman: Then there are no established penalties or anything of that nature?

Mr. Wilkes: No.

Senator McElman: No setup?

Mr. Wilkes: No, it is usually done as Mr. Milne says between themselves, or there is a formal committee set up if there is a problem with it that they usually work out on a gentlemanly basis. But we have no authority really under the way we are presently constituted to throw somebody out of the organization.

The Chairman: Mr. Milne is the Karl Goldenberg of the agency business isn't he?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes, pretty well.

Senator McElman: Paragraph 57 on page 14 states that "Even more rigorous codes and standards are being examined and ICA membership criteria are being made even more stringent."

Could you elaborate on that as to the stringency of the criteria for membership in particular?

Mr. Wilkes: Mr. Jotcham, would you answer that case?

The Chairman: Mr. Jotcham, how are you going to make them more stringent?

Mr. Milne: Well, we have a criteria committee, if you wish, under the chairmanship currently of Mr. Alerson which has been examining and writing and drafting a set of criteria which we can use, given muscle and teeth, but again these are ideals rather than something we can move with at the present moment. This is the direction in which we are moving at the moment and this is what we really mean. Some of the criteria are financial as well.

Senator McElman: Again at page 6 in paragraphs 13, 14 and 15, you outline your financial objectives. You say:

a) To promote and protect the interests of advertising agencies with all other associations, particularly those closely involved with advertising.

b) To foster and develop co-operative services with a view to eliminating duplication."

Could you illuminate a little further on that and give us examples?

Mr. Milne: Well, the second item sir, "to foster and develop co-operative services"—at the present moment we have what we call computer consortium operating. Six or seven agencies got together and spent several thousand dollars to investigate the possibility of using the computer to perform some of the services of the agencies, an examination which none of the agencies could afford.

Senator McElman: And this would be for billing and so on?

Mr. Milne: Billing and media work and a whole host of other things. Mr. Roach's agency is involved as one of the members and he might be able to speak to that, but these are ways of coming to grips with the big problems for a number of middle-sized or larger agencies.

This is an example of a way, if you wish, of saving money.

Now, the next step if the computer consortium continues is to buy and develop a programme and to move into this thing on the basis where all of the agency participants are utilizing the same programme and working together instead of spending maybe 2 or 300,000 dollars apiece to get to that point.

We would have the cost shared between 4, 5, 6 or 7 agencies.

Mr. Roach: Mr. Chairman, I think there are a number of other examples, too. Our very complete advertising education programme is another case where we are training personnel to be professionally skilled with joint investment.

We have examined and spent money reducing costs and improving profits and we have examined a central checking facility, for example, measuring and checking in advertising against insertion orders. These things are constantly going on and I think we are just trying to keep our heads above water from a profits point of view.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Roach.

Mr. Milne: Well, number A "To promote and protect the interest of advertising agencies with all other associations"—you asked us earlier if we had discussions with CDNPA and this is exactly what we are talking about.

Senator McElman: This is the sort of thing?

Mr. Milne: This is the sort of thing.

Now, there are many other associations, newspapers, broadcasters, magazines, and there is also the Association of Canadian Advertisers and other similar associations with whom we work to attempt to iron out differences between groups of agencies and groups of advertisers.

The Chairman: What about associations like the Consumers Association?

Mr. Milne: Yes. We have not worked directly with the Consumers Association because we have done it through CAAB as well.

Mr. Jotcham: We operate and deal with 2, 3 or 4 unions. We negotiate with ACTRA and with FAAC on behalf of the whole industry.

Mr. Wilkes: We have also established an advertising personnel bureau to assist member agencies in the employment of staff which is a joint venture and has been going for some time.

There are really quite a number of different common interest activities in which the Association is involved and which in fact works with all the media associations in the Association of Canadian Advertisers jointly on quite a number of projects.

Senator McElman: Paragraph 51 on page 13. You have a reference on concentration of media ownership and control. You say:

"It is evident that, if most, or all, available media within a significant market area were to have common ownership, monopolistic practices would probably develop to the detriment of the advertiser and the advertising agency."

Did you have any specific market area in mind when you prepared that statement?

Mr. Wilkes: No, I don't think so, Senator McElman.

Senator McElman: It is a general statement?

Mr. Wilkes: I beg your pardon?

Senator McElman: It is just a general statement?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes, it is just a general statement.

I think our great fear of course is the controlling inflation.

The Chairman: Are you leaving those sections because I would like to ask you about them.

Senator McElman: Please go ahead.

The Chairman: I am not clear from these two sentences—51 and 52 just how concerned your association is about the increasing concentration of media ownership in Canada.

One of the questions that we have put to a great many publishers and broadcasters and so on is—we've said to Alan Waters for example this morning "Do you think it would be a good thing if CHUM owned all of the private radio stations in Canada?" and he said he didn't think it would be a good thing.

Another question we put to him, and we also have put it to a great many others, is "Well, how much too much?" "What would be your viewpoint on that?" In other words, when does concentration of ownership become dangerous? At what point would the ICA like to see the storm signals go up on the growing concentration?

Mr. Wilkes: Well, I think that is a very difficult question to answer.

The Chairman: Of course it is. It is a terribly difficult question.

Mr. Wilkes: I guess we have one newspaper chain that controls a substantial number of newspapers probably more than any other. I guess the Thomson group—and I don't think that at their level of ownership the agencies are particularly concerned that it is posing any particular problem. But I think we really make our position fairly clear when we say that it is of no great concern in point 52.

In point 52 we say it is "of no great concern for the presence of competitive media permits alternate choices."

The Chairman: Well, supposing the Thomson papers move their ownership and owned half of the newspapers in Canada. Supposing they owned half of the daily newspapers in Canada. Would you be concerned?

Mr. Sinclair: May I take up that point?

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. Sinclair: I think our concern about Thomson owning half of the newspapers would relate very much to where those half were. If they owned all of the newspapers in a great many cities it would be a matter of distress from the purchaser's point of view, and as agents we act on behalf of the advertisers whose money is being spent.

Now, you say at what point do the storm signals go up. I don't know how we can approach that but I think it is fair to say that the ideal purchasing situation is one in which all of the newspapers in a given community are under different ownership and the broadcasting stations under yet other ownership. This of course would give us the utmost in competition.

The Chairman: Well, I appreciate the fact that the question I am going to ask you is a tough one for people in the agency business but however I think we must ask you.

Would you like to see this Committee come forward with recommendations for guidelines in this area of concentration? Do you think that would be in the public interest?

Mr. Milne: I think I would like to answer that personally and say as Jack Milne, yes. But in the terms of the Association our concern is in creating and supplying sufficient advertising for our clients, the agencies, and the contents of paragraph 52 was written in that sense.

Mass ownership, across the country, of papers in separate cities does not basically affect the effectiveness and cost of advertising and it doesn't damage our clients.

The Chairman: But then we get to this influence which was referred to in that CFRB brief, which Mr. Jotnam was asking me about that first sentence, where it says "It is within the power of advertising agencies to exert a profound influence on the life style of the Canadian people."

I would suggest that there is a second way in which you fellows exert a profound influence, and we come back to the life style, but surely the advertising agencies in this country provide the media in this country with the very money necessary for them to operate.

Mr. Sinclair mentioned the figure of $329 million and that is $329 million which is funnelled through you people to newspapers, radio stations, magazines, television stations which you people choose. You really are, perhaps more than any other single group, subsidizing the existence of the media in this country. That certainly is not a thing about which we are critical but it does mean, it seems to me, that your views have pretty profound importance to this Committee. When you say Mr. Wilkes that many of the things that we are considering—and I use your term—"are outside of the agency's balliwick", the media industry, as it is structured in Canada, couldn't exist without you fellows, could it?

Mr. Wilkes: No, I think that is true, but at the same time we don't exert any influence over what they have to say editorially or from a programme content standpoint.

The Chairman: Well, what you are saying to me then is that your only concern in this question of concentration is as it relates to advertising and to your advertisers?

Mr. Wilkes: I think that is a concern.

Mr. Milne: That is the way we wrote it.

The Chairman: I know you fellows individually and you have more social conscience than that—all of you!

Mr. Sinclair: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Well, I believe that.

Mr. Sinclair: And may I come back to a point I made earlier. Our problem is that you are speaking to us here as representatives of a body which has sketched out views on a number of subjects, but there are a multitude of others where there is not an official position.

If you were questioning us individually as the heads of our companies or as citizens, you might get different answers.

The Chairman: Well, perhaps we should have done that, Mr. Sinclair.

Mr. Shoultz: I am probably a little more direct on the question of media ownership. In my opinion I think multi-media ownership is not a good thing for Canada. I know it is not a good thing for our agency as a purchaser of time or space.

I think Senator McElman's province is a good case in point. I don't like the concentration of media there one bit from a purchaser point of view and I think also if you wanted to check the figures you could do that without reference to us.

If you checked the rates of cities where for instance there is only one television station or one television station and CBC; if you looked at the grey areas where it wouldn't quite show on the rate cards, the difficulty of getting the kind of time purchases that you want, you will find that there is a direct correlation between that and costs.

It is very hard to generalize, but I think that is the answer, so I think that anybody that says they don't care whether we have multi-ownership and/or an extension of 8, 10 or 12 newspapers, or whatever it is, particularly in large markets—I think there is no question that it is implicit in your thinking that these people have leverage.

The Chairman: Thank you. You have anticipated my next question so I won't have to put it. I was going to come on from the social area into the economic area, but you have discussed that.

Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: What is the future of consumer magazines in Canada?

Mr. Wilkes: Mr. Jotcham, would you like to answer that?

Mr. Jotcham: I think the future of consumer magazines in Canada is good. They have been affected and there is no question about this by the increase in the usage of television advertising—I think that is obvious but as the television audiences become more fractured, magazines become more valuable as far as their influence is concerned.

Recently there was a presentation made in Montreal—actually yesterday—which was quite an effective presentation to show how magazines for one particular advertiser had produced excellent results.

I think if the magazines maintain an editorial position that is of major interest to the public, in other words if they provide a product that the public wants to read and wants to buy, then I think their influence could continue to be great and their value as a medium for advertisers can continue to be great.

I can see their star rising shall we say as television audiences become more fractured. They would become more of a pure audience and particularly directed to a particular audience.

More and more today we are trying to direct our advertising to specific audiences.

Senator McElman: Setting aside Maclean's for the moment, do you see the emergence of a strong national Canadian magazine?

Mr. Jotcham: At the moment, no.

Senator McElman: Do you believe that the industry could remain relatively solvent, strong if Time and Reader's Digest were to lose the preferred position they currently have?

Mr. Jotcham: Could you repeat that question please?

Senator McElman: Do you believe that the consumer magazine industry, could remain viable in Canada if Reader's Digest and Time Magazine were to lose the preferred position they now have?

Mr. Jotcham: Well, it depends on how you word the preferred position. Do you feel that as American publications published in Canada that they have a preferred position?

Senator McElman: Well, that has been expressed to us on many occasions. I should go on and say that we have had representations here from the magazine industry that if Time and Reader's Digest were to lose the preferred position, that the industry itself could not survive.

Would you subscribe to that or disagree with it?

Mr. Jotcham: I think that the magazine industry benefited considerably from the fact that Reader's Digest

Digest and Time have been strong in the magazine field. I think they have led the way both promotionally and through research to keep the value of the magazine as a purchase very much in the mind of the advertisers and I would say yes, that the magazine industry's influence would be seriously depleted if they were not part of the magazine scene.

That is about all I have to say but on the other side of my coin, I would be delighted to see a Canadian national magazine. I think it would be wonderful if we could do it, but in the context of advertising dollars and where they come from, over which I don't think we have too much control, I can't see it happening.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Jotcham: Well, I think it has already been covered with the Committee and that is the influence of weekend newspapers which has already affected the magazine industry as such and which is decrying the kind of leadership that our citizens seem to be looking for.

The Chairman: The kind of which?

Mr. Jotcham: Readership.

The Chairman: The kind of readership?

Mr. Jotcham: The kind of readership that our citizens have been looking for. So I don't think we can sort of entirely lay any blame or any failures of the magazine on the door of Time magazine, but I am going to disagree with Scotty pretty strongly.

I am pretty glad that Time at least do carry a great deal of Canadian information.

The Chairman: Do you think four pages is a great deal?

Senator McElman: They have carried six since they were here.

The Chairman: Well, I pursue this not to be facetious . . .

Mr. Jotcham: Well, I misunderstood you.

The Chairman: Mr. Milne?

Mr. Milne: This is one of the questions that we asked our members and maybe you will be interested in what they said.

The Chairman: Yes, I am sure we would.

Mr. Milne: Reading what they said.

"From a purely advertising standpoint, there appear no disadvantages to foreign ownership of

The Chairman: Do you all agree with that?

Mr. Shoults: No.

The Chairman: Incidentally, Mr. Wilkes, I don't want you to think that your Association is alone in having people disagree when they come before this Committee.

Mr. Wilkes: Fine.

The Chairman: Mr. Shoults?

Mr. Shoults: First of all I think the magazine picture in Canada is bleak. I take a risk when I say that because I am sure Maclean-Hunter would not be static about that concept. But the fact of the matter is first of all, in the United States where television audiences are considerably more fractured than they are in Canada, the size and stature of magazines has diminished. It has diminished because of television. That is number one. I think the same trend, whether we like it or not, will persist in Canada.

Now secondly, the thing that is even more difficult for Canada is the fact, as we have pointed out earlier, there is an awful lot of advertising that is originating in the United States. If a large campaign is originated in the United States and it is decided that television will be used, I think you will find that in most cases the same condition persists in Canada.

This would be true whether it is against Time or Life or whatever it is, so automatically you don't have any control on whether you are going to go into a magazine or not, if you are a Canadian agency placing an ad for an American parent, and I think history and the figures will prove my point.

It is just a matter of time, and if I were running the world in the case of Time magazine I would be just as happy if they would print the Canadian section in the United States. I would be much happier if they did that. I am not talking about any reflections on Time or anything else, because it is just a matter of looking at it from a Canadian citizen's point of view.

Canadian media. In fact there are some advantages in the availability of good research and world wide news gathering facilities.

From an editorial standpoint, it is a different matter. Along with the "Finance," "Communications" is a key industry and should not be controlled by foreign owners who cannot be as deeply concerned with encouraging, supporting and reflecting the development of our culture, and cannot always provide maximum opportunity for Canadian talent, such as artists and writers.

Those foreign owners who are already here must ensure that editorial content is in the hands of Canadians, and is not inimicable to Canadian interests. At the same time they must respect Canada's national interests and not abuse their presence in Canada. "In one sense Canada is deprived of cultural wealth that could be made available elsewhere if the necessary advertising support was not siphoned off by foreign owned media."

The Chairman: Thank you.

Well, this has been a good discussion to have on our records.

Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: What would you say as to the future of the new type of magazine which now appears to be developing in the metropolitan communities such as Toronto Life and Toronto Calendar?

Mr. Wilkes: That was a point I was going to make, Senator McElman.

It seems to me that the question "What is the future of magazine publishing in Canada", and if you link it to the national press, I think I am a little bit inclined to agree with Scotty. But I am not at all concerned about the vigour of Canadian magazine publishing situations, on the ground that it would appear as though there are going to be more and more specialty publications of one kind or another and the local Toronto Life is only one. I think Miss Chatelaine, the youth audience and there are probably others available. Campus magazine is another. There appears to be any number of specialty magazines and areas of opportunity for Canadian magazine publishers and it seems to me that the future may lie more directly in that area than in the national press area.

The Chairman: Does your agency make any difference between controlled circulation magazine and paid subscriptions? Do you have a preference when you are buying advertising?

Mr. Wilkes: Oh, I think we do.

The Chairman: Which is it?

Mr. Wilkes: It is for paid circulation.

The Chairman: Is that a standard point of view and is that the view of pretty well everybody?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes, except that in the business press, of course, most of the publications are controlled.

The Chairman: But in the other consumer magazine field?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes.

The Chairman: You would prefer paid circulation to qualified or controlled circulation?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes.

Senator McElman: But isn't it a fact that controlled circulation is increasing?

Mr. Wilkes: I suppose it is increasing to some extent. Senator McElman, and I think that probably the leading publication in the controlled field of a large type is the Homemaker's Digest. I would think it probably safe to say that it is increasing.

The Chairman: Do the controlled circulation magazines belong to the MAB?

Mr. Wilkes: No.

The Chairman: Do they pay you an agency commission?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes.

The Chairman: Although they don't belong to the MAB they do pay you agency commissions?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes.

Senator McElman: We are told that advertisers quite recently in recent months are beginning to switch—no switch, but beginning to reduce their share of the dollar to television and they are moving out to print. Do you find this as a group?

Mr. Wilkes: Well, I don't think so.

The Chairman: Is this a trend?

Mr. Wilkes: I don't think so.

Mr. Shoults: Not in our case.

Mr. Wilkes: I don't think it is a trend at all. I think it is true that the newspapers in the last couple of years have chalked up some gains but there doesn't appear to be on a national average basis much change. I don't think there is a trend that way.

The Chairman: Does CFRB's brief over-state the case when it says "It is within the power of the advertising agencies to exert a profound influence on the life style of the Canadian people"? Do you think Mr. Wilkes, that you and your associates exert a profound influence on the life style of the Canadian people?

Mr. Wilkes: I don't know quite how to answer that. You mentioned earlier that you don't believe that the group here is without a social conscience. I think we could present chapter and verse of many, many things that advertising agencies have done as direct contributions, most of them free, to any number of causes; charitable and otherwise, and that might be considered a contribution I would say to the life style.

From a standpoint of advertising creative material, whether it be newspaper, magazine advertisement or television commercial, I think perhaps some contribution depending upon the nature of the individual message, but whether it is a profound contribution I don't really feel qualified to judge.

Mr. Jotcham: I would think that the life style of the Canadian consumer has a profound influence on the advertising agencies.

Mr. Campbell: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jotcham: Our job is to try and find out what makes the consumers tick, if you like, and our job is to try and communicate to the consumer messages encouraging him to buy.

Unless we are aware of what the life style of the consumer is or may be, we cannot effectively communicate our messages. So we must be aware of our life style.

The Chairman: I am not saying this critically at all, but don't you have a great deal to do with determining what public taste is?

Mr. Jotcham: No, I don't think we do.

The Chairman: You don't?

Mr. Jotcham: No.

The Chairman: How can you sell products without—

Mr. Jotcham: We try to go along with public taste, public demand, and fill consumer needs and they are there and they are in existence, but we follow trends rather than set them.

The Chairman: Do you?

Mr. Jotcham: Yes, through advertising.

The Chairman: Do you think the media follow trends or set them in their editorial content?

Mr. Jotcham: I would say that they have more opportunity to set trends than we do, yes.

Mr. Brisebois: Mr. Chairman, I could add a point here on the changing life style re French. We made this point before the Gendron Commission. We talked about the quality of French spoken in Quebec against that of international French and I think the agencies in Canada have been in the forefront of improving the French language through our advertising because we have people who are qualified to write good French and many many times in the vocabulary, we have been able to make people adopt the right terms.

We have been doing this slowly but we have been advancing the proper use of the language in Quebec. In this way we have been able to help, I am sure.

The Chairman: Well Mr. Jotcham, do you agree with that?

Mr. Jotcham: Well, up to a point yes. Here is a situation right now where joul right now is being used considerably in the Province of Quebec, particularly among the young people and already agencies, and not yet mine, are starting to develop ads which are talking in the language of the consumer, and are reverting to, if you like, joul in their advertising.

Mr. Brisebois: Well, it could be qualified as well. You can have a commercial using Western slang just for the heck of it.

Mr. Jotcham: I mean, you have to look at some advertising that appears now which definitely talks in the language of the teenager and of the pop music and all of these things that are happening in the youth area.

You know, in our ads we are saying "now we are with it," and the expression "now we are with it" did not come from the advertiser; it came from the young people themselves. These are where the expressions are developed.

The Chairman: So you are saying you follow?

Mr. Jotcham: We follow.

The Chairman: You don't lead?

Mr. Jotcham: We follow, and we try to talk in their language.

Mr. Sinclair: I agree basically with what Dennis has said that we follow tastes rather than lead them and that is our proper function. It is not our province to try and shape Canadian tastes.

However, an involuntary result does come about which affects tastes, and if you like to use an electronic term, it is a feed-back that happens. It is a fact that a new product usually improves on an old product and it is therefore a fact that an advertiser likes to associate themselves with new trends.

If there is a new fashion in the length of women's skirts, in their hair-do's, in styles of music, it will be very quickly sensed by advertising people and that style will show in illustrations or in music background to commercials and the like which will mean that much more exposure of this new fashion that is coming along which will amplify the trend towards that fashion.

However, that is not an intentional thing. It is an incidental thing. May I add one further point?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Sinclair: In the matter of profound effect on culture, I think that advertising creation in Canada does indeed produce a profound influence on Canadian culture. It is the simple fact that advertising directly, the people employed in advertising creative departments and indirectly, the talent employed in the creation of both printed advertisements and broadcast commercials, advertising employs a great many fresh, bright talents among musicians, actors, models, artists and photographers.

It is a fact that I think all of the Group of Seven while they were sketching in Algonquin Park, earned their keep in advertising studios in Toronto. It is a fact that of the best known contemporary painters, almost all of them at one time or another had worked in advertising agencies, including such people as Harold Town, Gerald Gladstone who is an alumnus of my shop, and so on.

The same thing is true of musicians, playwrights and authors. Novels are written in the spare time and on holidays by advertising men to a considerable extent and they then of course, if they establish themselves, can turn to their art full time.

The Chairman: Along this same line perhaps I could put this question to Mr. Wilkes. I am sure it is a question which has been asked many times and I hope you will have an answer. I will be most interested to learn how you do answer it.

We know for a fact that from the Economic Council that a dramatic number of Canadians live under the poverty line. I have statistics, but not before me, that say approximately 40 per cent of the rural homes and 19 per cent of the urban homes are living under the poverty line.

We also know from statistics that, for example, the instance of television viewing is greater in these homes than in more affluent homes. Does it concern you that your advertising portrays as normal, a standard of affluence which these people can simply never hope to attain? Wouldn't this surely breed discontent?

Mr. Sinclair: May I have a go?

The Chairman: Well, you all may have a go.

Mr. Sinclair: Well, first of all, it is a matter of concern. Speaking at least personally, I have been worried about it, but it needs to be put into perspective.

The Chairman: Please do.

Mr. Sinclair: The fact is that if we take a poverty-stricken Canadian through his day from the moment he rises in the morning in his slum environment, until he goes out on the street and sees the flashy, shiny motor cars; the high rise apartment buildings that he can't aspire to, and walks by the splendid restaurants and the shop windows with the clothes, and looks at the other people on the street in the clothes that he can't afford, the amount of time he spends being reminded by advertising that there are good things to have, is a minute percentage of the impression, upon that human being in the course of his life, that he is deprived.

He knows damn well that he is deprived and he doesn't need advertising to tell him so, and I think it is a sentimental point of view to put that argument forward.

The Chairman: Mr. Jotcham?

Mr. Jotcham: May I make two quotes. Number one, I think it was Browning who said "Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp or what's a heaven for", and so should we show the devil in this case.

I also think it was Winston Churchill who was very much in favour of advertising because it set before men goals which they could strive for to bring them out of these very areas of poverty that you have been talking about.

The Chairman: Yes, but I would set that against the fact that the goals are hopelessly unobtainable for these people. I take both your points but I think you have asked the question in the first instance by saying yes it does concern you. It is a sentimental point of view but I think it is probably more than a sentimental point of view to a lot of the people in this country.

Mr. Jotcham: May I add something to that?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Jotcham: Because I think it is important in this context and perhaps it is a personal view which I have expressed publicly before, but I think the advent of television itself and programming and what-have-you has set goals before the people. I mean movies, if you like, where the affluent programmes did not show the poor side of life, and I think—Maurice, stop me if I am wrong—that the advent of television in Quebec had a great deal of influence in putting before the French Canadians the kind of situation that he was in opposite the rest of Canada through American programmes and so forth coming into the Province of Quebec. And I believe this had a great deal of influence on the quiet revolution.

The Chairman: Well, you can't it seems to me, only accept responsibility for the good things. If there are good things then surely there are others which must concern you that aren't so good?

Mr. Jotcham: Well, these things do concern me and they concern many agencies. We give many hours of time in assisting with charitable drives and so on, and our time is donated free in this area.

But I don't feel that your point of setting before a man something which he can strive to reach is bad. I think this is good. I think this should encourage these people.

You say the opportunities aren't there, but I think there are a great deal of opportunities in this country for people, and the greater the goals you set for them the more they will strive to reach them and that happens to be my own personal opinion.

The Chairman: Of course.

Mr. Jotcham: So I don't feel it is all that bad. I don't think you want to show them people in poverty that will entertain them any better.

The Chairman: Well, I may be guilty of Mr. Sinclair's charge of sentimentality but I think it must be terribly difficult to be a mother of a child at Christmastime and the child comes to her, having seen expensive toys at Christmas, expecting those toys and somehow it never happens. Sentimentality maybe, but it is a problem and I know it worries you.

Mr. Brisebois: I really think that the point has been well covered now, but I lived for some time in Europe and I got into a lot of these arguments with people all over the world and as you know advertising to a great degree is economic in North America but in those days they didn't have a mirror in front of them, they didn't have goals to think about.

It is changing I know, but in Canada and in the United States, a poor chap may be suffering when he is young but he could become president of a company because he has those targets in front of him. Because he has this, he works harder for it, and is more determined to succeed.

Senator Macdonald: Do you think it is true today that the average fellow or the poor man, thinks that he is going to be the president of a company. That might perhaps have been the case in the early 1900's but so few people ever reach great positions that I think the day is past where an ordinary fellow, unless he has very exceptional ability, could become the head of a great company.

Mr. Brisebois: I firmly believe that it is still true today. I believe this more so than ever because education is spread right across now and you don't have to be wealthy to be educated.

These people are much more determined than the son of a rich man and there are quite a few examples in Canada and the United States where this has taken place. I firmly believe that.

Senator Macdonald: I hope you are right.

Mr. Milne: I share your concern about sentimentality but I ask you one question. Are you going to deprive them of television? I don't think that is the answer.

The Chairman: Well, I don't think that is the answer either. I quite agree with you. Indeed, those very same people I am sure have great enjoyment from television and it may be one of their very basic enjoyments.

Mr. Milne: The benefits may offset the disadvantages.

The Chairman: Possibly.

Mr. Sinclair: Well, Senator, I think this may be as significant a discussion that takes place before your Committee. That may be pretentious of me but I think we are on to an immensely important subject and if you will bear with me I have two or three comments to make.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Sinclair: Around the turn of the century the Fabian socialists were forming the British Labour Party and one of their early leaders, a man called John Bacon, declared that the tragedy of the working classes was the poverty of their desires. It is a fairly famous quote because they harangued and harangued the working class to become acquisitive, to break out of their class and their complacency was immutable.

For generations they couldn't form a government although their arguments were clearly in favour of the interests of the working class. It wasn't until the rise of advertising and the mass media that advertising financed, that Labour could form a government in the United Kingdom.

In the United States it is coincident with the rise of television that the American negro has asserted himself. John Hersey, one of the greatest American journalists, has done a magnificent book called "Incident in the Algiers Hotel." It is a minute examination of a fragment of the negro riots in the city of Detroit in the summer of 1967.

In the course of that book he quotes a highly intelligent negro girl who took part in the riots. I believe she was a sophomore at the University of Michigan, and she says "You know, the riots were like a picnic. Mom and Pop, the kids and everybody was out there. You have been looking at all this cruddy T.V. glamour, all your life, and you couldn't have it—go out and get it."

And the fact is that the American negro views more hours of television than any other human being on earth and he has seen that middle class comfort and he decided to have it, and he is getting it.

Now, this is only incidentally related to advertising because of the T.V. hour, only 12 minutes at most is advertising, but the rest is all those comfortable middle-class sets on the "I Love Lucy" shows and the like and those are the things that the American negro is determined to get.

I say that making people acquisitive, making people want things, is the first thing you must do before they can have them.

The Chairman: Well, only 12 minutes of advertising but the remaining 48 minutes is made possible by the advertisers' dollar.

Mr. Shultz: Well, I think your point is right. We encourage them to buy products which perhaps they can't afford, and on this point I think you are correct.

The Chairman: I think we would all agree that there is an enormous amount of social unrest, social ferment if you will in the United States today, and let's face it in Canada.

It has been said many times to the Canadians, and in many different ways, that the public appears to feel itself a victim of the media. I quoted from the CFR brief but I should give equal time to CHUM.

When they were here this morning they said "The general feeling of being 'led' by the press is incapable. From the public's assumption that 'we are manipulated-to-buy-things-we-do-not-really-need' to the opinion that it cannot derive a 'true' sense of what is "really" going on . . . the listener (reader, viewer) feels that he is being managed, not informed."

If there is some kind of credibility gap as far as the media is concerned, is the advertising media in Canada, Mr. Wilkes, suffering from some kind of credibility gap?

Mr. Wilkes: Well, I am not at all sure that I share the view of CHUM in this respect. I am more of the opinion that there is less of a credibility gap than they have indicated.

It seems to me that the concept of providing the public with what it apparently wants—we have plenty of evidence of the size of audiences that are developed. When you are talking about broadcasts, whether it be radio or television, when you put on a long hair, if you like, programme versus something that has more popular appeal, the ratings go up. I am rather of the opinion that the credibility gap does not exist to the extent which they suggest. I don't think that there is any feeling on my part that there is a credibility gap as far as advertising is concerned.

Mr. Jotcham: Well, what is the basis of the statement? What is the percentage that he is talking about? Has he any research to back this up?

The Chairman: Well, he professed to have research, yes. It is not documented in the brief but he went on to the next sentence and said "This attitude comes from every cultural and economic sector. The poor feel disenfranchised and helpless; the young feel unwanted and misunderstood; the affluent feel threatened; the intellectual feel debased and the morant feel thwarted."

Mr. Solway, who is an open line commentator on CHUM spoke rather eloquently to that particular paragraph and I asked him "Did all of those people with those various descriptions listen to his station?" He contended that they did and he spoke with them regularly on his broadcast.

However, Mr. Wilkes feels that there is no credibility gap.

Mr. Milne?

Mr. Milne: Just once again, Mr. Chairman, this is a question which we asked our members, and if you will bear with me I will read their answer as well.

The Chairman: Fine. Perhaps you will send us the whole survey.

Mr. Milne: We would be delighted to do that, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Well, if the Institute would permit it, we would be very interested. Anything that isn't private or confidential we would be very pleased to receive.

Mr. Milne: Well, let me just read this one.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Milne: It goes on to say:

"Not all agree but a majority feel that there has been a decline in credibility with respect to both editorial and advertising. One rubs off on the other and in the process both editorial and advertising suffer reduction in impact and effectiveness. Irresponsible reporting, sensationalism, exaggerated advertising claims made in an inane, fatuous or outlandish manner hurt the credibility of all media content, and any bad advertising reflects badly on all advertising.

However, this is not entirely the fault of the writers and the advertisers. Increased sophistication brought about by the higher total educational level, the expanded media universe, the increased volume of advertising and the environment of rapid change have led to a decrease in the acceptability of propaganda, including advertising.

Coupled with this is the lack of credibility of the young towards the Establishment, of which "Advertising" is seen to be a part, and the mistrust of advertising by Universities, Governments and intellectuals generally. With all this it becomes evident that not only has media content become less credible but that audiences have grown more discriminating and more liable to question past ways of doing things. As one member said, advertising is like sex—before they only thought about it—now they talk about it too.

Nor are all advertisers perfect and some give substance to the views of the critics. One result, however, is that the advertisers have been made more conscious of their responsibilities with a concomitant higher level of honesty at the national advertising level."

The Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Sinclair: You quoted from a brief which refers to a credibility gap. It is suggested that advertising is not believed and I must admit that a great deal of advertising is not, and indeed should not be literally believed.

Everyone who is ever exposed to an advertisement knows that somebody made money out of his own self interest, to put his own special meaning in his own terms.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Sinclair: Everyone who looks at an ad is warned in advance. These people are trying to sell you something and they are spending money to do it.

However, the credibility gap argument in the same brief was an argument that people are being manipulated into buying things they don't want rather fascinates me.

If advertising is so immensely effective that people have lost control of their purse-strings, and are being made to buy things they don't want, then surely there is not a credibility gap, or if there is a credibility gap then please, how can we be accused of manipulating people?

The Chairman: Thank you.

Senator McElman: On this same subject?

The Chairman: Well, I have only one other question which I would like to put and that perhaps might close the hearing, but I would like you to go first, so please do.

Senator McElman: I have here an enclosure that came to us from the Canadian Advertising Advisory Board. It is a reprint that they have from the Prairie Provinces, Royal Commission Report on Consumer Problems and Inflation.

In it there is a breakdown on advertising expenditures as a percentage of sales by Canadian manufacturers. It lists 60 different sections. I checked out the top 7 of these and these are the ones with the largest percentage.

The first is breakfast foods, just short of 12 per cent. These are the ones where if your kid eats a certain breakfast food he grows 2 feet taller or something of that nature.

The next one is 6½ per cent. It is corsets, girdles and foundation garments. The ones that have so much snap that they snap back at you!

The Chairman: We don't know about that, Senator McElman!

Senator McElman: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am only speaking of the advertisement.

Mr. Sinclair: That is just modesty.

Senator McElman: The next is in the chemical field Medicinal and pharmaceutical preparations which is over 6 per cent and these are the ones where the argument as to who has the greatest number of ingredients to stop your headache. I think they all say they have more than aspirin, you know.

Mr. Wilkes: More than that other one!

Senator McElman: And then we get to soaps and washing compounds—that is 11.3 per cent. These are the ones that are fouling all our waters.

The next is toilet preparations with 15.86 per cent where if your wife uses a certain cold cream, suddenly instead of being a 50 year old wife she is a 25 year old wife.

And then the polishes and dressings. The polishes suppose are the ones that do the housework for you. They are 7 per cent.

And then finally the pipes, lighters and smoker suppliers that give us all the cancer, et cetera, and that is 6.4 per cent.

These are the highest and they are the problem area in society. What I wanted to ask if how you possibly relate the type of advertising we see in so many cases with the code that you all subscribe to? This code also comes from the Canadian Advertising and Advisory Board.

Mr. Shoults: Well, Mr. Chairman, just as a joke could I take on cigarettes for a minute?

The Chairman: Sure.

Mr. Shoults: You have the gentleman called Benson.

Senator McElman: He has been called something other than gentleman!

Mr. Shoults: I was being deeply sarcastic.

The Chairman: Benson never hedges!

Senator McElman: Now Mr. Chairman, it is time to adjourn!

Mr. Shoults: He has made it pretty obvious that he is out for increased taxes and revenue and I think one of the easiest ways he could solve all of our cigarette problems would be just to triple the tax on cigarettes. He would get more revenue . . .

Senator McElman: How do you know he would get more revenue? Everybody would just stop smoking.

Mr. Shoults: That is it precisely, sir. That is the whole point. That is the solution to one of our evils right there, so if you just increased the taxes on cigarettes, you would solve the cigarette problem.

Senator MacDonald: You think the government should intervene then to stop this kind of advertising in an indirect way?

Mr. Shoults: Yes.

Senator MacDonald: I saw an ad not so long ago . . .

Mr. Shoults: This is aside.

Senator MacDonald: Well this is aside also. I saw an advertisement not long ago—it was an oven cleaner, and the woman must have been a terribly dirty housekeeper because it just was incredible that an oven could get that dirty. And then it was even more credible that any kind of an oven cleaner would clean it and the dirt and grease would rush off just like magic—I don't know where it was going to.

Do you think that is honest advertising?

Mr. Shoults: Well, this is a subject which we could dwell on for hours, but I think very quickly that if advertising is dishonest, it doesn't portray the product properly, nothing will run the product into the ground faster because once the public buys it under false pretenses they will never go back again.

I find it very hard—you might get away with it once, but you will not do it twice. Any manufacturer that deliberately advertises under false pretenses will not live much of a life.

The Chairman: I think I must say also in response to Senator McElman's question, and partially in response to Senator MacDonald's question, that I am not sure fully that your questions dwell within the reaches of the Committee but rather deal more directly with a study which we are not doing of the advertising industry.

However, I think in fairness to Mr. Wilkes that if you would like to comment on Senator MacDonald's question, please do so.

Senator McElman: Well, could I just read from appendix 1, page 17, paragraph 78 under the special note section?

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator McElman: This is paragraph 78:

"Nevertheless, the participating organizations agree to discourage, wherever possible, the use of advertising of questionable taste, or which is deliberately irritating in its content, or method of presentation."

Mr. Wilkes: You see one of the problems Senator McElman, that I think we are probably faced with is that advertising takes many forms and we as an institute are responsible, as has been said earlier, for about 85 per cent of the national advertising that goes on in the country. But there is retail advertising, a great deal of it, there is classified advertising and direct mail advertising. There are a number of different forms and there are a number of different areas and origination points over which we have no control.

That is not to say that on occasion, some of our members may not be guilty if you like, of producing an advertisement or a television commercial for an individual client that some people—and it becomes a very subjective thing at this particular point—think is in bad taste or they think it manifests some dishonest point of view.

I think Mr. Shoults' point is well taken that generally the market place keeps the advertising business, certainly in our scheme of things and the national scheme of things, just about as honest and in good taste, if you like, as it is possible for us to make it because we are not out to offend people, we are out to persuade them.

I think that this automatically exerts a type of control that is worthwhile as far as the public is concerned.

Mr. Jotcham: I think too that the percentage of complaints, if you like, is very low, and usually quite personal.

You talked about one particular area, for example, where there are so many more ingredients than aspirin. That is a true statement probably or otherwise it would not have passed through your government organization, the Drug Department, in which all of these advertisements have to be passed and approved. And now by the Canadian Association of Consumers.

As far as good taste is concerned, it has to be an individual factor. I am one of the old school, one of the Establishment, if you like, in that I have been extremely concerned about the increased amount of nakedness that has been shown in advertisements and so on, and the last thing that crossed my desk was an approval from the government to now advertise both contraceptive drugs and also contraceptives themselves.

Now, where does good taste begin and end? It is a government edict which now allows these things to be advertised, so I think it has to be a matter of personal choice and I think when these complaints come in they are largely a matter of personal thinking rather than them being in bad taste or being unethical.

The Chairman: I have two questions. They are both short, but the last question I am going to ask you all to comment on.

The one I am going to ask only you to comment on, Mr. Wilkes, is this. On page 13, section 49, you say:

"Eyes can be flicked away from print almost subconsciously while T.V., and to a lesser degree radio, virtually command attention . . .

Some of the newspaper publishers aren't going to be too happy about that are they?

Mr. Wilkes: I don't think they are because we have already had some comments about that.

The Chairman: You stand by the statement?

Mr. Wilkes: Yes, we think it is a valid statement.

The Chairman: It is modified when you go on to finish the sentence about intrusiveness, but it occurred to me that that was a pretty tough sentence as far as the newspapers were concerned.

Mr. Milne: Well, we are referring to advertising.

The Chairman: Well, I understand that.

Now, my final question I would like each one of you to comment on. It is a tough question for you people but you can't hide behind the Association because I am going to ask each one of you as individuals.

I will put it to you first of all, Mr. Wilkes. Are Canada's newspapers, magazines and broadcasters doing a good enough job?

Mr. Jotcham: Well, may I qualify that. Do you mean in terms of trying to find a place for their advertisements to be placed or in terms of editorial?

The Chairman: Well, I think I would let you answer that any way you want to. My question is are they doing a good enough job.

Mr. Wilkes: Well, I will elect to answer that from the standpoint of advertising and I think from the standpoint of advertising and from the standpoint of delivering the kind of audiences that are generally acceptable and reasonable to Canadian advertisers, think they are doing a very good job.

Mr. Jotcham: Well, can you go to someone else because I am thinking this through.

The Chairman: Fine, Mr. Sinclair?

Mr. Sinclair: From the point of view of advertising, no, and from the point of view of society, no. Under no circumstances can anyone assume that any institution in society is perfect, so the answer has to be no.

In point of view of advertising I think a couple of the most important inadequacies are the inadequate documenting of the demographics and the cyclical graphics of the audience. We don't know who reads publication or views a television station to an adequate degree.

There is also commercial clutter on many stations and from the point of view of society I think that outside of the major cities, really outside of Toronto and Montreal, there is inadequate foreign reporting in our newspapers.

A great many Canadians are not able through the daily newspaper to know enough about what is going on outside of Canada and the news coverage in the broadcast media tends to be superficial.

The Chairman: Mr. Milne?

Mr. Milne: I would more or less come up with what Mr. Sinclair has said, and add one thing in terms of advertising, and that is that they are doing various degrees of a good job. Some media supply better information than others and in terms of advertising you have to know what the characteristics of the medium's audience are, and it is helpful to know as much as you can.

There are some mediums—and I won't say which ones—that do a better job than others. This is an expensive process and some of them just can't afford to spend as much money as they would like.

In terms of social, basically as an individual, I am satisfied with the media that I see and receive. I think they match what I see from the United States, and I see a lot of American magazines personally, and I think the Canadian publications that I read are equally as good as anything that I see from either the United States or England.

As far as programming is concerned, I am one of these peculiar people who prefer CBC programming to anything that I see on ABC, NBC or CBS.

The Chairman: Mr. Jotcham, are you still thinking?

Mr. Jotcham: Well, I am always thinking. I would say in the area of service to advertisers, I think the bulk of our media do an excellent job. They supply us with good information for the most part, but this varies by media. But they do an exceptionally good job. They are able to do a reasonable buying job in most instances for their clients.

In terms of the editorial policy of the newspapers, I must admit that I have a considerable amount of concern with the sensationalism that is shown both in newspapers and in the broadcast media where we don't get both sides of the story.

I have to say that again this varies by media, it varies by time of year, it varies by what have you. I think on the whole though, that our media are doing an excellent and creditable job.

Unlike one of our worthy colleagues, who presented private brief, I don't believe that daily newspapers necessarily should cater to underground people with the use of 4-letter words, for example,

I think they supply a sufficient amount of editorial appeal to different groups of people with women's pages, sports pages, articles on cameras, et cetera, et cetera. There is a variety and I think they are doing an excellent job.

On the whole, I find that I am kept informed and well informed on what is going on on all sides of the fence; Canadian Government, foreign governments and what have you.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Brisebois?

Mr. Brisebois: Well, most of the points I was going to talk to have been pre-empted now, sensationalism being one. The fact that the media don't give us such information as for instance as they do in the United States, but I will take another tack if you wish.

Agencies have been accused, either as a group or individually, of favouring one medium over another. I am talking for myself now.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Brisebois: I would like to make this comment. We are all honest people and I hope professionals, and when we have a product, we know the product objectives, we try to find out what the market is and we try to reach it.

We see the creative side of these things and we try to match all of these items. We study all the things very carefully and if the advertising medium is TV, then that is the very best place for it to be. If it is radio, then that is the very best place for it to be. We study all these things very carefully and very consciously and honestly and I don't think the agency business has any favourites because we look at it and analyze it very carefully before we recommend it to our clients.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Shoults?

Mr. Shoults: I am sort of the last dog on the pole.

The Chairman: Last but not least.

Mr. Shoults: Most of my material has already been stolen.

In the first place, I hate to agree with Mr. Sinclair quite as much as I do. On the advertising side of the media, I find myself wearing two hats.

I as a person, a Canadian, don't like Time magazine in Canada at all. I wish it wasn't there. I wish we had a Time magazine just as good in Canada, but the fact of the matter is we don't, and if some client says to me "Well, should I go in Time magazine as opposed to Magazine X, unfortunately I have to tell him to go into Time."

I am concerned at this point about selling his product and not about what media I think should be for the good of Canada or this or that or the other thing.

I find myself in a rather invidious position as far as assessing media that are controlled outside of the country and controlled in.

As far as analyzing the media from an advertising point of view, I think that the newspapers do the poorest job of providing agencies with material and background.

I think that on the editorial end they have far more leeway than any other medium in Canada; they are not controlled by the government, they are not told how many adds they can run, they are not told what kind of editorial, they are not worried by being franchised by government bodies, so they should have more opportunity to take a position—a stand, an editorial stand.

As far as the broadcast media are concerned I personally feel that they are much more sales-oriented. We get on balance better material, particularly from the smaller stations in smaller areas than comparable newspapers.

I get very tired from listening to people tell me about how many commercials a radio or television station has. Under the aegis of the CRTC, they can tell them they have 12 minutes, 14 or 4, but there is no doubt that the broadcasters will have to adhere to whatever the edict is.

I wish that the broadcast media would take editorial stand but very few of them do. It has been obvious in the last few days one of the reasons they can't.

I think if I had a medium I would gamble anyway and take editorial stand. I wish they did. I think it is a void in Canada, particularly in areas where they don't get press coverage as easily as they do in the larger urban areas—that it would be a good thing.

I think that is all I can add Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

Mr. Wilkes and gentlemen, I perhaps could direct my remarks to you, Mr. Wilkes, but they apply equally to all of the members of your organization.

We are certainly mindful of the fact that yours is an association and as such there is a complex mix of association views and individual views. The discussion we have had here tonight has been useful.

We complete our hearings a week from tomorrow and then we turn to the task of writing our report, and I don't think that task has been made easier by the presentation made here this evening.

On the other hand, I don't think it would have been possible without the presentation here this evening because of the role and the function which the Canadian advertising agency industry has in the Canadian mass media spectrum.

I think you have all been very frank. I have said this to many publishers and broadcasters but if the organization has additional thoughts from having been here and having heard our questions and you have other ideas that you would like to send us, they would be gratefully received.

I hope we have demonstrated in our questioning that this is not an inquiry into the advertising industry, but at the same time you gentlemen are pretty important to the mass media, and again thank you, and I hope you will thank your full membership on our behalf.

As far as the Senators are concerned, I would say that if you are a Ranger fan you shouldn't be too unhappy about missing the game because with 15 minutes to go it is 4 to 1 for Boston. That was 15 minutes ago so you needn't raise the roof.

Our final hearing next Friday morning is with the Honourable Gerard Pelletier. The only change in the hearings schedules for next week from the one which you have is that at 2.30 on Thursday April 23rd we are going to receive a joint brief from L'Évangéline and La Société National des Acadiens.

Tuesday, at our next public hearing, we are receiving a presentation at 10 o'clock in the morning from CFTO and we are spending the afternoon with CTV management and the evening with CTV operations.

Wednesday and Thursday we are dealing mostly with cable companies, except for L'Évangéline as mentioned, and ACTRA, which is coming before the Committee next Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Thank you, and the meeting is adjourned.

The Committee adjourned.

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON MASS MEDIA

EVIDENCE

Ottawa, Tuesday, April 21, 1970

The Special Senate Committee on Mass Media met this day at 10 a.m.

Senator Keith Davey (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call this session to order. The brief we are receiving this morning is from Baton Broadcasting Limited, which of course as you know is CFTO Television in Toronto.

Seated on my immediate right is a director of the company, Mr. Edwin A. Goodman, Q.C., who is known to some of the Senators in other capacities as well. On my immediate left is Mr. L. M. Nichols, who is Vice-President, Finance, of Baton Broadcasting Limited. And at the left end of the table is Mr. E. J. Melaney, who is Vice-President, Programming.

I would simply say to you, Mr. Goodman, that the procedure we follow here is basically a simple one. We would ask you, if you could, to take, perhaps, ten, twelve, fifteen minutes to make an opening statement and then following that statement we would like to question you on your statement. I may say it has been the procedure where most of the witnesses who have come before the Committee to present the Committee with a written brief. We regret very much, but we certainly understand the fact that this hasn't been possible with CFTO. I know you have had other matters very much on your mind. Perhaps the fact that you have not been able to prepare a written brief for us will make us even less inhibited when it comes to the question period. We will question you on the contents of your remarks, but we will want to question you on other matters as well.

I think it is important for you to understand, and I know you do because we have talked about it, that this is not a poor man's CRTC hearing. We are interested in CFTO's role and function in the broad media spectrum and we are not interested in broadcasting as an end unto itself.

I suppose the CRTC isn't either, but in particular, this Committee is trying to look at the broad media spectrum. Having said those things, welcome, and thank you for coming. Why don't you simply proceed with your statement, then we will put questions to you. Incidentally, if you wish in answering questions to refer them to either of your colleagues, please feel free to do so.

Mr. Edwin A. Goodman, Q.C., Director, CFTO Television: Senator Davey and gentlemen, thank you very much. I was first of all going to apologize for not having a written brief in front of you, but as the Chairman has indicated, we have spent all of our time most recently in preparations for the hearings that were going on in which licence renewals came up.

Now, may I extend to you the apologies that the president and chairman of CFTO, Mr. John Bassett, is not present this morning. I think he felt that one appearance in front of the Committee was all that the Committee could stand of him and asked me to appear. I happen to be a director and have a small interest in Baton Broadcasting Limited.

Now, I think in his last appearance in front of you, Mr. Bassett said he believed that it was in the best interest of Canadian publishers and journalism and also Canadian broadcasting for any company or organization to practise personal journalism or personal broadcasting, where the public know who is responsible for what is written in a newspaper or what comes over the airways. I guess that puts me in an unenviable position to come today to represent a personal broadcaster. I can't say that I am John Bassett's alter ego, at all, but maybe in view of what the Chairman has stated, perhaps I am just a poor man's John Bassett, but I will endeavour to give to you what is the policy of CFTO, which, as we frankly say, is greatly influenced by the controlling shareholder, represented by the president.

Now, it seems to us that in view of the fact that the Telegram Publishing Company is the controlling shareholder in Baton Broadcasting Limited, it would be of interest to this Committee if we dealt in our opening remarks with our views on cross-media holdings, and I would like to begin at that spot.

First of all, without reservation we think that there is a great deal of benefit and value to be derived by the Canadian public from cross-media holdings. That is we believe that the development in broadcasting, newspapers, radio and television should have an interchange of interest. We feel particularly that there is a long and honourable tradition among newspapers that sometimes may be lacking in broadcasting. It is not my intention to bore you with the stories of the courageous stands that newspaper publishers and reporters have taken in various countries of the world in defence of freedom. In many countries where freedom is a minus quantity, newspapers have led that fight.

Furthermore, newspapers, of course, are interested particularly in news and in public affairs. We believe that this is also a very beneficial interest for broadcasters. We believe that the tradition of journalism can give courage to broadcasters which is particularly important in any industry which is heavily governmentally regulated. It is not an uncommon thing for people who have to get renewals of their licences to have some regard as to what they say and this inhibiting factor is understandable and natural. We feel to some extent it is overcome by the traditions of journalism.

In the same way, we believe that newspapers can learn a great deal from broadcasting. Broadcasting has been, and I suppose still is, more oriented towards entertainment naturally than the newspapers and we feel that this is also beneficial to the newspaper, which can benefit from sometimes being a little bit more entertaining than they have been in the past. We firmly believe that the public is best served by the interplay of these various traditions.

Furthermore, there are other areas which we feel can be helpful in communications and it is exemplified by what we are doing at CFTO. We believe the field of moving pictures, films, is important in broadcasting and recently Baton has embarked, with the help of the Canadian Film Development Corporation upon producing films. We have now one picture which is presently showing in Toronto and we have another one which we are co-producing out in British Columbia. We have several more in the stages of pre-production work because we feel this is all part of a type of service that a communications company should be giving to the public and which interrelates in a beneficial way.

Now, having made that brief statement on our support of the principle, I would like to just relate that to the situation in Toronto. I understand—I received instructions that both Mr. Honderich of the Toronto Star and Mr. Thornton Cran of CFRB have indicated that they feel that there is an unfair advantage to be derived by the Telegram and CFTO as a result of this interrelationship. Well, subject only to the fact that I do believe as I have already stated that it increases the quality of either the newspaper or the broadcasting, I don't think those statements are factual. We wish they were, but all you have to do is to read any of the Toronto Star's advertisements where they proudly proclaim the largest circulation in Canada on every occasion, to recognize that the advantage doesn't seem to hurt them too much.

Furthermore, you then look at CFRB which seems to have the largest listening audience of any radio station and once again you aren't going to have any copious tears.

Furthermore, it seems to me that this is a view which neither CFRB nor the Toronto Star seems to have held back in 1960, when they both made application for the granting of a television licence, which was granted to CFTO. It didn't seem to inhibit them at that stage, and as I say, the Star has continued to grow and CFRB has continued to grow notwithstanding the granting of the licence to Baton in which the Telegram has a large interest.

Now, quite frankly I hope to be helpful to this Committee but I am making these statements merely in response to the issues that were brought out by Mr. Honderich and by Mr. Cran. In particular, as far as CFRB is concerned, which has three radio stations in Toronto, an FM and an AM and a short-wave station in Montreal, and they are making an application for a station in Hamilton, I don't mind taking a swing at them because they have been whining ever since they didn't get the licence. As I say, there is just no factual basis for the statement that they have made as indicated by the situation in Toronto.

This leads me to the next subject and the question as to the dangers of some of the joint ownership of the mass media. Certainly, I say without fear of contradiction really that, in Toronto, no such danger exists. There are three daily newspapers, which, for a city the size of Toronto, is quite unusual. All of them are thriving with large circulation and as I have indicated, the circulation of the Star exceeds that of the Telegram; so there is obviously a lot of competition for men's minds in the newspaper field.

There are six television stations in Toronto. There is the CBC station; CFTO; there is the Hamilton station which has offices and proclaims itself as a Toronto station; there are three American stations, which all beam in a strong signal; so obviously no one has any monopoly in the television market.

In addition to that there are innumerable radio stations plus the periodicals. So all that I say is that insofar as Toronto is concerned, we only have a small share of the market which is open to competition on every side, and I don't think that we are in any position at all to monopolize ideas or men's minds in any way, shape or form. You couldn't think of a more fiercely competitive market than exists in Toronto any place on the continent.

Now furthermore, I just want to point out our views on this matter. When Barrie made an application to become a Toronto station, we did not oppose that application and, in fact, we made a public statement welcoming the application. The other day, when asked whether we thought there was more room for another television station in Toronto, Mr. Bassett's answer to the CRTC was: "I own a television station, therefore my answer to that question is no. If I didn't own a television station, my answer to that question would be yes."

He then went on to point out that CFTO could stand the additional competition but the effect would be felt in the periphery or marginal markets because it would fragment the advertising revenues which generally stay in the major markets. Stations like Peterborough, Kingston, North Bay, and Moose Jaw would be the ones that feel the effect of another station in Toronto, rather than CFTO.

The corollary of whether I feel that there are any inherent dangers—and as you see we obviously don't—is that if there are dangers, and I am not suggesting that there are in the situation in Canada at the present time, those dangers would arise out of large national holdings where there is no opportunity to pinpoint responsibility. That is, those communications businesses, which are more of an investment than an exercise in personal broadcasting, and where holdings are held in various parts of the country and operated from some other part of the country, present a greater danger than exists certainly in the Toronto situation at the present time.

As I have indicated, what is important to the public is to have alternate views and to know who is presenting the view and where they can pin the responsibility. In Toronto there are lots of alternate views and one thing is certain; they always know where to pin the responsibility.

Now, this then leads me really—going through your questionnaire—the first question that was asked was on the question of the suitability of the present system. In our opinion any system is as good as the people that operate the system to a large extent and systems alone don't decide excellence. But we believe that any system of regulation of broadcasting or, for that matter, any other field, requires the opportunity of a full and open hearing to obtain the varied views of affected groups, such as, in this case, the broadcasters and the public, by a board of competent persons, and we feel that does exist in broadcasting regulation at the present time.

The Broadcasting Act provides for full hearings and the CRTC has been following both the letter and the spirit of the Act, and we feel that the industry is being governed and regulated by a competent board. Not that the competent board has seen fit to be very kind to us, but I think in order that you may gain some idea as to the objectivity of our views, we had two main applications in front of the Canadian Radio and Television Commission.

The first was for a continuation of cable in Toronto that we got into just before the board took over supervising it, and they rejected us rather unceremoniously out of cable. We then made an application for the Windsor television station in conjunction with Maclean-Hunter; they allowed us to go in with the CBC, only I suppose as a short-term measure, as the CBC has to take it over within five years. So I must say that in making this statement I think we can be very objective about the matter.

Now, what we do agree with, and this really is the crux of the whole broadcasting situation at the present time, we do believe that the broadcast industry in Canada must be in the forefront of the fight to maintain a distinctive Canadian identity and that it must interrelate various parts of the country to each other.

In a country that is situated such as Canada is, right next to the United States, and with the large economic domination of Canada by the United States, this is one place where the Chairman of this Committee and I share an admiration for the views of Walter Gordon, though not necessarily for the means by which he had hoped to achieve these views.

With that situation existing in Canada today, the broadcasting industry has a very, very important obligation to the country. CFTO feels very strongly about that obligation, and we know that we agree with the CRTC which feels very strongly about that obligation. Now, in order to make something abundantly clear, I don't want you in this Committee to get the idea, that because we strongly support the CRTC in this, that we believe this is a very important obligation of broadcasting or that we endorse the proposed Canadian content regulations that are being heard—because in fact we do not. Our position is that which is being expressed by the CTV network.

We believe that they are premature and the views that Mr. Chercover expresses are supported by CFTO. While we strongly endorse the objectives, the question as to how you reach those objectives—I understand that Mr. Chercover is appearing later this day in front of your Committee, and he can express his views having a greater depth of knowledge than I have in this matter. But we are, with the other stations of the network, in support of the proposals that are being made by Mr. Chercover yesterday and again I believe this morning.

Now, we do however feel in this field, and this I suppose is the most constructive thing I can say in this rather long and rambling opening remarks, that we do believe that there is a great opportunity afforded this Committee by some simple recommendations to assist the strengthening of Canadian broadcasting, which will in turn help it assist in maintaining a Canadian identity; and I would like to propose in conclusion one simple recommendation which we suggest to you.

It flows from the steps that were taken by Parliament in connection with foreign periodicals. There has been established in the northern United States two television stations. One at Pembina, which is KCND, and one in Bellingham—KVOS—which have been established merely to live off of Canadian advertising to the detriment of those Canadian stations that are within their contours. It is our respectful recommendation to your Committee that, if it is important in a non-regulated industry like periodicals to give protection, in a regulated industry where you exact high demands and impose obligations on the industry, it becomes that much more important to give some protection.

And we suggest that the same steps be taken whereby the advertising by Canadian businesses on American television or radio stations becomes a non-deductible expense. This should succeed in directing some advertising of Canadian businesses back from the United States because it is only being beamed into Canadian audiences, and should strengthen Canadian broadcasting, in particular, those stations in British Columbia and in Manitoba. We think that this step would help Canadian broadcasters grow to economic strength that would enable them to continue to improve the quality of Canadian programming.

Now, we in CFTO are very proud of the quality of the programming. I think it is fair to say that we have clearly led the way of any private station in producing Canadian programming. 82.9 per cent of the money that we spend on programs is spent for Canadian programming. We produce programs for ourselves, we produce programs for other private stations. We produce programs for the network. And as I said, the money spent on our station—over 80 per cent of it is spent on Canadian programming.

We clearly recognize our obligations in this field, and if dollar sums are of any interest to you, since we have had our licence, we have spent approximately $5,700,000 on Canadian talent. That is not for program rights or not for technical help, but just for talent. That gives you some understanding of how seriously we take the obligations that are imposed upon us by the Broadcasting Act.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I hope those remarks may be of some assistance to you.

The Chairman: Your opening remarks will be very helpful, and I think what we will do now is turn right to the questions.

I say again if you wish to refer any of these questions to the other two gentlemen, please feel free to do so. I might again remind the Senators that Mr. Nichols on my left is Vice-president (Finance) and Mr. Delaney at the end of the table is Vice-president (Programming).

I suppose I should say, Mr. Goodman, that I have known you a long time but I have never thought of you as being a poor man's John Bassett.

I believe the questioning this morning will begin with Senator McElman.

Senator McElman: Mr. Chairman, your recommendation with respect to Canadian advertising dollars now flowing to border stations—that would be effective with the local Canadian-based firms but would it be very effective with subsidiaries of U.S. firms in Canada who could transfer their budget dollar through the U.S.?

Mr. Goodman: Yes, that could be a problem, senator.

Senator McElman: Do you have any thoughts on that?

Mr. Goodman: I think however, that naturally if the money is being spent in the United States by the parent company, there is no way we are going to be able to get at that, but I believe that that wouldn't be the effect. It would cause a fair amount of dislocation for the American firms that do go out of their normal advertising budget. I think that many firms do budget their Canadian subsidiaries on their own, and I think that rather than try to get around it, they would use the Canadian television stations. But it would certainly make it less effective in the cases where somebody like Lever Brothers would get the benefit of their American advertising.

But for example—I am told, and I am really thinking of the stations like Winnipeg and Vancouver, that a lot of the advertising done in Pembina is done by local stores in Winnipeg. I believe the same applies to Vancouver. Is that right, Mr. Delaney?

Mr. E. J. Delaney, Vice-President, Programming, Baton Broadcasting Limited: That is right.

Mr. Goodman: So we can certainly get at that type of thing. Pembina was put up just for the purpose of taking revenue out of Winnipeg by and large, and it certainly would never have been established if Winnipeg hadn't been right there to provide a course of revenue. That type of broadcasting or that type of advertising I think would be effective.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier, do you have a supplementary question?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, Mr. Chairman, but I will wait until Senator McElman has finished.

Senator McElman: On Pembina, you suggested that it would never have been established and it couldn't probably exist if it couldn't get the advertising dollar out of Winnipeg as well. Is that your view?

Mr. Goodman: That's right. We think the both of them probably couldn't continue to function.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Goodman, you speak repeatedly of Pembina and Bellingham, and I haven't heard Buffalo's name mentioned. Are you really mainly concerned about those pirate stations just over the border or are you not just principally interested in the Buffalo vis-à-vis the Toronto market situation?

Mr. Goodman: Strange as it may seem, Mr. Fortier, we are more concerned with them. It would be of some assistance to us but we have been doing very well indeed. Furthermore, the situation that the Senator expressed about national advertising, applies more to Buffalo than it would to Pembina or KVOs in Bellingham.

Now, we have done quite well except the fact that what may happen in the future may depend upon the events of the next week or ten days. It will be of some benefit to us but we feel that we have a large market; we are first in the field; and CFTO has the largest percentage of the audience. And we feel that the advertisers need us more than they do the other stations.

So while it would be of some assistance, that is not the primary aim, although we are always glad to have some help, especially, if we are going to be called upon more and more to make a contribution to maintain Canadian identity.

Furthermore, let me say this. As has been stated publicly on many occasions, CFTO has made a great contribution to the network. It produces programs which sometimes it sells to the network, sometimes it gives to the various stations themselves, and the strength of the network, to a large extent, depends upon the strength of CFTO on many occasions. So if it does give us a little help, it will merely be help that will strengthen CTV.

Mr. Fortier: Do you have any figures, realizing that this is a terribly relative area, but do you have any figures as to how many Canadian advertising dollars are beamed on Buffalo stations as compared with those that are beamed on Pembina and the Bellingham stations taken together? I have reason to believe that there are more Canadian advertising dollars, that are directed to Buffalo and I am thinking of the Montreal market, than Bellingham and Pembina put together?

Mr. L. M. Nichols, Vice-President, Finance, Baton Broadcasting Limited: There have been, Senator Davey and members of the Committee, numerous figures bandied about, the authenticity or the accuracy of which I guess nobody can know. But there has been a figure mentioned in excess of one million dollars being spent by Canadian advertisers on all three Buffalo stations.

Of course, a lot of that money comes from breweries; but to be actually accurate, I don't think anybody could be. They advertise for short flights, certain people are in for parts of the year and some of your large car manufacturers have common commercials. But if you ask them if they were being directed back in Toronto, they would say they were simply being purchased through the Buffalo market. I couldn't tell you the exact figure.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Goodman, Section 12(a) makes an exception in the case of Time magazine and Reader's Digest. In your approach to this particular problem, in translating it to the broadcasting industry, do you feel that exceptions should be made?

Mr. Goodman: No, not at all. I mean, Time comes here and they are over there—and I won't get into the question of the relative contribution that is made by magazines. I am not competent to do so. But I will say this. They are not making any contribution that can't be made much better by existing Canadian stations supplying a much greater service. They are not subject to the regulation about Canadian content or anything else. I would just say, categorically, no.

Mr. Fortier: So this would be a blanket non-deduction?

Mr. Goodman: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: Would you apply that back to magazines?

Mr. Goodman: I beg your pardon?

The Chairman: Would you remove the special exemption presently enjoyed by Time and Reader's Digest?

Mr. Goodman: Well, I am just not really competent to make a statement on that. I would be unfair to both Time and Reader's Digest to let my national Canadian emotionalism get into that.

Senator Prowse: Mind you, Time does have limited Canadian content.

Mr. Goodman: That's right. There can be the distinction between Time and Reader's Digest and the American broadcasting stations.

The Chairman: Well, getting back to Senator McElman's line of questioning. He asked only one question and we have been on the supplementaries ever since. I think you are competent to give us the benefit of your thinking. This is an area which interests the Committee greatly.

We have had representations, as I am sure you know, from Time and Reader's Digest and from the Canadian magazine industry and from many individuals and organizations, and we have been able to draw most people out on the subject. With the genuine respect I have for you, I do think you have an opinion which would be of great value to this Committee, but if you will not express it, we won't make you. However, do you think it would be in the national interest to remove the exemption presently enjoyed by Time and Reader's Digest?

Mr. Goodman: Well, let me say this. If I really believed that it would result in a resurgence of a strong Canadian periodical industry, I would probably be in favour of it; but my own views are that it probably won't have that result—I just don't know if it would. If I really felt that that would be the result, I think a case can be made for it.

I am speaking personally now, and not for CFTO. Let us make this perfectly clear, because my views are diametrically opposed to Mr. Bassett's on this subject.

I don't really believe—and this is really an uneducated guess—that this would have that result, and if it doesn't have that result, then any point would be that it is not worthwhile.

Whereas with the Canadian broadcasting industry, we do know that we have a very viable industry which has been called on to make greater and greater contributions. I think that the contributions of broadcasting to Canadian identity and to Canadian interrelations are much greater than that of the periodical industry, and therefore I feel that it is much more important in our field.

If you gentlemen could satisfy yourselves that there is going to be some truly great benefit then I think it would be justified, but unless you could satisfy yourselves of that, I think it would not be justified.

Senator McElman: Associated with this, Mr. Goodman, is the development with Canadian advertising agencies. We have learned through recent testimony, and through other material, that the corporate membership of the I.C.A., The Institute of Canadian Advertising, is 49 and 25 per cent of them are now U.S.-controlled through subsidiaries and so on, and they are getting somewhere in the order of thirty to thirty-five per cent of the share of dollars made or handled by the Canadian agencies.

Would you see a danger in a continuation of this trend from the standpoint of Canadian ownership; and additionally, would you perhaps see some danger in U.S. subsidiaries siphoning Canadian dollars toward broadcasters at border points?

Mr. Goodman: Well, my instructions are that we have noticed no effect on our programming by this phenomenon, if you want to call it that, by the American advertising agencies. But I would ask Mr. Delaney to comment on this because he works directly with the advertising agencies and can be of more benefit than I can be.

Senator Prowse: May I ask a question?

The Chairman: Certainly.

Senator Prowse: You said "my instructions are." Now, did you mean "your information is"?

Mr. Goodman: Yes; my information. My information came from Mr. Delaney so I am going to turn this question over to him.

Senator Prowse: Fine.

Mr. Delaney: We have two very strong, vibrant advertising agencies that account for large amounts of billings on our station and I will name them, if I may. That is MacLaren's, which is an indigenously Canadian advertising agency, and Cockfield, Brown and Company. We have never found in the ten years of doing business in Toronto that an advertising agency, be it a subsidiary or with some shareholdings from an American agency, has in any way unduly influenced in placing business. As a matter of fact, I wish I could be more specific, but as one's mind goes back over Marketing magazines, I have seen so many numerous occasions where an agency has resigned an account on competitive reasons in the United States, and yet the Canadian agency continues to keep its counterpart in Canada.

We have never found any media control or undue influence put upon our sales organization or on the management of the station to bring availabilities out in a certain fashion or to give favouritism because I think the Canadian agencies do compete vigorously and well, and I think if there is any association with American agencies, it is strictly supplementary.

Or you may have an adjacent border point where somebody from the United States could service that client better, where there may be some creative aspect or technology that is available in the United States.

We have never found in our ten years—and I think we vigorously comb all the areas, from Western Canada right across to Newfoundland. We have our own sales office in Montreal, we have our own sales office in Toronto. We do not handle reps so we know from what we speak because they are our own employees who are doing this selling—and we haven't found any conflict at all.

The Chairman: Does it concern you, Mr. Delaney, that the advertising industry will be majority-controlled by Americans inside of ten years in Canada?

Mr. Delaney: If that would be the trend...

The Chairman: Well, you say "if that would be the trend." The figure presently is 24 per cent and it is going up one per cent a year on an average over the past five or eight years, and clearly that is the trend. So does this not concern you?

Mr. Delaney: Well, Senator Davey, I wish I could give you a more direct answer but I guess, like most people, the concern only comes when it becomes a reality. As far as CFTO is concerned, we haven't found any detrimental effect.

I personally, as a Canadian, might be concerned but I don't think, corporately, that it affects CFTO at all.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: Well, with the subject of perhaps the desirability of maintaining a Canadian identity—when it becomes majority-controlled, owned by U.S. interests, if that is permitted to happen, would you not see some danger in perhaps the direction that the advertising content might take? The further Americanization of the Canadian identity. Would that concern you?

Mr. Goodman: May I have that clarified, Senator? When you say "the Canadian content", what do you mean?

Senator McElman: Well, there is a type of advertising that conceivably could appeal to the American identity and perhaps it could be different for the Canadian identity.

Mr. Goodman: The actual commercials?

Senator McElman: The content of the commercials, the advertisements themselves.

Mr. Goodman: Well, let me say this. You can't treat that problem out of context of the whole Canadian problem.

Now, I am prepared to spend the next five hours with this Committee discussing the problems that face this country by means of maintaining a Canadian identity because I happen to be an economic nationalist, and my views, you know, are well known on this subject, or I have endeavoured to make them well known in any event.

Senator McElman: Excuse me, Mr. Goodman. I think we will be moving into that area, but the question is with regards to Canadian content in advertising.

Mr. Goodman: I believe of course that there are inherent dangers in any industry in Canada falling into other than Canadian hands in Canada. Our position is that to date there is nothing to show where that has been exercised against the best interests of the country.

Senator McElman: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, we can move on to another subject.

The Chairman: Are there any supplements?

Mr. Fortier: Maybe it is more of a comment than a question, but I can't resist putting it anyway.

This dichotomy which Mr. Delaney has made between his personal views and the corporate views of CFTO and Baton, I find difficult to see. Did you really mean what I understood you to say, Mr. Delaney, that personally you were concerned but since CFTO had not yet been adversely affected, you were not going to express that concern in the name of the company?

Mr. Delaney: Well, I think you have to appreciate that sometimes an individual can be concerned about a state of affairs that will eventually develop. Corporately, and as vice-president of CFTO, the concerns that are stated are not visible today. So my answer was that if all advertising agencies in Canada were owned by American parent companies, could be terribly discouraged by that as private citizen. The effects of what you have talked about ten years from now is not a growing problem to CFTO today, so I answered it in that way.

Mr. Fortier: It strikes me as being a clear expressed double standard which upsets me. Does Mr. Goodman agree?

Mr. Goodman: I don't think, Mr. Fortier, that it was expressing a double standard. As he was saying, that he is looking forward in the future, and personally he can see some concern of an industry falling completely in American hands, but that the company to date hasn't had any adverse experience from it, nor have they seen that growing power exercised against the best interest of the country to date.

Mr. Fortier: Surely Baton Broadcasting is a company which makes projections, which looks ahead; and in looking ahead, is this the view of the individuals who are controlling the company today, that they are personally concerned as Canadians but not corporately concerned?

Mr. Nichols: Well, perhaps if we could get your question in perspective. I presume you are asking if we are corporately concerned from a business point of view?

Mr. Fortier: I would hope that your corporate concern would express the views of the officers of the company as individuals also. No, either you are dealing with a good corporate citizen or you are dealing with good individual citizens.

The Chairman: Mr. Nichols?

Mr. Nichols: Well, I am still trying to get his question into its proper perspective.

The question came out originally, if I understood it: are we experiencing any diverse effect as a corporation by the growth that has occurred in the last few years?

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Nichols: And my answer to that is no. Therefore we don't foresee that we will.

Mr. Fortier: That view was expressed by Mr. Delaney, as a Canadian citizen, he was concerned; and he went on a step ahead and said that, corporately, he didn't think it would disturb you ten years from now. And I wonder to what extent you could accept—well, what I referred to as a double standard?

Mr. Goodman: That is quite unfair, Mr. Fortier. There is no double standard. Our position is very simple; that the company has no evidence to back its concern but that's...

Mr. Fortier: That is quite clear.

Mr. Goodman: ...no evidence to back its concern. Our concern is based upon inherent dangers. I would say, speaking for the directors, that all of the directors view this type of growth with concern. Therefore I suppose you would translate that into a corporate concern, you want to put it that way, but it is a corporate concern, based not upon any business evidence that the company has, but upon the views of the directors and management of the company.

Mr. Fortier: But as an economic nationalist, use your own words, are you not translating this personal concern into a corporate concern?

The Chairman: Well, I think in fairness that the witness has just indicated that he is.

Mr. Goodman: There is nothing that CFTO at this stage of the game can do about it. But there is something that these people around the table can do about it right now. We are making our contribution through our type of programming.

Mr. Fortier: Well, that was going to be my next question. Are you suggesting that anything be done by this Committee about this concern?

The Chairman: I was going to put that question as well and then perhaps we could phase out this part of the discussion.

You say you are an economic nationalist and I know you so to be, and I respect you for it.

Again I am expressing a personal opinion, but as an economic nationalist you must surely have some concern that an industry which subsidizes—perhaps that is the wrong verb—but it is responsible for about one-third of the revenue of the media in this country, is gradually, gradually becoming an American industry. The fact that you happen to be personally involved in the media must make it of even greater concern, so the question is, is there anything that this Committee should be thinking about in this area?

Mr. Nichols: The advertising dollars that are spent are not the advertising dollars of the agency but the advertising dollars of the advertisers themselves.

The national advertisers—as you well know, most of those companies are already American-controlled.

Mr. Goodman: If you fellows want to shut the barn door after the horses are already gone.

Senator Prowse: But we can keep the colts in.

The Chairman: Well, with respect, while the horses are still leaving.

Mr. Goodman: That's right. You may catch some of the horses that are still there; that's right.

My suggestion is—and Mr. Nichols has put his finger right on it—many industries are interrelated, and with respect, this Committee can't formulate a policy or make recommendations that doesn't take into consideration the whole of the economy; if anything is going to be done, it must be done with an overall policy for the whole country.

And as Mr. Nichols points out, they are only agents—they are agencies and they are agents for commercial corporations and therefore the policy is basically that of all people who advertise, and you have to look at it in that context.

My submission is therefore that you are considering all industries, you are considering the whole of the economy, and just to say, "Well, the fellow who is actually putting the money down—and who does have some effect" is not going to get at the nub of the situation at all.

And—well, that is my suggestion.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Nichols, when you say they are only agents, they are agents with a pretty profound influence?

Mr. Nichols: Certainly. There is no question about the fact that they have a profound influence. But I suggest to you that the person who is spending the advertising dollars has a very profound influence as well.

The Chairman: I have said many times that this is not a committee on advertising so perhaps we could terminate the discussion. I was simply going to ask you, is it not true that while the client may very often vary the creative approach, he seldom changes the media list, does he?

Mr. Delaney: Well, we are in the fortunate position in Toronto that if there is a national campaign that is going to go anywhere in Canada at all, we are number one on the list.

The Chairman: Well, that's fine. I think we are perhaps getting into a fairly detailed aspect of a matter that we should perhaps turn away from.

Senator Prowse: My supplementary question was this. What percentage of your advertising spots come from not just these American agencies but are American-oriented and then repeated in Canada specifically?

The Chairman: Mr. Delaney could answer this question.

Senator Prowse: Fine. Mr. Delaney, what I have in mind is this. For years I would read Pontiac ads and they would talk about "wide-track Pontiacs" when the fact is that with a General Motors car—now, this may not be true today because I haven't checked—but right up until very recently Chevrolets, Pontiacs, the small Buick and the small Oldsmobile all had precisely the same chassis. When you were taking about a "wide-track Pontiac" in Canada you would be in effect dishonest.

Now, how much of your advertising on commercials is American, produced in the United States for Americans, and is just shoved over to Canadians without any relationship at all as to whether or not the product may or may not be the same?

Mr. Delaney: Less and less, Senator. I wish I could give you statistics, but I am sure ACTRA and other groups will be able to. The Canadian approach to advertising is a thing that more and more American companies are recognizing every day, and where you used to see the great drop shipment of American commercials clearing customs for Canadian release, it is certainly on the decline.

We have a problem where advertisers have to approach a French market, so that, in itself, creates the situation where they must do commercials in Canada. If they are going to do commercials in Canada, they are going to set up a production session because they must go French; then they have already created the standard for producing in Canada.

And the American commercials that we have seen, even up to two or three years ago is on the decline. The commercial production companies certainly are on the increase. We own a commercial production company. We do car commercials for three out of the four each and every year. Five years ago we never did any.

Senator Prowse: In other words, the Americans are coming to Canada to have their commercials done?

Mr. Delaney: Certainly.

Senator Prowse: This is the trend?

Mr. Delaney: Certainly in the automotive field it is.

Senator Prowse: Now, is that because it cheaper to get them done here?

Mr. Delaney: Well, I think there is a definite Canadian approach to a commercial. I don't think you can take a commercial that not with the deep South in mind or the West Coast, and have the references to travelling across the Rockies to Vancouver, seeing the furtrimes or the torture tests on automobiles in rugged Northern Ontario. You can't capture any of this if you are just going to take a carbon copy of an American commercial. I think media and the creative departments of agencies have done an extraordinary job in getting this across to the principals.

On the other hand, Senator, you might find it of interest that we are seeing an interest in our own company by Americans coming to Canada to produce commercials for consumption in the United States. I could give you a long list of them.

Senator Prowse: Is that because the Canadian accent would be generally accepted throughout the States?

Mr. Delaney: Generally accepted and in many cases...

The Chairman: Can you give us some examples of that?

Mr. Delaney: We have done banking institutions in Detroit; we have done breweries in New York. We have done cosmetics in the United States; and wine. And I could go on.

The Chairman: Why would they come to you?

Mr. Delaney: Well, I should explain. We have a sales office in New York selling commercial productions. We have three people there employed day in and day out with no other purpose but to sell commercial productions. And these commercials in many, many cases are never ever seen in this country.

Senator McElman: Is it cheaper to do them in Canada than the U.S.?

Mr. Delaney: It isn't cheaper but what there is until time runs out, or the industry corrects itself, at the present time there are four facilities in Canada and there is a lack of colour facilities in New York.

Now, I am dealing specifically with videotape. We have many millions of dollars' worth of video tape equipment that is second to none on this continent, and we find that the people come to us because of those facilities.

Now, when the supply catches up in the United States and the plants become equivalent to ours, you may see a trend back; I don't know. The large production centres in New York and on the Coast are being used to produce programs for the network; so that if you were a large manufacturer and you wanted coloured tape facilities, Toronto just stands out like a beacon. That is obviously the reason why we established a New York sales office nearly a year ago.

Mr. Nichols: I might add that Mr. Delaney is being a little modest on this. We think that we have some of the finest production facilities in North America, and we think we attract them for that reason as well.

Senator Prowse: To repeat a question I mentioned a moment ago, but which I think has got lost in the shuffle, is one of the reasons they would like Canadian commercials due to the fact that we don't have the regional accent in speaking the English language in Canada that you find in the United States?

Mr. Nichols: Well, what about Newfoundland?

Mr. Delaney: Senator, I think that is obviously a very good reason. Our accents are not that different. But many times you will find people bringing in American talent to do commercials, but still facilities are being used in Canada.

The Chairman: Well, may I say that this is a very interesting and very worthwhile discussion but I think we are probably discussing matters outside of the terms of reference of this Committee.

Senator McElman: Mr. Chairman, there is one further point here which I think should be injected. This Committee has information, Mr. Delaney, that in some products with North American advertisers based in the United States, where the message can be the same—I am thinking of the larger soap and detergent manufacturers—that they are in fact repatriating all of their origination and placement of advertising to the United States.

Mr. Delaney: Well, I can give you an example, and I think one of the largest manufacturers to prove that example, is Lever Brothers. Lever Brothers and certainly Colgate, in Toronto, produce, I would say conservatively, 40 Canadian commercials each per year.

Senator McElman: Then you haven't seen this trend in your organization?

Mr. Delaney: No.

The Chairman: Isn't it true that the marketing function of Procter and Gamble has been substantially repatriated in the United States?

Mr. Delaney: Well, this might be but we haven't done a P. and G. commercial since Christmas, but we certainly have done P. and G. commercials at our plant.

The Chairman: Well, isn't Quaker Oats a good example of what Senator McElman is talking about?

Mr. Delaney: Well, you can always pick, I guess, an example of one that is going back but I could give you one that is coming forward.

We have examples now of plants that have opened up in Canada which were American-owned companies who are now producing commercials in Canada. Certainly our reps selling air time in New York bemoan the fact that their business is down in New York City because these clients are moving to Canada and placing their time through Canadian agencies.

The Chairman: Well, I think we have dealt with this at great length.

Senator McElman, do you have any other questions?

Senator McElman: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Goodman, something much more current. Could you tell us why specifically Mr. Bassett has taken CFTO out of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters?

Mr. Goodman: Well, Senator, that question catches me completely by surprise! As I indicated when I commenced with my few rambling remarks, we feel strongly the obligation to contribute to a Canadian identity; and therefore we feel that the objectives of the regulations as enunciated are objectives that we are in accord with.

The position of the CAB appears to be a negative position and was not a constructive position in what is a most important matter facing the broadcasting industry at the present time. While we are associated with the representations that are being made by CTV, and do not believe that the regulations should be accepted holus-bolus and require considerable modification, we feel that it is an incumbent obligation of broadcasters to try and assist the Board in reaching this objective.

It appeared to Mr. Bassett that that wasn't what was being done by the CAB and that on the contrary, they are being more negative in their approach, and not constructive. He felt strongly enough about it to resign from the CAB notwithstanding the fact that he is associated with the CTV representations.

That was the long and the short of it. There was no movement before or anything else. It all flowed out of the representations that were being made and our disagreement with the approach that was being taken by the CAB in front of the CRTC.

The Chairman: Were you at those hearings?

Mr. Goodman: No. We left the day before. We had been there but we did leave the day before.

Mr. Nichols was at that hearing, and the were reported very fully in the press, and my understanding is that Mr. Bassett made his investigation, read the press and picked up the telephone. There wasn't a board meeting called.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: And you wouldn't be surprised if I were not surprised by your last comment?

Mr. Goodman: No.

Senator McElman: Then I take it that wasn't just a matter of the type of approach or presentation that CAB made, but the principles involved as well?

Mr. Goodman: That's right. And I think that the type of approach certainly had some effect as it affected the principles. I think it is a question of both but, you know, basically we feel that the obligations of the broadcasting industry are to propose alternatives. We didn't feel that any alternatives were coming through that presentation.

I think that probably puts it better than did before. We are looking for constructive alternatives. We were prepared, through CTV, to suggest constructive alternatives and we didn't find those constructive alternatives coming through, and we felt that that was really detrimental to broadcasting.

I mean, if we wanted to have an effect upon the CRTC and we want some change some amendments and some modification and we didn't feel that the representations that were being made were going to achieve that, and they weren't assisting what we thought were the proper aims of the broadcasters—and Mr. Bassett resigned.

Senator McElman: Now, CAB is accepted I suppose, one might say, as the voice of broadcasters in Canada and CFTO is the largest of those broadcasters in Canada today. Would you foresee that CFTO would stay outside of CAB or that it will endeavour to change its approach so that it can again join CAB?

Mr. Goodman: Well, we won't change our approach.

Senator McElman: Well, what about CAB?

Mr. Goodman: Well, I don't know, but we really,—don't forget there are many divergent interests in CAB. There is the public broadcasters, the private broadcasters; there is the private, private broadcaster; there is the private, public broadcaster; there is radio, and the various forms that radio takes, and we really feel that to speak with any cohesion, our views are much better presented through CTV discussions. What comes out of CTV, really represents certainly the private segment of Canadian television much better than using the CAB.

I think that is a fair statement.

The Chairman: Well, CTV remains as a member of CAB, does it not?

Mr. Goodman: That is my understanding.

The Chairman: Well, if three of the most significant members of the board of directors...

Mr. Goodman: Well, let me make one thing clear. CTV has a vote and Moose Jaw has the same vote, and it would require a majority of the board.

Mr. Delaney: Correction; Regina.

Mr. Goodman: Regina.

The Chairman: What was the CAB's response, Mr. Goodman, to your resignation?

Mr. Goodman: They viewed it with regret.

The Chairman: Have they asked you to reconsider your position?

Mr. Goodman: Well, I don't think there has been any meeting yet. Mr. McGregor, who is incidentally also a director of CTV, is president of CAB, and he expressed the hope that he could meet with Mr. Bassett and Mr. Griffiths but that discussion hasn't taken place.

The Chairman: Well, perhaps I should put this question to Mr. Delaney. As I understand it, you received franchise recognition from the CAB; is that correct?

Mr. Delaney: Well, we do, but I should also draw to your attention the company policy that our president enunciated shortly after we went into business. People do not need CAB enfranchisement to buy time on CFTO. We do a great number of dollars' worth of business with people who are not so enfranchised.

The Chairman: And pay them the 15% commission?

Mr. Delaney: No, because in many cases they don't go through an advertising agency, and if they went through an agency that was enfranchised—now, we have to break that down into three groups, if I may?

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. Delaney: People who place business direct, not through an agency; people who place business through an agency that is not so enfranchised and people that place business through an agency that is enfranchised. We will take business from any of the three sources. We are the criteria as to whether they should or should not advertise on CFTO.

The Chairman: And as to whether or not you pay that 15% commission is a decision that you make on an ad hoc basis?

Mr. Delaney: Yes.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: There was a meeting of the CAB of course, not this last weekend but the previous weekend, where the presentation to the CRTC, so we are informed, was gone into in great depth. Certainly the attitude of the CAB to the CRTC proposals was made very clear to that closed meeting, again, so we are informed, of the CAB that weekend. Why is it that CFTO resigned after the CAB people got raked over the coals by the CRTC and not before? Was it as a direct result of the CRTC reaction to the CAB presentation?

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Fortier, Mr. Nichols and Mr. Delaney both jumped to their feet at that one. Which one would you like to put the question to?

Mr. Goodman: Well, Mr. Chairman, to both of them, but before that I will say—no, they can go ahead.

Mr. Delaney: I will start if off and then pass it over to Mr. Nichols because he was in Ottawa and I was not.

The Chairman: Mr. Delaney?

Mr. Delaney: For a period of two weeks prior to the CAB annual convention, which as you gentlemen know was moved from the Maritimes to Ottawa, CFTO was involved in two licence renewals. One, our participation in CTV network's renewal and two, CFTO was coming up for its first licence renewal since our inception.

Needless to say we had a considerable amount of money and time invested in presentations, so we stayed—Mr. Nichols and I and Mr. Bassett stayed in Toronto and worked around the clock on these presentations. We had a representative go to CAB. That representative at CAB did not vote in favour of the action that CAB was going to take.

Mr. Nichols: Now, I don't really have anything to add. We were not in attendance at that meeting of voting delegates or was there executive representation from Baton. Furthermore, we had received rough outlines of the CAB brief but they didn't really spell out the approach at that point. It was developed in more detail for the annual meeting. We did not have prior knowledge of the details.

Mr. Goodman: One final thing to add to the question. We don't need any brownie points with the CRTC for resigning. We get our brownie points by our broadcasting.

Senator Prowse: May I ask a supplementary question?

The Chairman: Senator Prowse.

Senator Prowse: I think to clear up my own thinking on this matter. As I understand it, your feeling is that you can disagree with what the CRTC does, but that in this disagreement, you recognize that they have a problem and you have a problem, and that if the two of you sit down you could perhaps work it out, and that the CAB's attitude was that they had a problem and to hell with the CRTC; and you don't think that that is a good way to conduct negotiations. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. Goodman: That is a fair summary, Senator Prowse. I accept that.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: If CTV remained as a unit within the CAB, I take it you don't foresee your resignation from CTV on that account?

Mr. Goodman: No.

Senator McElman: You spoke of one vote one member, CTV. It has been suggested that although they are equal, CFTO is perhaps more equal than others in the strength of its representation to CTV on programming and other matters.

Mr. Goodman: Well, I have heard that many times. I happen to be solicitor for CTV so I have some knowledge of this matter. I actually prepared the corporate organization or personally prepared it, which kept the situation down to one vote per station. There is no doubt about the fact that Toronto is such an important market and this is always taken into consideration. I mean, this is just a matter of common sense in the matter, no matter what the situation is.

However, I can tell you that there are many, many occasions when we are overruled and the majority does that. Naturally, an important station which is doing well and does a lot of programming has got to be listened to, but there are many occasions when they listen to us and say, "Thanks kindly" and go on their own way.

The Chairman: Can you give us an example of this? Purely on minor points, they might happen but on major points, does CFTO ever get overruled?

Mr. Goodman: The answer to that is yes.

Mr. Delaney: Well, I represent CFTO on the network committee, and I wish I had a nickel for all the times I have said to Mr. Nichols at the end of the meeting: "Well, I guess we can't win them all." But certainly with the network committee where they decide the size and scope of the network service, we have one vote, and there are any number of occasions, representing vast sums of money down to simple matters of policy, where CFTO is just not always voted with.

These stations are autonomous; they have their own vote; they have their own view and certainly their own thoughts. And by means, their own ambitions. We don't always win at CTV.

The Chairman: Do you win more than you lose?

Mr. Goodman: Yes, because we are right more than we are wrong.

Mr. Delaney: Well, we probably win more than we lose, yes.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: Well, in programming, you are the great contributor to CTV network programming, are you not?

Mr. Delaney: Let me say this, Senator. We are the great facility of CTV where you find housed 21 studio cameras, 12 video tape machines and three coloured mobiles; where you have 375 people permanently on staff, and where you don't find production emanating from Texas in the United States, you don't find large amounts of production emanating from Regina in the West. The production centre for CTV is Toronto, where the talent body lies, where the facility is available to the network.

Senator McElman: In this sense alone, then, would it be an accurate assumption that the influence of CFTO on the type, the calibre and the character of broadcasting would be very substantial?

Mr. Delaney: I should point out to the Committee that the network has its own project chief, the network has its own president, and the network has its point of view. As frequently as not, we will have a difference of opinion over how something should be produced, or over where it should be produced, but we do have the facility, and for that I guess we can't apologize. The facility happens to be there and it is a vast facility, and the network is able to take advantage of this.

Mr. Nichols: I was just going to say that it might assist you in this matter, as well, if you could have some understanding of how both the network committee and the network's board of directors works in this matter. In the area of programming, usually at the early part of each year, the various stations bring the programming to the network committee, the programs that they have piloted for placement on the network. They are presented, they are shown, and they are voted on and each station has one vote in that matter.

The programming that gets on the network, whether it comes from us or comes from somebody else, gets there on its merit, on its appeal to the majority of the members of the network committee and to the members of the board of directors.

Mr. Goodman: Just to refine that, Senator, may I explain to you that there are two types of programs. There is network sales time and station sales time; that is, the network sales time are those programs where the network goes out and sells and the stations have no opportunity to sell even if the network can't sell it. The others are programs produced by the network or purchased by the network, either one, where the selling is done by the station and the revenue remains with the station.

Now, the programming committee has the final say on the program sales time, but the president of the network has the final say on the network sales time; that is even over the programming committee. Naturally, he receives a recommendation which he usually follows, but he has to sell that and he has insisted, and properly so, that if he is going to be responsible for bringing in the revenue that he is just not going to be sort of the agent of the stations. So Mr. Chercover and his advisers are a very big factor.

Well, I suppose we have a substantial influence like several other stations have a substantial influence, but we certainly don't have a dominating influence by any manner or means.

The Chairman: Well, you say you don't have a dominating influence but could CTV survive if CFTO left the network?

Mr. Goodman: Well, I don't think the network could survive without a Toronto station.

The Chairman: Well, there you are, so you must have a powerful position. You are a very, very significant factor.

Mr. Goodman: Of course we are a significant factor and Montreal is a significant factor and Ottawa is a significant factor as well. We say we are significant and substantially so, but what we say is it isn't factual that we dominate that network by any manner or means.

Senator McElman: Mr. Chercover and his staff are Toronto based?

Mr. Goodman: The network is Toronto based, yes.

Senator McElman: One hears, I believe you could call it a criticism, that the network programming is too Toronto oriented.

Now, I appreciate the fact of you being in Toronto, but do you believe it is a valid criticism?

Mr. Goodman: No. You say "Toronto oriented". If you mean that its programs are enjoyed in Toronto and not enjoyed in New Brunswick, the answer to that is no.

Senator McElman: I wasn't speaking for New Brunswick.

Mr. Goodman: Well, I didn't really mean that, Senator, I was speaking about the Maritimes then. If that is the case, the answer is no.

We believe that the ratings of the network across the country establish that the programs are acceptable right across the country. The very system that we set up, you know, where these programs... Well, for example, the fact that the stations in Halifax and St. John's have a vote on these programmes is a protection that we enjoy to make certain that they are acceptable to the rest of the country. Mr. Delaney knows more about this than I do, but I know of no instance, and I have been in on many of these discussions, where they have taken positions that it wasn't possible for them to accept those programs and the fact that they might be forced down their throats.

I have never seen this, but maybe Mr. Delaney could speak to this.

Mr. Delaney: There is probably very good reason why CTV's sales office and corporate offices are located in Toronto. The Mecca of the advertising community for Canada is settled in Toronto, so the network has its pulse right on it; they frequently meet with media directors of all of the Toronto based agencies on the feeling out of a pilot project, to get an advertising agency response which is not uncommon—even all three American networks do it—before you go into a pilot stage.

The network is obviously interested in programs that will rate in Toronto because if they rate in Toronto they will sell on the network. We are a selling network because we don't have obviously the same subsidies from the public fund. We have to make these sell and we have to make them rate and the population concentration is within the coverage of CFTO.

A program that may rate favourably in Newfoundland and die in Toronto won't make economic sense for very long on CTV.

Senator McElman: You spoke of the ratings, Mr. Goodman. In relative terms, how do your ratings bear up?

The Chairman: Well, I am going to suggest that that be the first question after the break. Mr. Goodman can be thinking about the answer and you can finish that just after the break. It is now 11.25. I would like to adjourn, in fairness to the reporter, for five minutes.

I didn't mean to cut you off, Senator McElman, but we can complete the question and you Mr. Goodman could be thinking about the answer during our intermission.

Mr. Goodman: Well, I just didn't get the last three words of Senator McElman's question.

Senator McElman: Are your ratings for CTV-produced programs higher in the Metro Toronto area in competition with CBC or whatever than they are in other parts of the country? Do the ratings slide off in certain areas of the country?

Mr. Goodman: I understand.

The Chairman: We will reconvene in five minutes.

Short adjournment.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call the session back to order. The Senators might be mindful of the fact that it is now 11.40, and in approximately one hour Mr. Goodman is going to leave as he has to catch a plane, but Mr. Nichols and Mr. Delaney can stay on until 1 o'clock.

Senator McElman, I interrupted you before the break so would you please carry on.

Senator McElman: Well, the question was put.

Mr. Goodman: Well, I had the opportunity of speaking to Mr. Delaney to assist me in this. You see, figures aren't too meaningful in this matter Senator, because when you recognize that the three million people within our listening contour look at 6 stations. Obviously the percentage of the audience that is going to be viewing CFTO is going to be less than the percentage of the audience that is going to be viewing in a 2 station market. So I could simply answer by saying, in most places, there is a higher percentage watching other stations than they are the Toronto one, but that also would be misleading to you.

I think it is fair to say that it varies from program to program. Sometimes they are more appealing and do better in Toronto and sometimes they do better in the West or in the Maritimes. You just can't look at the figures and draw any conclusions because you have to relate those figures—you have to sort of see all the ratings in front of you and see what the various stations in the market are doing in order to draw a proper inference. Without being able to see a series of programs and what percentage of comparative programs they get, you can't draw anything that is meaningful.

If the Committee were interested in this, my suggestion is they should try and get these ratings or get them filed by the network and then look at them that way because you have to do it on a comparable basis.

Senator McElman: Well, surely with the methods available today, you must have some idea, Mr. Delaney and Mr. Goodman, of how a specific type of programming of network origination is received in the Metro markets as related to Western and Eastern?

Mr. Goodman: Well, I didn't mean to suggest that we can't tell.

Senator McElman: How do they bear up?

Mr. Goodman: I say that it varies program to program. Sometimes they are better received in Toronto and sometimes they are better received outside.

Senator McElman: In general terms how do they bear up?

Senator Prowse: Take an average.

Mr. Delaney: If we can get away from the problem of using Toronto as a barometer, naturally we are more familiar with that because that is where we live and work and earn our living.

A program that rates in Toronto in the main will rate on our network with the station that carries it. What Mr. Goodman was trying to draw to your attention, and I am sure he has done that successfully, is to point out that a show may get 100,000 homes on CFTO and be a poor performer. It may be last or second last in its time period and any number of our affiliates would be delighted if they could get that kind of performance. They simply just don't get 100,000 homes.

CFTO is the number one rated station in Toronto. I am not using that as a shell but merely to point out something that is germane to the discussion.

For the last two years, constantly, 7 days a week, any survey you want to use, any month of the year you want to use, we stand out and are the number one station overall, and I even include the 3 Buffalo stations that show in Toronto—CFTO is the number one station, viewed by more homes and viewed by more viewers.

"Pig and Whistle", if I can now localize, happens also to be number one in every one of the time periods that the CTV stations carry clean right across the West and to the Maritimes. Is that the kind of information you want, Senator?

Senator McElman: I guess so.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: I think it is supplementary—I am not entirely certain but I will try it anyway.

One aspect, Mr. Chairman, of television broadcasting which we have not discussed yet, and this may be a good time to discuss it, is the advantages for a giant amongst independent stations such as CFTO—the advantages of belonging to a network. I wonder if Mr. Goodman could expand on the advantages—the obvious ones and the not so obvious ones?

Mr. Goodman: Well, the obvious one is—CFTO presented a brief to the CRTC on the question of dual ownership in CTV when this was the point in question and the submission I made at that time—

Mr. Fortier: That was in Vancouver last fall?

Mr. Goodman: That's right. Our position is that we are in competition basically with the CBC and with the American networks. Therefore it becomes essential to get excellence in programming. After all, that is the name of the game, to get the best type of program in every field and that requires resources.

And our basic position is—and this was a position that we were joined in by the Ottawa station—our basic position was that there should be some growth allowed and encouraged in order that there could be sufficient resources to enable monies to be spent on programs that aren't going to work out perhaps; or monies to be spent on programs that would allow them to compete with the United States; allow them to sell abroad; allow them to extend Canada's image abroad. That required resources and therefore that required bigness to some extent.

We think that that is a very valid position just based upon that one set of facts.

Mr. Fortier: Wouldn't that growth, that diversification get a station such as CFTO away from a principle which you expanded upon in your preliminary remarks—that is this opportunity of pinning the responsibility in the community where the station owner lives?

Mr. Goodman: No, not at all, because we are not suggesting—let us put it that way. Our interest is Southern Ontario and we believe in regional growth. Therefore, for example, we had an application that fell by the wayside in Wingham and another application was Windsor and all of this was in an area which was to some extent homogeneous and where you could do just that. We haven't attempted to have a station in Vancouver or in Nova Scotia or any place else.

Mr. Fortier: You say you wouldn't?

Mr. Goodman: Certainly under our present policy the answer is no. We believe that we should try and stay within a region where personal influence and supervision can be given.

I am not saying things won't change but that is a firm policy at the present time.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: You were referring to the criticisms of CFRB and the Star that it was unfair for the Telegram to be involved with CFTO. Could we get your comments on the hypothesis that there were to be some means of equalizing competition.

Would you prefer to see it equalized by the Star getting a television license or by the Telegram not being involved with a television license?

Mr. Goodman: Well, on the hypothesis that if there was another television channel or more service required—if I understand your hypothesis—would we feel it would be a better principle for the Star to get it than the Telegram not to get it?

Senator McElman: Yes.

Mr. Goodman: Well, we think it would be a better principle for the Star to get it. We are not concerned. The point is you have to weigh all the factors. You have to assess and compare what the Star is going to be able to contribute on that application to those other people who apply. I mean, there may be other factors. CFRB may have a right to it based upon the question of experience and everything else. I think the CRTC has to take all the facts in question and assess them.

At the time we made our application there were three newspapers involved and in those days the Globe and Mail was a conservative newspaper—

The Chairman: You mean it is no longer conservative!

Mr. Goodman: It certainly isn't and you can have it with my pleasure.

We said at the time that we believe that the importance of news and public affairs was very great and the fact that the Telegram was part of this application was beneficial. Now, at the time we made the application there was a radio broadcaster involved, there was a film person involved and I guess that's about it—two radio people involved.

We think it is a question of them settling the application, using all these factors and coming to a conclusion. We think it would be a great mistake to suggest that joint holding per se are wrong.

Senator McElman: Well now, if the Star was also strongly associated in a strong television station, would they become then much more competitive unit to the Telegram—CFTO combination?

Mr. Goodman: Only to the extent that it might prove the quality of the Star, but other than that we say no. It is just a question of excellence. We don't think that the joint use of the two in itself is important—only to the extent it increases the way that it is used and the type of broadcasting that you get out of it.

Senator McElman: You don't see then any distinct advantages flowing from such an association in the day-to-day operation?

Mr. Goodman: Well, as I say, there are certain advantages. They have the knowledge of news, the use of news and the expertise. All of this is very important, but we don't think that there are competitive advantages, no.

The Chairman: Well now, are we talking at this point of the television advantage or the newspaper advantage or are we talking about both?

Mr. Goodman: Well, I am talking about television primarily.

The Chairman: The FCC is considering a regulation—and as I understand it it would be some years before the regulation becomes a reality, if it ever does—which would, as I understand it, preclude this kind of cross media ownership.

If there was such a regulation in Canada and Mr. Bassett had a choice of owning his television station or his newspaper, which would he prefer to own?

Mr. Goodman: That is really one question I don't feel qualified to answer and I just can't answer that question.

The Chairman: I think Senator McElman put this question to you, but would you prefer to see the Star—assuming for the moment, for the purposes of the discussion only, that we concede Mr. Honderich's point—would you prefer to see the Star with a television license or would you prefer to see the Telegram without its television license?

Mr. Goodman: That question I answered. I would prefer to see the Star with a television license.

The Chairman: This may not be a question which you feel you can answer, but I think it is one that you should take a run at in view of a lot of the comments you have made here this morning. How has the Telegram improved since the advent of CFTO? You said that there was a great advantage in cross-media ownership and I think you said that they would have a lot to learn from broadcasters, particularly when it comes to entertaining. Is the Telegram a more entertaining newspaper since the advent of CFTO?

Mr. Goodman: Well, I think I can have a run at that one, but once again it is only a layman's run.

I think there are more advantages that flow the other way. More advantages flow to broadcasters from newspapers than to newspapers from broadcasters. There are several reasons.

First of all I believe that newspaper people are more courageous than broadcasters and I believe that the importance of news and public affairs on television is more important than entertainment in newspapers.

On the other hand, you see things like the "After Four" section of the Telegram—the Telegram used to advertise itself as being the liveliest newspaper at one stage in the game—the idea of life and the young people and that whole aspect, and I think there is some flow from broadcasting into newspapers.

The Chairman: Is the Telegram a more entertaining newspaper than the Globe and Mail?

Mr. Goodman: Oh, yes. The Globe and Mail, what a dreary newspaper!

Senator Prowse: They weren't quite that unkind to you.

The Chairman: Well, specifically, you used "After Four" as an example of how the telegram has become more entertaining?

Mr. Goodman: Yes. For young people you know, that is the field in which that they are becoming more entertaining—for more young people.

The Chairman: You don't think "After Four" would have happened...

Mr. Goodman: I think there is a general development in newspapers that way, so I wouldn't say it was only because they became part of CFTO, but that, nevertheless, is the effect of broadcasting on newspapers, and it becomes more immediate.

For example, I think that other things in broadcasting have affected newspapers. The number of times and the instantaneousness of broadcasting media, of getting out the news by the broadcasting media; how quickly they can cover stories—I think that has had an effect on newspapers.

The Chairman: Why wouldn't the existence of CFTO in Toronto make all of the newspapers in Toronto more entertaining?

Mr. Goodman: I think it does.

The Chairman: Well, you said the Globe and Mail isn't an entertaining newspaper.

You don't think it works with the Globe and Mail?

Mr. Goodman: It just fails to work with the Globe, that's all.

The Chairman: You have made several references to newspaper people being more courageous than broadcasters.

Mr. Goodman: Yes.

The Chairman: In your opening oral comments, you made the point that this is because broadcasting is a regulated industry.

Mr. Goodman: Well, that is not the only reason. As I said there are two reasons.

First of all the traditions of newspapers go back a lot longer. The professionalism of newspaper people goes back a lot longer. They have a history and a tradition to rely upon and I believe that that has an effect upon your traditions.

And secondly, I said on the other side of the coin is the fact that it is a regulated industry.

The Chairman: You made the point that you were not trying to build up Brownie points with the CRTC. At the same time you did say they were a competent board and that this was an objective appraisal because of the two applications which have been turned down. Yet Mr. Bassett, who presumably has this background as a courageous newspaper person, and I say that with respect,—yet with his background in the newspaper business, with the comments that you have made about the kind of board that the CRTC is—competent and so on; yet we have Mr. Bassett saying before the CRTC last week that he won't editorialize on his stations.

Mr. Goodman: That's right. Would you like me to answer that further?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Goodman: Well, I believe this is a field that you could come down with some difficulty. You could come down in two ways in this field. Frankly I feel that when you come to an important public problem, that a better contribution can be made by presenting both sides, the factual knowledge of both sides of important public questions, than by merely coming out with the view of a station because I think there are certain inherent dangers.

There are certain inherent dangers in a system where right across the country the government is licensing a group of broadcasting stations and then these stations themselves are going to editorialize. This puts a tremendous instrument in the hands of any government, that I think should be of some concern, not on the basis of the fear of an individual station owner but the fear of government having at its hand a method of getting support from a vast body of media.

Furthermore, the second concern is that it is more important that the public be informed and then come up with their own conclusions. I think that there can be courage shown by broadcasters by making certain that when there are certain problems for which there may be vast public support that there can be certain arguments that must be raised which would go the other way.

They could present these arguments, they could present the facts about these arguments and therefore influence public opinion in that manner, rather than by merely putting their own imprimatur upon one particular side.

I think that they can provide a great service by making certain that all the facts on any problem are known.

For example, I will give you an example of a benefit—one that you and I were in a situation together. I am not sure whether it was in 1965 or 1968—'65 I think. The CBC, when the election was announced, put the Prime Minister on but wouldn't put the Leader of the Opposition on, but the private network immediately put the Leader of the Opposition on and forced the CBC to change its policy. Now, this is the sort of thing that broadcasters can do. This was immediately after the election was announced—I am not sure which election it was but it was one of those two elections.

Now that, I think, shows the benefits of being able to have two sides presented on an occasion when perhaps just the government side is presented.

The Chairman: Would you like to ask any supplementaries, Senator Prowse?

Senator Prowse: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

How do you get the two sides presented?

Mr. Goodman: Well, you look for people who are knowledgeable on any given question and on most public issues there usually are two intelligent and objective positions which can be taken on most public problems. Nothing is ever black or white and therefore try to find a proponent, a knowledgeable proponent of any side of an issue and make sure it has an opportunity to be heard on any public affairs program.

Senator Prowse: Well, I have a feeling that there is no such thing as an objective person.

Mr. Goodman: Well, I think you are probably right. However, some people are more objective than others.

Senator Prowse: However, when we come down to it, everybody has a bias somewhere.

Mr. Goodman: That's right; I agree with that.

Senator Prowse: So the person selecting your news and selecting the people that go on—you may give them an appearance of objectivity but you can't really give them the reality of objectivity. Is that fair enough?

Mr. Goodman: No, I can't quite accept that, Senator. You can look for someone who is accepted as being a knowledgeable person of a definite viewpoint, and if you search for the two most knowledgeable people of differing viewpoints, you have done all that a broadcaster can do.

Senator Prowse: Well, if I am going to check two people and I am going to be objective, I am going to pick people that I think can give two viewpoints, and I may miss a third person who has a right to a viewpoint.

Mr. Goodman: Well, one thing I am certain of and that is there will always be human error.

Senator Prowse: That's right. Now, don't you think that the public might be better served in getting this diversity of opinion if you clearly stated what your bias was?

I was very impressed when John Bassett appeared before this Committee talking about the Telegram. He said that the name of the game was responsibility and I am a little surprised that it doesn't carry over now into this broadcasting area which is perhaps even more important.

Now, you state your system, you state your attitude, and then if we had an equal time rule or a right of rebuttal rule like they have in the United States so that somebody who feels that they have been unfairly dealt with have a right to equal time, do you feel that that would give perhaps a better guarantee to the public getting the diverse ideas than to leave the whole thing to the decision of even the most well-intentioned unobjective human being?

Mr. Goodman: Well, Senator, I think you have a very valid point. If it was not for my concern over the possible misuse because of the licensing power, I would agree with you completely.

Senator Prowse: Are you saying that the reason you are not going to express an opinion is because you are afraid that the licensing people might disagree with you?

Mr. Goodman: No, not at all. My fear was that at some stage—and it isn't now in Canada—but at some stage governments can use their licensing powers to get over ideas that are not in the public welfare.

Now for example we have seen that in other countries and we have seen that during elections in Europe where broadcasting systems are used for the benefit of the government in power.

Now, other than that concern I agree with you. However, I still have that concern.

Senator Prowse: It seems to me that you are now using a situation that existed somewhere else at some other time...

Mr. Goodman: Right.

Senator Prowse: ...as an excuse for not exercising the responsibility you have today. If you believe something and you believe that it is important for the country, surely you have a right and a duty to explain that belief so that people can evaluate it and then leave to the licensing power the single right not to criticize you but to insist that the opposite view shall be given an equal time.

Now, they do this in the United States. I watched it during the election campaign down there in New York City.

Mr. Goodman: Well, as I have just finished saying, Senator, I have great sympathy for this position with the exception of the one reservation I have given you about the power it puts in the hands of a government.

But don't forget, using your own reasoning, the choice of the person who is going to rebut you in itself is going to be a subjective decision.

There is always going to be subjective decisions made where people have any control.

Senator Prowse: Yes. But if you take an opinion that is opposite and is obviously opposed to the opinion of another person, that party then comes forward.

Now, I think it works pretty well in the United States and I noticed this when I watched the mayoralty election in New York City.

Mr. Goodman: I think it does, Senator, and there is much merit in it, but I have the reservations I have given you and I don't think I can assist you any more other than saying I have the one reservation. I can see the benefits of what you are saying but I still have that one serious reservation.

Senator Prowse: Well, aren't you denying the public; you are trying to give them mealy-mouthed, uncontroversial...

Mr. Goodman: Oh, no. We are prepared to give them the most controversial, sharp-tongued views that can be obtained, but we are simply giving the views of other people. We will give them all the controversy and we do give them all the controversy, and we feel it is absolutely essential that broadcasting does give them all of the controversy. All that we are doing is not giving them our views on the matter.

Now, you way wouldn't the public be better protected if they knew you views? I think there is merit in what you say; but on the other hand, all that I have done is I have weighted the merits of your points against the dangers that I see inherent in the system, and I have come down on the other side—because I am concerned about the dangers.

If there is some way to protect against the dangers then I would have come down on your side of the problem. But don't misunderstand me. We are absolutely prepared to give them the two most controversial views that exist on any given problem, and do.

Senator Prowse: Well, let us take "W-5."

Mr. Goodman: All right.

Senator Prowse: You put people on and you let them...

Mr. Goodman: That program is a network program. It is made in our facility but it is a network program.

Senator Prowse: Well, they come on and they make their statements and I have yet to see anybody appear on any television program where he has been given an opportunity to reply to "W-5".

The Chairman: Mr. Nichols, would you like to reply to this?

Mr. Nichols: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: I will let you comment on this and then I think we should get off of "W-5" because it is a network program.

Mr. Nichols: I think there is one important difference between the two mediums. Obviously, the advantage that television has, and I think it is a positive advantage, is to present views of people who are involved in public controversy without bias.

I think, generally speaking, these people discuss matters which get into public controversy in the area of public concern, such as in the area of government, whether it be municipal, provincial or federal, and if you take persons who have been elected, you are really not choosing them that much. They are the spokesmen; you give them an opportunity to be heard; then the people can hear directly from elected representatives on the different points of view. I think this is the positive advantage that television has to offer. There is no interpretation when you put a person on camera in a television station.

Senator Prowse: Right, you let somebody on from one party to make a statement and I don't think any member of Parliament—and I am certainly speaking for myself—would make any claims to the possibility of being unbiased. I must be biased.

Mr. Goodman: Of course, Senator.

Senator Prowse: Every decision I make in my life comes from a philosophical basis or something.

Mr. Nichols: Yes.

Senator Prowse: Now, you put on a member and you put on a member week after week and you are getting his picture. Now, what provision do you have to explain why he might have that position or give the position to the opposite one he has?

Mr. Nichols: Well, I was talking about items that got into public controversy and exposing people to opposing viewpoints and they have approximately the same amount of time. You may have the opinions of the one person followed with an interview with a member of the opposite group.

The Chairman: Mr. Nichols, I think you have given a fair answer and you say one of the greatest advantages of television is this, and I concede that. Wouldn't you concede to me that there is an inherent opportunity for bias in the minds of the viewers by such things as camera angles, amount of time and the questions that are asked?

Mr. Nichols: Yes.

Mr. Goodman: That is a danger that has nothing to do with who owns the television station or who manages it. That has to do with the fellow who is behind the camera.

I can remember so well in 1965 on the final night of the election when the CBC did two stories—they did one message from Mr. Pearson and one message from Mr. Diefenbaker. What they did with Mr. Diefenbaker was a disgrace compared to what they did with Mr. Pearson. The camera angles and everything else.

Now, all I am saying is I don't think Alphonse Ouimet did that. I think that either the producer of that particular programme or the cameraman—likely the producer of that particular programme—was using his bias, and what was Ouimet going to do? It was done and I wrote screaming letters, but you know, it was all over with by that time.

This is something, as Senator Prowse has said, that is going to crop up all the time. People have views and all you can do is try to safeguard yourself to the greatest extent that you can, from any prejudices.

Senator Prowse: Well, let us go right back to the example you used. I think that it would be generally agreed that the CBC makes an honest attempt at the executive level to make sure that they don't get accused of bias.

Mr. Goodman: Yes, I think they make the attempt.

Senator Prowse: Now, I agree that the bias flows because of the particular feeling of maybe a producer or even a cameraman. However, this is the point that I am getting at. This is going to happen and this is where the danger is—not in the licensing authority.

The danger is when you tell the public and try to establish with the public the idea that you are completely objective. The public can be then subjected to completely biased pictures because of the particular bias of a particular cameraman and there is not, at the moment, any way in which anybody can have a remedy.

Now, what I am getting at is this. Don't you think it would be useful; one, for the station to give an opinion first of all, and two, to provide that where an opinion on any controversial matter is to be subject to criticism from any area of the public, that those who take the opposite attitude ought to be accorded equal time to answer.

Mr. Goodman: Let us take the last one first.

Senator Prowse: All right.

Mr. Goodman: I agree that on any controversial subject there is an obligation on broadcasters to have the opportunity for both points of view to be heard. I think I made that clear.

Now, equal time and equitable time. There may be one view that, for example, that is overwhelmingly supported by the public and one that isn't. I don't think you have got to say that they both should have the same amount of time, but they have to have equitable time.

As far as the other points you made before, my position is still the same. I can see some advantages to it, I can see some disadvantages, and because of it we believe there are certain inherent dangers which we may be wrong on, we come out on the other side.

Obviously, if I am seeing something it is nice to know what the bias behind it is, and that is what you are saying. When I see something being produced I would like to know what the bias is, but even if we do what you suggest, you are still going to have the bias?

Let us suppose that Mr. Bassett said that "I am for the Spadina Expressway" and then along comes the producer and that producer is not for the Spadina Expressway. He is still going to be able to inject his bias into the production of that programme.

Senator Prowse: That is the last one.

Mr. Goodman: I beg your pardon?

The Chairman: That would be his last program.

Mr. Goodman: Well, that is pretty difficult to prove.

Senator Prowse: Yes, Mr. Bassett said it would be.

The Chairman: No, in fairness to Mr. Bassett he was replying to the weekly newspaper editors.

Mr. Goodman: Well, that is pretty hard to prove. I think this is a problem that we are always going to be faced with, and all I think our obligation is, is to constantly assess these and try to arrive at an honest answer.

The Chairman: Mindful of the fact that Mr. Goodman must soon leave, do any of the Senators have further questions?

I know you have one, Mr. Fortier, and I know I have a couple, so perhaps I will put mine very quickly.

Senator McElman: May I have a supplementary on that, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Fine.

Senator McElman: Mr. Goodman, you have spoken of your concern, your reservations with respect to the system. One of the witnesses we had last week was Countryside Holdings—they have five radio broadcasting holdings in Ontario. They expressed the fear of the CRTC and they said, pretty much in these words I think, that no broadcaster would support or promote an unpopular cause because of the licensing factor.

We moved from that to—I believe it was Bushnell, Mr. Chairman, and we asked Mr. Griffin if he had a similar fear of doing unpopular broadcasting—let's say editorializing—and he said that they would have no fear of the licensing situation in the existing system.

You have used the words "concern" and "reservation." Do you feel that a broadcaster should actually fear the CRTC?

Mr. Goodman: No.

Senator McElman: In the type of broadcasting he does, as long as he is doing an honest job?

Mr. Goodman: No, and I don't think you have to.

Let me make it clear. My reservations had nothing to do with the CRTC. It would be the power that would be in the government's hand to try to get the control. Under the present system, I have absolutely no concern that supporting an unpopular cause would do anything but earn you the commendation of the CRTC. I think that Mr. Juneau and Mr. Boyle would be all for anything that supports unpopular causes. That is of no concern at all to me.

I think it is a philosophic position that the station has taken, but I don't think that this would cause any problem, and I am absolutely confident that if what we did was a proper, honest job of reporting, and if you do that, you would have no problems whatsoever.

Senator McElman: Because of the possibility of misinterpretation of what you said, I thought we should get it clear.

Mr. Goodman: I very much appreciate that question because mine was a philosophic approach concerned with powers of government. It had nothing to do with the CRTC at all.

Senator Prowse: Your concern is with the possibility that some time in the future, a government might step in to stop you from expressing an opinion?

Mr. Goodman: No. My concern is that sometimes a government might step in and try to force a series of ideas on a country through a system of broadcasting.

I don't think that individual situations have any cause for concern at all. I am thinking of some time in the future, you know, that the powers of Parliament might be clipped and there arises in this country a government which is trying to take dictatorial powers. The habit of forcing broadcasters to comment in favour of any particular plan, could be a very dangerous instrument in the hands of government. That is my only reservation. It is a reservation which I feel will probably never happen in Canada. But it might. And on that basis alone I am opposed to it.

Senator Prowse: Don't you think that if the public were trained to expect an opinion from a station and an answer to the opinion, that it might be then more difficult for a government to do that, than if the station were walking carefully so that there was no possibility of somebody stepping in?

Mr. Goodman: I really don't know, Senator. I am just concerned about that one thing, but I can see advantages to both sides of the coin.

The Chairman: I would like to talk for a few minutes about the concentration of media ownership in Canada.

You have mentioned the fact, for example, that you don't think there is a media monopoly in Toronto, and I certainly agree with that.

Do you think there are media monopolies anywhere else in Canada?

Mr. Goodman: Well I suppose there are situations in other cities where there isn't the competition that takes place in Toronto.

The Chairman: Do you think the fact that there is so much competition in Toronto is in the public interest?

Mr. Goodman: Yes, I do.

The Chairman: Would you be concerned about situations—without naming one—where a television station or a newspaper had a monopoly situation in Canada?

Mr. Goodman: I have a philosophic concern only, rather than a practical concern, yes.

The Chairman: You would have a philosophic concern and your practical concern presumably would be judged on merit?

Mr. Goodman: That's right.

The Chairman: Are you concerned about the increasing concentration of ownership of media generally? For example, of the trend towards newspaper chains?

Mr. Goodman: Again, I would say I am not a great expert in this field, but yes I believe it is something that should be considered. You know, to some extent you have to balance the benefits of bigness on one side as opposed to the advantages of individual ownership on the other side, and it is a constant balancing process.

I look with concern upon too much concentration from a point of view—I don't like a system where the main concern of the owners is to make money. I think that making money is a legitimate objective and one that most of us try to achieve. I am concerned however where the primary concern isn't to run a good newspaper.

I think that when we have too much concentration in chains that there could be a lessening of the professionalism in the journalism that is involved.

On the other hand, I suppose there is more efficiency as well. It depends on the type of people you get to be editors on your individual newspapers. They could probably make an argument of the freedom that they give to the individual editor in a chain of newspapers to run his own newspaper and the merit of that individual editor.

All of these things have to be balanced, but I think there is some concern. But above all, I would tell you this. I would be concerned at seeing control of the Canadian newspaper pass out of Canadian hands. That is my major concern.

The Chairman: But you would be equally concerned about seeing the control of Canadians newspapers or television stations passing to a single person's hands?

Mr. Goodman: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, the question I put to you is the same that I have put to many other witnesses, and that is, how much is too much?

Mr. Goodman: You can't have any formula.

The Chairman: Well, that is very interesting. You feel you cannot have any formula?

Mr. Goodman: You can't have any formula. I am a pragmatist. I believe that you have to judge each situation upon its merits and once you try to create a formula I think you are going to get into trouble because there are all sorts of imponderables that arise at a later date.

It sounds attractive to search for a formula, but I think it is very dangerous due to the great injustices that would be done and the public interest would not be served.

The Chairman: And yet you said just a few minutes ago in the discussion you were having with Senator Prowse that your concern wasn't now. It was at some stage. Wouldn't you be concerned at some stage if some enterprising newspaper publisher might decide to expand his holdings and ultimately he might own half of the newspapers in Canada, then three-quarters of the newspapers in Canada?

Mr. Goodman: Well, I have enough confidence—first of all, I am not concerned about that because I believe there is enough strength in Canada to prevent that from happening. That type of monopoly and concentration, you are not going to see. There are just too many people of ability and capacity in Canada to allow that to happen.

The Chairman: Well then perhaps we would return to this question of cross-media ownership in newspapers and television stations.

Mr. Goodman: First of all, just let me make one thing clear. You know, you are only getting a very uninformed layman's view on the newspaper business. I must make that clear.

I must say that I have had some interest in politics and I have been able to form an opinion and I have an admiration of the standards of journalism.

The Chairman: You are an avid newspaper reader?

Mr. Goodman: I sure am.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Goodman likes Conservative newspapers and he doesn't like Liberal papers!

Mr. Goodman: As well as the Telegram I also read the Star and also the Globe and Mail.

Senator Prowse: There must be some comic relief.

Mr. Goodman: I just feel that the standards of journalism in this country by and large are good. I think we have to keep a constant view and we should be striving for more professionalism than we have.

The Chairman: You have been very rough on the Globe and Mail, I might say.

Senator Prowse: You would admit unfairly, wouldn't you?

The Chairman: Well, in any event, the question I was going to put to you is this. Are there any disadvantages which accrue to the Telegram or its readers because of the joint ownership of CFTO?

Mr. Nichols: Absolutely none.

The Chairman: None?

Mr. Nichols: None.

The Chairman: For example, it doesn't matter if the publisher is not able to devote his full time to running a newspaper—he must devote most of his time to running a television station?

Senator Prowse: Plus other things.

Mr. Goodman: I know, but I want to tell you that he devotes a fair amount of time, and as I said, the time he spends on one is of some importance to another.

For example, if you are finding out what is happening through the newspapers, if you are finding out what is important nationally, internationally and locally, that time spent isn't wasted insofar as the television station is concerned. We haven't reached the stage, I would hope, in Canada, that we are going to say, either by expressing an opinion or legislatively that a man must devote himself only to one enterprise or we would have some pretty narrow people.

I was going to say that you can't argue, because I may be the director of a hospital or a university or doing something of that nature, that my clients are suffering. I was just going to say that you can't accept that argument.

The Chairman: Well, I wasn't implying anything in my question. What are the advantages which accrue to the reader of the Telegram because of its association with CFTO?

Mr. Goodman: Well, as I said, I think there are advantages to the readers of the Telegram, but I think they go the other way too.

The Chairman: Well, what are the advantages to the viewers of CFTO?

Mr. Goodman: Well, we have by far the outstanding news program in the whole country.

The Chairman: And this is because of your association with the Telegram?

Mr. Goodman: Well I think so—who could say what the exact reason is, but the background of Mr. Bassett in news and newspaper has made him feel it is essential that we spend money and time on news programs.

The Chairman: Isn't it more than that, Mr. Goodman? Isn't it the fact that your new reporters work out the Telegram?

Mr. Goodman: Absolutely.

Mr. Delaney: Well, we have, in Toronto, news people working in our organization. We need a central area in downtown because we have 2-way radio telephone communication. The most logical place for us to work out of, hang our hat and use telephones and where news is happening, is at the Telegram.

The Chairman: Why not over at the Star?

Mr. Delaney: Well, probably the rent right to start with, and secondly, that is where the whole basis of our news operation emanates. We also keep newsmen, news crew and cameramen, all film processing and 2-way telephone cars running out of CFTO as we

The Chairman: But still the association with the Telegram is a distinct advantage to your news department.

Mr. Delaney: You were asking for advantages and I gave you a few.

Mr. Goodman: That is my whole thesis. My whole thesis is that there are advantages to us but the advantages are only that they increase the excellence of our product. That is my whole thesis for being here today. There are advantages, but they are advantages which accrue to the public.

The Chairman: Is it fair that CFTO enjoys this advantage? You have mentioned that you are competing in the Toronto market with CBC and with CHCH in Hamilton. Doesn't your association with the Telegram give CFTO an unfair advantage as against its two prime competitors in the market?

Mr. Goodman: No.

The Chairman: In the area of news.

Mr. Goodman: What is unfair? You mean because we have a more excellent product, that makes it unfair?

The Chairman: No, I mean...

Senator Prowse: You have more money to buy the product.

Mr. Goodman: The Star has more money than we have, I must say.

Mr. Nichols: It hasn't got more money than the CBC I will tell you.

Mr. Goodman: That's right.

The Chairman: Well, just a moment. It says there 12 staff reporters and cameramen work out of the Toronto Telegram offices on Front Street. Now, no other television station that I know of in the Toronto market has 12 staff reporters working out of a daily newspaper. Surely it is an advantage; now the question becomes: is it an unfair advantage?

You have made much of the fact that there is a great deal of competition in the Toronto market and I take your point. I think your point is very well taken, but when it comes to news programming, CFTO enjoys an advantage, and we have agreed on that, but the question then becomes is it an unfair advantage?

Mr. Goodman: That's right. First of all it doesn't have to be an advantage. I recall—I think it is CFRB and the Star—they have an association. There is nothing to prevent CHCH in Hamilton making an association with the Spectator and there is nothing to prevent...

The Chairman: No, but you have made the point that the Spectator—you said earlier that CHCH is trying to compete in the Toronto market?

Mr. Goodman: Well, let's do it with the Star then.

The Chairman: Would there be the same incentive for the Star and the Globe and Mail to have 12 staff reporters and cameramen working out of the Star or Globe and Mail offices if the ownership isn't in common?

Mr. Goodman: Well, that is just a question of location. The 12 reporters on our payroll—they are not Telegram reporters.

The Chairman: Well, let me ask you another question. Let us just get away from that...

Mr. Goodman: Well, let's not. As I understand, CFRB and the Star—at least I hear the news or it may be one of the other radio stations, but I think it is CFRB and the Star, although I am not sure of that, but...

The Chairman: But we are talking television.

Mr. Goodman: All right, but I am just showing you that these associations can be formed. It is important to radio as well.

The Chairman: Does CFRB have 12 staff—I don't think they have 12 people in their whole news department.

Mr. Goodman: But what does 12 people in our news staff have to do with the Telegram? That's got to do with our interest in the news; and that is why "World Beat" has been accepted as the number one news programme across the country. It is because we are prepared to cut our profit, and have always done so in order to be first in the field of news, and it is because we have that orientation that we are prepared to do that.

The Chairman: Well, I am not quarrelling with you.

Mr. Goodman: Well Senator, I am not quarrelling with you, either.

The Chairman: That's good. I am not quarrelling about the excellence of "World Beat" at all, but I am wondering whether your television competitors in the Toronto market have the same advantage you have because of your association with the Telegram.

Mr. Delaney: I am just wondering if we could put one thing aside for the moment. CHCH is not licensed as a Toronto station.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Goodman made the point...

Mr. Delaney: No, he said that they were trying to compete.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Delaney: But they are not licensed.

The Chairman: Are they a Toronto station or not?

Mr. Delaney: They try to be.

The Chairman: Are they a Toronto station?

Mr. Delaney: They are not licensed as such.

The Chairman: Well, the opening comment I think...

Mr. Delaney: Well, if you can bear with me for a moment.

The Chairman: Certainly.

Mr. Delaney: The point is that we really do have two Toronto licensed stations. CBC and CFTO.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Delaney: I am sure you will all agree that we don't have the subsidy that CBC has in the area of news. So if we do have an advantage with a working location out of the Telegram, it is one we should certainly grab.

The Chairman: You know, I am not quarrelling with that at all. I think probably the presence of these 12 reporters for the Telegram improve the calibre of this news-cast—I don't argue with that at all.

Mr. Goodman: As I say, they can make their own arrangements if they wish to.

The Chairman: Well, let me make another case in point to just get away from news. This is an ad which appeared in the March 18th Toronto Telegram—a full page ad for CFTO. Would that be paid for by CFTO?

Mr. Delaney: It certainly is.

The Chairman: That is a paid-for advertisement?

Mr. Delaney: That is a paid-for ad.

The Chairman: At full rate?

Mr. Nichols: At full rate with no discount whatsoever.

The Chairman: Well then, CFTO must do more newspaper advertising than any other television station in Canada?

Mr. Delaney: We certainly do.

The Chairman: Why?

Mr. Delaney: Well, I will tell you why. When we started in business as you know, the ratings in the first year indicated that CFTO was not the most popular station. The publisher, who also happens to be the president of CFTO, set up ways and means (now I am dealing with the first two years of CFTO) to have massive amounts of newspaper publicity available to us to draw our programs to the attention of our viewers in the coverage area.

I think that one thing was as much instrumental as any in bringing the station to the success that it has; but certainly CFTO has a budget which is drawn up the 1st of the year; it is approved by our president, and we pay for all our ads.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Delaney, why haven't I ever seen that ad in the Globe and Mail or the Toronto Star? Why is all of your advertising in the Telegram?

Mr. Delaney: We place it where we think it does the most good corporately.

The Chairman: Well, what do you mean by that?

Mr. Delaney: Well I mean that I have a budget laid out and I try to cover my newspaper through the Telegram, I try to cover my T.V. weekly through the T.V. Weekly that appears free in the Telegram and trade magazines.

Senator Prowse: In other words, if I take $10 out of one pocket and put it into another this is better than taking $10 out of one pocket and giving it to somebody else to put it into his pocket?

Mr. Goodman: Senator Prowse, all through Canada, associated companies in every field are benefits to their associates. The position I am taking is that it hasn't been an unfair advantage because the Star remains with the largest circulation in Toronto.

The Chairman: If I may make a point—I think it is very important.

I am not the least bit interested in the Star or the Globe and Mail. I am interested in broadcast competition, I am interested in the CBC and...

Mr. Goodman: Well, let's take broadcast competition. It seems to me that what was most important to Canada when we came in was to try and bring back the great majority of people who resided within our contour area to look at a Canadian station.

The Chairman: Right.

Mr. Goodman: We made application for this license and we said we are about to begin the battle of Buffalo. We have succeeded in bringing back from looking at American stations a great number of Canadians.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Goodman: Well, all I have to say is that if there are some advantages from being associated with the Telegram, they have been advantages which have reflected in the product given to the viewer.

As far as competition is concerned, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, who own the other station located directly in Toronto, (although I say all six are competitors) the advantages that they have over and above the Telegram are immense.

For example, apart from $160 million that is granted to the whole system, it enables them to set rates far below our rate and it gives them commercial advantages upon which you can question Mr. Chercover, because he has the details at his fingertips and I don't have the details.

But I do know enough being at CTV meetings that what is being done is that in effect the $160 million is, to some extent, assisting commercial advertisers to get into the market against us. So whatever advantages we may have with this association are far outweighed by the advantages that our competition has.

The Chairman: Well, we will certainly be following that up with CTV.

Mr. Nichols: One other thing in connection with this that I certainly think is rather important is this. Some years ago we entered into what we called a trade agreement with the Toronto Star, in which we offered them air time on our station for space in their newspaper, and they took advantage of that.

After a short while they discontinued it, and that is one of the reasons...

The Chairman: That is the arrangement with the Telegram then?

Mr. Nichols: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, I see a great deal of Telegram promotion on CFTO and I watch CFTO a lot. That is a contra arrangement?

Mr. Nichols: That is correct.

The Chairman: And you have the same arrangement with CHFI, don't you?

Mr. Nichols: Yes, we do.

The Chairman: Did you offer it to the Globe and Mail?

Mr. Nichols: I couldn't tell you whether we did or not. This was discontinued by the Star, not by us.

The Chairman: Does CHCH and the CBC attempt to enter into these kinds of contra arrangements? I realize it is an unfair question because you probably don't know.

Mr. Delaney: I know that Hamilton has a co-operative arrangement with the Star, as does Barrie, because I know that Barrie, with the size of the operation, couldn't possibly afford the amount of newspaper space that they used during rating periods in the Star.

Now, the Telegram has an arrangement contra also with the CBC. So the CBC has equal opportunity to advertise in the Telegram the same as I do.

The Chairman: The next question I was going to ask you is if you concentrate your advertising during rating periods? Most broadcasters do something about this, don't they?

Mr. Delaney: No we don't. As you noticed, we do a lot of advertising, and we advertise 12 months of the year. We are in a promotion market where if you let up for an hour, it seems that you lose some points. We just don't believe that the time to advertise is in the fall.

There is a coincidence that I might draw to your attention, and that is the fact that new shows start in the fall and the ratings start in the fall. So naturally you advertise in the fall. But we advertise 12 months of the year on CFTO.

The Chairman: Well, if I could just sum up my question in this area and then I will go to Mr. Fortier. In this whole area of concentration of ownership, it seems to me what you are saying to us is—and I don't want to put words in your mouth—but it seems to me what you are saying is that everything has to be approached on an ad hoc basis. You have to look at each situation and there can be no guidelines.

Mr. Goodman: Very definitely.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: I wanted to get this question to Mr. Goodman before he leaves.

The Chairman: Mr. Goodman will be here until 1 o'clock.

Senator McElman: Well, it is getting close on to that now, Mr. Chairman. We have had some testimony from witnesses who disagree with Roy Thomson's statement that "a broadcast license is a license to print money" and from others who say that it is a very risky financial undertaking. In this light, why would Mr. Bassett wish to purchase the Windsor television station and then agree to pass it over to the CBC?

Mr. Goodman: Well, if you find the answer, let me know!

I will tell you why. You know, I am very close to this situation and I have carried on all the negotiations with the CBC. We bought the station because there was a challenge, because we felt it was an opportunity in an important Canadian market, and right next door to an important American market. To use this to broadcast, to mirror Canada to the United States was a very exciting challenge, albeit a very difficult one.

Most of Mr. Bassett's advisers recommended against him proceeding on commercial grounds. When the application was turned around so that we couldn't own it but that we had to do it with the CBC and get out in 5 years, there was absolutely no commercial benefit to us. As a matter of fact, it was going to be a drain on our borrowing power and a drain on our manpower. But we felt that it was still an interesting broadcasting challenge.

Furthermore, we had some negotiations with RKO or Western Broadcasting, which is controlled by RKO, and we felt an obligation to them. We didn't want them to feel that this was some sort of a banana Republic where they had an investment which they would lose, and they might well have lost it if we hadn't gone through with this situation.

We just felt that we negotiated in good faith and when the decision came about—we wouldn't get seriously hurt—we had an obligation to go through with it. There was nothing more to it than that.

At this moment we are still waiting—we still don't know if it is going to be approved by the Treasury Board. We have reached agreement with the CBC and we are waiting for Treasury Board approval, but if the Treasury Board doesn't approve of the arrangements made, then we can't proceed. As I say, it were merely an interesting challenge to see whether we could do something to turn it over. We thought that there would be benefits, sort of long-range benefits for a private station working in partnership with the Corporation. It intrigued us.

But you know, I get asked that question, would say on an average of every day, by broadcasters, but they don't put it as delicately as you have. They say "What in the hell did you go into that situation for?" It simply is Mr. Bassett's view that there is an opportunity to retrieve a Canadian market and have an interesting experiment in working with the CBC.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: What is the future of the CBC in the present context of broadcasting evolution in Canada, Mr. Goodman?

Mr. Goodman: Well, I think it continues to play a very important and significant role. I think the reasons the Corporation was set up in the first place are even more pressing today and I believe that we must continue to have a public national service. Now, whether it should be a commercial service or not is something that might be enquired into, but I don't know enough about it to have any views. I am inclined to believe though that it is absolutely essential to Canada to continue to have a public service in the form of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Fortier: This marriage, for a fixed period of time which you are experimenting with the CBC in Windsor—a lot of people might wish to take advantage of that—do you think there are other areas in Canada where conceivably this could be entered into?

Mr. Goodman: I would think that it might be worth some thought. This would be a good opportunity of trying it out and seeing what happens. We hope there may be some benefits to the corporation from being in a minority position with us for several years. We are going to be running that station and one of our employees is going to become an employee of the partnership, he is going to be President. Mr. Bassett is going to be chairman of the board, and they are going to have an opportunity of seeing how we would run a station with a view to profit.

I think they must sort of have been smiling when they did it, but the CRTC has started an experiment which may lead some place.

Mr. Fortier: In the long run do you believe that the taxpaying public or the viewing public will benefit from that association with Mr. Bassett, meaning the shareholders of Baton?

Mr. Goodman: Yes, in view of the fact that we are going to be running the station. The agreement is that once they want to buy more than 49 per cent, they have to buy the whole thing. So therefore, I think that the benefits will flow more to the CBC than to us; but we hope to get some benefits from our association with the CBC as well.

We hope to get some ideas because they will have people sitting on the board, and we hope we will learn something from those people and we hope that they will learn something from us.

Mr. Fortier: One question which was not put to you on this matter of cross-media holdings, and which I would like to try on for size is this.

You pleaded in your very eloquent manner the advantages of cross-media holdings in a city such as Toronto, and you answered a question from the Chairman that there were markets where this was not to be encouraged in Canada. In those markets, which we don't need to identify, where cross-media holdings would appear to you to be advantageous, do you think this Committee should recommend that they be sought?

Mr. Goodman: Well, that they be sought—not necessarily, because while I say there are disadvantages, I think your recommendation should be that they not be inhibited or prevented. I am content to believe that the growth of the communications industry is such that this will happen in its natural course.

I don't want to put an undue stress on this. I don't mean that every time a newspaper makes an application for a television station and somebody else applies as well, that the newspaper should get it. I don't want to put that connotation on my remarks today, because that would be ridiculous.

I just want to say that that is one of the factors that under some situations could well be a plus factor to be considered. On the other hand, there are many other factors that could be considered and if you make a recommendation that it should be sought, it might sort of overweigh it. I would just let the natural forces take charge and just make sure that there is no prohibition.

Senator Prowse: That would apply to an area like Toronto where you have complete competition in all media. Am I correct?

Mr. Goodman: That's right.

Senator Prowse: What would be the situation where you have a smaller community and you have a newspaper and a radio station and a television station all owned by the same corporation and they are the only ones really in there?

Mr. Goodman: Well, let me say this. As I said to the Chairman, I have some philosophic concern but I haven't really given that situation the thought that it merits. I hesitate to come up to this Committee and make statements which may not be factual, where I don't have enough knowledge, which may be detrimental to those people who are in that situation until they have had an opportunity of explaining why they feel it is in the public interest for that situation to exist.

In other words, as I go by, I don't feel like taking a back-hand slap at somebody when I really don't have all the facts.

Senator Prowse: You have got a philosophical...

Mr. Goodman: Concern about the concentration of all media in a small area on the one hand, and that is as far as I can go.

Mr. Fortier: The bold, courageous journalist about whom you spoke earlier, Mr. Goodman, and which you encountered...

Mr. Goodman: Daily.

Mr. Fortier: ...daily in the field of written journalism, more so than in the field of electronic journalism, should he be entitled to protect his source of information legally? I can't resist the temptation of asking an eminent counsel such as you, a question of that type.

Mr. Goodman: Well, let me say this. I think that the whole question of privilege of communication is one that the Law Reform Commission should give some thought to.

At the present time, as I understand the law, only a lawyer is entitled to that privilege, and a journalist isn't. A priest isn't, nor is a psychiatrist. But I think the time has come to re-examine the whole matter and the journalist would only be one, along with the priest or the psychiatrist or anybody else, that might be entitled to that privilege in communications.

I think we have to weigh the public interest to see, but I am inclined to believe that the public interest might come on the side of giving them the privilege. Once again, I am passing these great opinions off as though they are nothing, without any thought, but I have given some thought to this aspect of it just as a lawyer.

I am quite convinced, for example, that psychiatrists should definitely have the privilege of communication, and I think a priest at confession should have the privilege of communication, and I think it could well be extended in the public interest to a journalist.

It is a question that I think some real thought should be given to.

Senator Prowse: Except that a journalist is repeating what he says he heard from somebody and a psychiatrist and a priest presumably are not talking to anybody but God.

Mr. Goodman: Well, I am prepared to allow the priest to talk to God, but I am not yet prepared to allow the psychiatrist.

Senator Prowse: They are playing God!

Mr. Goodman: That's right.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue this with Mr. Goodman.

The Chairman: I might say to Mr. Goodman that he is one of the more respected lawyers who have appeared before us, and this is a matter which is of particular concern to this Committee.

We have heard lots of evidence about it and we would be grateful if at your convenience you could send us your views?

Mr. Goodman: I would be delighted to, Senator Davey.

The Chairman: It is a matter of great concern to us and I know Mr. Fortier would like to pursue it. Time doesn't allow it, but if you could, not in your capacity as being associated with Baton, but...

Mr. Goodman: I would be delighted.

Senator Prowse: This will be a free brief!

Mr. Goodman: I had thought about the problem as it relates to the whole body of privilege, and I have come out to my own mind for extending this whole body of privilege.

I must admit, however, that I haven't given it sufficient thought as to how it affects the press.

Mr. Fortier: A week or ten days ago the Association of French Journalists appeared before us and they expressed the view that in this age of condensation and manifestation and so on, their ability to get first-hand stories from people involved in this age of condensation was diminished greatly if they could not assure their interlocutor that their source would be protected. They gave evidence of instances in the Province of Quebec where they had been brought before the court as Crown witnesses and they said their efficiency diminished and thus the public interest was harmed.

Mr. Goodman: I think there is merit in that position.

Mr. Fortier: And I can also see the other side of the coin. Should the CRTC, Mr. Goodman, get into the area of censoring programming? This is a view again which has been expressed before this Committee on occasion.

Mr. Goodman: Well, I am personally opposed to censorship. Of individual programs are you talking about now?

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Goodman: My view is that they should judge the type of programming put out over a period of time in the justification for a person holding a license. But I hesitate to think that they should censor programs, but I have a bias against censorship.

I just think that they have a responsibility to make up their minds whether this man has the responsibility to hold a license and once again I would object to the individual censorship of programs by the CRTC.

The Chairman: I would have to suggest, Mr. Fortier, that this be your final question.

Mr. Fortier: Well, Mr. Chairman, this will require a very long answer, but Mr. Goodman spoke a number of times this morning about alternatives to the Canadian content proposals presently being discussed before the CRTC, and I was going to ask Mr. Goodman what those alternatives were?

Mr. Goodman: Well, let me say this. I think this afternoon's hearings will give you a well-informed person to comment on them. My views are in accordance with the views that Mr. Chercover has been expressing. As a matter of fact, I did some work with Mr. Chercover on this matter and I think he is much more competent than I am to give you the factual information.

Mr. Fortier: Fair enough.

The Chairman: Well, then I would simply thank these witnesses and say to you, Mr. Goodman, that for some considerable years now, I have had a great political respect for you—sometimes it has been a hard won political respect.

As you know I have personal respect, but I add to that, this morning, professional respect. I think you have handled yourself, as I knew you would, exceedingly well. You can tell Mr. Bassett, not only that you are not the poor man's John Bassett but also that we didn't miss him as much as we thought we might. And I would include an expression of appreciation to Mr. Nichols and Mr. Delaney as well.

This is the first session of the final week of our hearings. Beginning next week we turn our attention to report writing and this has been a very useful discussion.

As I said at the outset, this is not the CRTC. Indeed, the CRTC is but one group, one organization we have heard from in the course of our study of the broad media spectrum. I think it would be pointless to undertake this kind of a study without reference to broadcasters. So we really don't apologize for bringing broadcasters before the Committee and indeed they might be annoyed if we didn't do it.

We are delighted that you have come here this morning, and thank you.

Mr. Goodman: Well, Senator Davey, we appreciated the opportunity. Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Thank you and the meeting is adjourned.

The Committee adjourned at 1.00 p.m.

Upon resuming at 2.30 p.m., Apr. 21, 1970

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call the session to order right away.

This afternoon we are receiving a brief from the CTV Television Network Ltd. Seated on my immediate right is the President and Managing Director of CTV, Mr. Murray Chercover.

On my immediate left is an old friend of mine, Keith Campbell, who is Vice-President of Marketing for the CTV network.

I would say at the outset, gentlemen, particularly to you, Mr. President, that the Committee understands and appreciates that your business office is not in Ottawa and you do have occasion from time to time to return to Toronto.

Mr. Chercover has just finished some 25 hours in front of the CRTC. He was telling me a few minutes ago that he is returning to Ottawa Thursday to appear before the Commons Committee on Broadcasting. For all of these reasons we are doubly appreciative that you have been able to be here this afternoon.

We are grateful, first of all, because we do realize it is an imposition. You don't look tired but you must be.

Mr. Murray Chercover, President and Managing Director of CTV: Let's see if I can stay awake during the session.

The Chairman: We will try to keep you awake. The other reason we are grateful you are here, is because of the nature of this particular study, which is to examine the overall media spectrum in Canada in which CTV, I am sure you will agree, plays a vital role; as indeed does the CRTC, which is another of the organizations and agencies and groups who have appeared before this committee and about whose activities we will be deliberating, as early as next week, when we turn to the report phase of our study.

Now quite understandably the brief you prepared and which I have in my hand arrived in the hands of most of us only this morning. I think very few of the Senators have had an opportunity of studying it in the detail it deserves. It is my understanding from some of the Senators that it deals substantially with many of the questions we put to you in our Guidelines. That being so it will form a variable part of our record.

I am going to suggest now, Mr. Chercover, that you begin with an oral statement in which you can certainly talk about this brief and there might be other matters you want to talk about too. We will then turn to the questions on your oral statement and on the written brief and on other matters which may be of interest and concern to the committee. I am sure if you wish to have Mr. Campbell share the work load of answering the question we will be delighted.

Welcome. Relax. Let's talk about CTV.

Mr. Chercover: Ladies and gentlemen. Before we begin I would like to introduce my Executive Assistant, Mr. Derek Brown, who is sitting with the press; and Mr. Finlay MacDonald, who is President of our only O & O, or even partially O & O, CJCH in Halifax.

Perhaps it would be useful, since in fact we did deliver our brief rather late, if I were merely to highlight a few of the points.

First, the structure of CTV, which is the unique instrument not only in Canada but anywhere in the world. It is a network which is owned by its affiliates. Now the normal practice is to have ownership of a significant group of key affiliates in major markets, on the part of any commercial network, to provide a number of things, not the least of which is a revenue base from the resources of those stations, and more important, perhaps, an opportunity for guaranteed exposure of programming, in the key markets.

We are not in that mode, as it were. We are a co-operative and that makes us very unusual and more particularly in the commercial environment.

We do have an O & O, as it were. We own 75 per cent interest in CJCH Halifax but with apologies to Mr. MacDonald and to that very provides us with economic support structure.

I have listed for you the nature of the specific member stations which we have currently. It should probably be of interest to you to know that while the ownership and the obligations pertaining to the operation of the network is shared proportionately by the stations in relation to their ability to pay, or their size or their scales, their control or influence over the network is restricted to one voice or one vote per station.

Indeed when we purchased CJCH, or the majority interest in CJCH, both the condition of our application to the Commission for the right to conclude that arrangement, and the ultimate approval which we received from the CRTC, contained requirements to maintain the representation from CJCH and from the Halifax region on our Board.

That is the background of the structure of the company. There is more detail contained in the brief.

Now in relation to our programming orientation, since we purchased the shares of the network outright in 1966 we have devoted ourselves to the principle that the network is one thing, first and foremost and in terms of our orientation, we have supported that view and that it is a programming service to the community life. The network is not a sales agency, with all due respect to Mr. Campbell who does a magnificent job. It is not either a microwave contract or distribution system or an origination centre; although all of these things are required in order to fulfill our purposes.

What it is first and foremost is a programme service. If that service is not of value and of attraction to the community, it cannot become a sales orientated agency; it cannot generate support; it cannot distribute programmes; or if it does, it is irrelevant because there are not receivers out there.

There is a two-way proposition involved. We must communicate and ensure that the receivers are on our frequency, as it were; but more important we must be sending on their frequency. I don't mean that technically I mean that in terms of the kind and nature of service which we provide.

Now I have pointed out in the brief that our basic service of regularly scheduled programmes is approximately 50 hours per week half of which is in our hands for sale. We differentiate between the half which we sell and the half which is in the station's hands, by calling the 25 hours and ten minutes which we sell "network sales time." In our affiliation agreement, the specific allocation of those times, as between prime and non-prime Saturday morning, week-day afternoons week-ends for sports and so on, is clearly delineated.

In addition, of course, to the regularly scheduled services we do mount such things as coverage of Apollo or press conferences in Ottawa or national political conventions or any events which happen in the world, or more particularly in Canada, which dictate that the service should be expanded, deleted, pre-empted, changed, or accommodated either within the network sales environment or even if it crosses into the stations' sales time.

We have been faced with the challenge of an extension of the alternative service. Everyone knows the history that in 1966 a White Paper was brought forward relating to the future of broadcasting in Canada. Based on that White Paper in 1968 we received a new Broadcasting Act. The White Paper specified that the alternative service was now almost a necessity. It was an amenity, almost a necessity of life.

Certainly the pressures mounted from communities not having primary service, and more particularly from those not having second service, have been indicative that that was an accurate assessment of the problem. We developed, within our structure, a procedure whereby we could indeed extend and provide coverage even though it is well-known throughout the industry that there is no economic advantage, or indeed economic reality, in extending beyond our back-bone network as it is currently structured.

The additional markets we anticipate going into will not provide revenue in proportion to the costs which they will incur. Nonetheless our stations have developed a broad plan for satelliting where such a system is acceptable and where there is an incumbent CBC privately-owned affiliate and CBC intends, when funds are available, to move forward.

We expect to have to accommodate those affiliates as members of our consortium in either of two forms. The first form is the form of a full fledged card-carrying—and we call it "load bearing" shareholding affiliation. The affiliation with CTV is a matter of shareholding and thus assuming your proportional share of the obligations of the network, whatever they may be.

The second method is a form of supplementary affiliation whereby we will provide the entire programme service, the network station sales time absolutely free of charge and/or obligation to those stations accepting that they will have to carry the network sales time programme package, inclusive of the commercials. They will have some 5,000-odd availabilities in the station sales time portion of our service which they will be allowed to sell free and without hinderance on the part of the network. That is a step along the way towards this alternative service, full alternative service.

We have made many adjustments over the years since we took over the network. Perhaps the point of history would be of interest to you.

When the new eight stations, the backbone of this current network, were licensed in 1959 and 1960, there was no network. A group of stations then formed an organization called the ITO, Independent Television Organization. It was incorporated as a non-profit co-operative arrangement whereby we would co-operate to cause programmes to be produced, to acquire productions, to serve the interests of the collective group stations in the most efficient possible manner.

Very shortly after that, the BBG in its wisdom decided a second private network would be a feasible enterprise, even though Mr. Fowler in his report in 1957, I believe it was in 1957, said this was an impossible economic prospect and that this country could not and should not consider an alternative network.

So we set up our co-operative and operated it for a very short time. It was then put to rest for a very short period. When the CTV was first licensed, we felt the network should be given an opportunity to fulfil the undertakings we were prepared to do for ourselves. Unfortunately the original shareholding arrangement in that network resulted in a conflict of interests between broadcasters who were licensed at the station level and who were suffering extraordinary operating and other kinds of losses. As a matter of fact, it is probably well known to you that some of them had to re-organize drastically with re-financings all across the country.

The conflict of interests was resolved finally when we bought the network in 1966. Many adjustments have taken place in the formulae and sharing arrangements which are part of the affiliation agreements. All I need say is that the shareholders have on each occasion, where previously conceived ideas of operation proved to be unacceptable or proved to be incapable of fulfilling our requirements, have made the necessary adjustments and paid the freight proportionally.

I don't think with all the testimony I have given in the last few days that I have to emphasize the nature of our Canadian commitment. I should bring certain figures to your attention in the brief.

Our Canadian content prime time programme costs have risen by 80.5 per cent during the last three years; while the foreign programme content in that same time category has risen by only 7.5 per cent, less than the normal inflationary cycle. Over 76 per cent of our total programme budget on the network sales time portion of the schedule, is developed to programmes in the Canadian content classification.

I think that is a fairly important statement because when we deal with the Act itself; the operative clause is section 2(d), which speaks of the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system and concludes with the statement:

"... and the programming provided by each broadcaster should be of high standard, using predominantly Canadian creative and other resources;"

Now we believe that spending 76 per cent of your programme budget on the Canadian portion of your schedule is precisely and specifically meeting that requirement.

We also, I think, should point out to you—I don't know whether that figure is contained in the brief, but it is a very interesting figure—that our total programme service, that includes all these extras I have spoken about, football and hockey, which are outside the network sales time or the regular service, and events of national or regional importance—election coverage and so on—the total programme budget comes close to $12 million and represents over 70 per cent of our revenue. Now that is a fairly significant figure.

We have gone a lot further in the area of programming aside from our basic devotion to the principles of service, dealing with the issues that concern Canada and Canadians.

We have also been in the forefront of development of an international orientation in programming; and we believe this is one of the real hopes for this industry and this country.

We have faith in the creative resources of this country. Perhaps our having stayed here over the past few years when times were not easy is indicative of that faith. We believe in the creative resources that are here and we believe we can meet the challenge on the international market place.

We do have to temper that with reality that requires in addition to talent a good deal of money. We have to invest up front and it is a speculative investment. We have been doing that more and more. There are quite a considerable number of specifics contained in the brief which you might be interested in or in our brief to the CRTC, which we would be happy to supply to you.

On the concentration of ownership issued, we demonstrate the fact that we are a consortium operation, one form of concentration of ownership. It is not perhaps the form you precisely were concerned about. Nonetheless it is a concentration of the resources of twelve shareholding affiliated stations and the network itself, in order to achieve the goals and the objectives that we put forward for ourselves and which have been put forward for us in the form of the Act or regulations.

I might point out that our orientation towards quality and towards programming service have all been elective on our part. We could meet the precise requirements of the current Canadian content regulations on a much cheaper basis, a much more economic basis. We don't do that and we haven't done that. The reason is because we don't believe that the industry will survive unless we develop viable and useful, productive programmes which can be exported from this country. That is only one of the reasons.

We also believe the collective orientation has brought the kind of loyalty that we can demonstrate if this group should be interested in pursuing performance with the audience. We believe we have made connections. We believe our frequency is right with the community and I think we can demonstrate that not only in practical terms of household viewers but also in terms of the critical response of the intellectual community, the academic community, of the political community.

Now on concentration of ownership, one more comment. If we are going to have the kind of speculative resources which will enable us to put four and five and ten times the amount of money into programming, which can be reasonably considered to be recoverable in the marketing circumstances of Canada, per se, we must have certain units in the structure which are by themselves large enough to allocate the funds for this kind of speculative activity.

At the same time, we are concerned about size wherever the amalgamation of units within our structure, or the apparent intent to provide an amalgamation of units outside CTV structure, may be inimical to the interests of CTV. We believe we have to remain viable and without wishing to use a cliché—we have to do well before we can do good.

In the matter of changing technology, I am going to hope that you will ask questions here. I want to speak to this issue because it is of great concern. There seems to be a rather widespread acceptance, particularly in the intellectual community, that technology will dictate our inevitable behaviour.

I don't believe that it is necessary. I believe, for example, if we had known in 1910 what we know today about the internal combustion engine and the automobile we would not have allowed technology to dictate the nature of our society. I also believe sincerely that we are in a better position today in technological terms to predict the outcomes of these various new techniques.

For example, today it is possible, with reasonable validity, to project the multiple channel CATV satellite direct-to-home transmissions that are part of this whole new technological excitement. It is also possible to predict, and I do so without reservation, that Canada, cannot at this time in its development, with its sparse population, afford a 42 channel system and retain an indigenous system that provides for a reflection of Canada to Canadians.

The very simple fact is, if we accept the technocrats enthusiasm for change and we contemplate multiple channel system, we must first of all examine the national objectives which are pretty well annunciated in that Act. If we agree with those principles that Canada should retain its identity and this instrument of communication should be one of the most important elements in maintaining that identity, then it seems to me we have to recognize CATV for what it is. It is a very fine instrument in an urban structure.

Now we are growing as an urbanized country and by the 1990's we expect that 80 per cent of our population will be in the urban areas. Even then, we are talking about the penetration of a service, which is at the election of each individual, unless somebody is going to pass some legislation that requires the viewers to sign up for cable service. We are talking about a maximum of 55 to 60 per cent penetration potential after 80 per cent or more of the population is in the tight, tight urban areas.

That kind of penetration does not compare very favourably to what CBC delivers now and what we deliver now, even though we have not completed the process of the extension of the alternative service. We now cover a little over 80 per cent of the country. We expect with the licensing of the certain areas, which have been specified by the Commission for the immediate future, that we will soon be up at the 90 per cent level. The last few percentage points are by far the most expensive and most difficult.

Cable does not provide an answer for that problem; and the fragmentation which will result from an early imposition of cable and multiple channel services, will further diminish our ability, which is solely dependant on the generation of the revenue in the advertising community.

Now I also say that we have to anticipate whether—assuming that our viability as a marketing instrument is destroyed, which is possible and perfectly acceptable—don't suggest for a moment that should be a limitation of social change—if that were the direction the country chose to go, because the social, political, cultural interests of the nation would be better served by going in that direction, I vote "Yes, let's go that way."

But can we expect additional taxation to provide the resources for these multiple channel programme services. I say in the brief that we hardly do a satisfactory job, with the resources at our disposal today, on two channels nationally and the French channel that is not national yet. How do we handle 42 or 70 channels of different programming? Certainly not by going to the Federal treasury and saying multiply $166 million by whatever it is. We really cannot afford that.

I think there was a man who most of you probably know better than I, Donald Gordon, who once talked about the problems of Canadians affording two cars in every garage and the same kind of affluent life with a swimming pool, a boat and a cottage that their contemporaries in the United States could afford.

Now, it didn't do him a great deal of good politically to be honest but I have no option. I have to say I am prepared to go ultimately in the direction that is best for this country and I don't believe this country can afford the fragmentation and the multiple-channel service if it continues to maintain a national orientation, a national federal identity.

Senator Prowse: Pardon me, were you saying Donald or Walter Gordon?

Mr. Chercover: Walter. Excuse me.

On the subject of satellites, we have been party to the Telecommission studies which talked about the social and other economic implications of satellites. The satellite may be a decision for Canada that has to do with the technology of building and selling satellites, but let us face the reality of satellites. This is not an economic instrument for the distribution of programme services for seven time zones. We cannot change the metabolic clocks of our citizens.

The only option we would have, if we were to use this instrument, is to go up and down seven times to conform with the metabolic and sun-based timetables. Otherwise perhaps the suggestion may be not facetiously made that the viewers in Vancouver would convince their employers and their neighbours to change the whole timetable and set everything on the Maritime time and start from the East and go to the West. The Vancouver viewers would watch the early evening news at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Senator Everett: Wouldn't video-tape answer that?

Mr. Chercover: No. Because how do you use videotape in relation to a satellite? You have to re-distribute, which means now you are using a satellite system, put it up and down once, and then you are using a ground-based system to duplicate it, to re-distribute, which means now you are using a satellite system, put it up and down once, and then you are using a ground-based system to duplicate it, to re-distribute in the region, so you are adding cost which does not contribute to programmes or to service to the viewers.

This is covered, I think, in some detail in the brief and you may wish to examine it and question me on that.

When we get to the question of direct satellite-to-home, we then have to ask why are we proceeding with CATV; because if multiple channels direct satellite-to-home is the next step in this technological surge, we are going to obsolete not only the ground-based microwave system which we now have, we are going to obsolete not only the direct-to-home ground based transmissions and network structures that exist, but we are also going to obsolete the CATV systems which we are desperately trying to install at the moment.

I ask if it would not be quite appropriate at this point to put the brakes on and say "Whoa, let us reconsider the whole spectrum."

I said in a private meeting with the Chairman of the Commission—I went through all of these inter-connected and inter-related policy areas and he said "Yes, it is a very complex administrative problem." I said, "No, sir. It is a medical problem." He said "What do you mean by that?" I said "Everything inter-relates. You have an illness that is centred in a part of your body that you don't have any consciousness of but your right ankle hurts." "You just simply must get to x-ray and a metabolic check of the entire structure of communications."

We are faced with the pressure for the extension of service and we are prepared to proceed but we are confined by government policy emanating from the Department of Communications that says in order to have an orderly system we must give precedence to our friends the non-carriers.

I have no objection to giving precedence so long as they meet the price and provide the service. But when we can do the job for ourselves at half the price, and at the end of a ten-year period of amortization own the system, why should we be required to spend the money in order to integrate with a system that exists and is in the hands of another private owner, when the use of this proposed facility is to provide a service to an uneconomic area.

We say from time to time "Hold on." We have been studied and examined and probed and almost dissected. In fact these studies are all not connected. They are happening in different pockets throughout the structure of this country.

I would like to see all of them marry for one massive period of examination and one realistic re-evaluation and set some directions for the future.

Now we have been asked to comment on American competition in advertising. We certainly do encounter significant competition from the United States and without precisely reading this brief you are fully aware by this time, I am certain, that there are border stations in the United States that are licensed purely and simply to serve Canadian communities. That is the simplest way of putting it. Their offices are in Canada.

In the case of KCND, Pembina, North Dakota, their offices are in Winnipeg. They have Canadian representation. In the case of Bellingham, Washington, KVOS is licensed. There are two or three hundred and ninety-four souls, I believe, in Pembina who deserve an American service, I am sure, but their office and sales are all undertaken in Canada.

One of the great tragedies is the significant proportion of money that flows out of Canada. We assume conservatively in the range of 10 to 12 million dollars, which is a fair amount of money, flows out of Canada to support advertising which is not legal in Canada under certain statutes, for example the provincial statutes respecting beer and wine advertising, in the case of British Columbia.

Now that seems to us to be an inappropriate arrangement and we have long advocated that the Act—and I cannot recall the specific piece of legislation in precise terms, but the Act which resulted from the O'Leary Commission...

Senator Prowse: 12A?

Mr. Chercover: Section 12A of the Income Tax Act. If that were extended by a very simple phrase—it is limited now to print media—and extended to broadcasting media, you would be a long way along the road to assisting us in that area and providing additional revenue potential to support the service we are trying to provide.

Senator Everett: Is that true just of KVOS?

Mr. Chercover: KCND and Buffalo—all three stations.

Senator Everett: KCND are taking liquor advertising?

Mr. Chercover: Brewery advertising; and the Bellingham station as well. The three Buffalo stations do and Plattsburgh does. The fact is in Buffalo they are not breaking a regulation. I must say the Canadian advertisers have been careful to keep their commercials in conformity respecting the nature of advertising which is allowed in that category.

For instance they don't go to the United States and make the bottle glisten and pour the brew. They contain themselves to the nature of the advertising which is currently in force in, for instance, the Province of Ontario and Quebec. Under the Ontario regulation, they are allowed a certain form of advertising and a certain volume and they do acquire more time in the United States.

That is a problem that also has to do with the provincial legislatures, as well, in terms of their preparedness to accommodate a larger volume or any volume. It is precluded in British Columbia altogether as at this moment.

Senator Everett: What is precluded?

Mr. Chercover: Brewery advertising.

Senator Everett: Altogether?

Mr. Chercover: Altogether in British Columbia.

Senator Prowse: Except from Bellingham?

Mr. Chercover: Except from Bellingham which is getting to 80 per cent of the province directly.

Senator Prowse: Ninety per cent of the business is Canadian.

The Chairman: We are not in the question period. Perhaps you could ask your questions in the question period.

Senator Prowse: That was a good time to ask that question.

Mr. Chercover: I don't mind being interrupted.

The Chairman: Don't say that or you will never get started!

Mr. Chercover: I won't belabour that point. I think it is quite clear what the problems are. There have been conversations, indeed some expert testimony to the effect if there was another channel in Toronto that in fact there would be more accommodation or potential accommodation for advertisers in Canada who would not have to go to the United States.

Let me say first of all—hogwash. The fact of the matter is there are availabilities on CTV; there are availabilities on CBC; there are availabilities on CBLT; there are availabilities on CFTO; there are availabilities on CHCH, Hamilton. Not one of those stations, however proud they may be of their sales record, is in fact sold out.

In fact another station in Toronto, which is already well served with media, would only serve to damage the system which we have operative and only serve to further withdraw funds from what we call the peripheral or less viable markets.

If a new station goes into Toronto I can assure you that the revenue loss will not be felt at CFTO or CBLT or CHCH. Not for one moment. The revenue will come and will be withdrawn from Regina and Moose Jaw and St. John's and a few other smaller markets across this country.

First of all, don't let anyone suggest to you there is no room to accommodate more advertising in this media in Toronto because there is. In the second place, it would not serve to expand, as some people suggest, the opportunity for advertising in Canada. In fact by virtue of additional fragmentation which would take place in these critical market areas, it would result in dilution of revenue from those less able to afford it, the smaller stations in the communities across the country.

Now you asked for some comment on news and information programming. We regard this precise narrow area of programming to be the most important of the elements of service which we provide. Most particularly, because we essentially lack a national press in Canada, we have concentrated our resources in this area.

We acknowledge the admonitions of the Act that we must provide a reasonable balanced opportunity for the expression of different views on matters of public concern, but I took some exception with the Commission recently on this matter of a brief, which was filed by some young lawyers from Toronto who wanted equal time to oppose advertisers, because, in fact, every issue, which that young group of lawyers could identify as a public issue, is only now a public issue because the mass media made it a public issue.

We broke and expanded and brought the public focus to the issue of phosphates in detergents. We, the CTV and CBC.

We, in broadcasting, ahead of print by a mile brought the issue of mercury pollution to the public attention.

For 25 years we have seen the academics, and I don't mean to be in any way critical, studying the problems of environment and studying the problems of ecology, dealing with them in learned texts. This is what I call the closed circuit or introspective feed-back system.

It is interesting the political system did not respond until these issues became issues of public concern. They cannot always be made, be brought into focus properly and have full balance but there is an interesting fact.

We live in a multimedia society—thank heaven; and a free multimedia—again thank heaven. It is interesting if a single journalist, who by his nature must be committed to do anything of usefulness, does overstep the bounds of balance, complaint and redress is very quick to occur; not only because we elect to show the alternative point of view but because the public dialogue is set up.

For example, when a company (and I won't name any company) feels that they have been mistreated or maligned or otherwise done a disservice, the pressure they mount in the press or in other places where they have access, or in our own network, results in the reflection of the other point of view and that other point of view is fully aired.

Now there are some circumstances where I would ask you: is there an alternative point of view? For instance, is there a point of view in favour of pollution? Who is going to stand up and justify the destruction of the balance of our nature and the destruction of our future or our children's future? I don't know of anybody who can. In fact the key to this whole thing is to focus issues precisely and with sufficient drama so that the general public becomes involved, because the result of the general public's involvement and/or concern is political action.

We have, I think, done fairly well in this area. A commitment of this kind, whether it be on the basis of the individual journalist, or of the corporate entity, is essential to the preservation and the enhancement of a political, social, economic structure such as we live in.

We are not of the opinion that a press council in the broadcasting field, or for that matter in any field, has proven to be of significant value or effect. We have already got, thank you very much, a good deal regulatory authority to deal with in relation to television.

The question of public opinion I have in part, I think, dealt with in dealing with the matter of issues of public concern and indeed on the question of the pressure groups there are only two positions. If a pressure group whatever it may be, political, professional or social, reacts to something we do, it is possible that we have either reported and investigated the opposing point of view of an already organized pressure group. Then we can be said to have done our job well; we have exposed to the public the opposite point of view of an established pressure group. Or it can mean, on the other hand, that we have created a reaction by expressing a point of view that a large body of the general public had not as yet focused on in the form of a pressure group.

We are not unduly, in my opinion, swayed by the existence or the actual pressure of pressure groups. Indeed we are not swayed in our journalistic endeavours by the pressures that so many people impugn to the advertisers in our community. I have never had an instance, in all the years I have been in broadcasting, of pressure from an advertiser, whether it be a news programme or any other programme. I have known of one—but I have never experienced it—where they have endeavoured to influence the course of reporting of news or actuality or factual or informational programming.

As a matter of fact, I am delighted that we get more and more corporate identification and support in sponsorship for programmes that deal with the social issues that face this country and the world.

I think that, Senator Davey, summarizes my comments. There are other points, which you brought forward, with respect to recruitment of journalists and non-Canadian news that are dealt with in the brief. I am at your disposal.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chercover. That is a good explanation of the brief.

I think the questioning this afternoon will begin with Senator Everett.

Senator Everett: Mr. Chercover, there are so many areas in which you are an expert upon which we would like to question you, and if I start on a slightly peripheral one, I apologize. In view of the fact you are trying to get away, I will perhaps keep my questions short and you will keep your answers short.

Mr. Chercover: I don't know if I am capable of doing that, Senator. I will try.

Senator Everett: In your evidence and also in your brief you ask whether there was a few in favour of pollution. In other words, it is a onesided issue.

I wonder if there is not a view that says we should be careful about committing too much of our resources to the war on pollution? I wonder if you have given consideration, as a man who is very influential in what Canadians think, to whether or not you are not in danger of carrying the argument too far so that the resources that are committed are too great?

I agree with you that politicians do not create these issues. They follow the media. Very often it is the media that create the issues and the politicians follows.

I wonder if there is not a counter-argument to pollution?

Mr. Chercover: Well, I have been reading everything I can find.

Senator Everett: One that says "Yes, pollution is a "motherhood" concept but how far do we go on committing our resources to the eradication of it?"

Mr. Chercover: I absolutely agree with you. There is always a danger of overreaction and always the danger of overemphasis. But when we began to deal first, for example, with the matter of phosphates—which incidentally I acknowledge have not been absolutely finally proven to be the key element, there is new evidence, now, which indicates perhaps there are other factors—the fact of the matter is that we pursued the issue off the record with the responsible agencies of government at the Provincial and Federal level and we got no reaction. We did in fact pursue the attitudes and the policies of the various departments in question before we dealt wholeheartedly in the area.

Now we haven't had an item on phosphate pollution for the last eight weeks, I don't think. We have the ball rolling. Now it is clearly a matter of study by an appropriate government group with the technological, scientific and other resources at their disposal.

Senator Everett: Are you soft pedalling pollution now?

Mr. Chercover: No, we have just moved on to a few others.

Senator Everett: Speaking about leadership qualities that are involved, it seems to me that we are following an American argument vis-a-vis pollution.

Mr. Chercover: We started long before they did, sir.

Senator Everett: Talking about pollution generally?

Mr. Chercover: Yes, sir.

Senator Everett: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. Chercover: Long before.

Senator Everett: What about poverty?

Mr. Chercover: We have dealt with that and very precisely in the very recent past. We have had a continuing series of features examining not only poverty generally but poverty particularly in the environment of our native peoples, poverty particularly in the context of unemployment and the problems of the unemployable. We had a feature on several weeks ago.

Senator Everett: Do you think you are moving the public?

Mr. Chercover: Yes. We have had a response that indicates that the public is becoming aware of it. I have a flow, and I call it a flow because it is not just an occasional drop, a flow of mail across my desk from people who have seen a specific series and they demonstrate concern by responding, by offering contributions, by suggestions of further coverage, by suggesting other techniques.

For example, we had a programme not long ago which was not on pollution and was not on poverty but was on history. We took the recent McClelland and Stewart book by Frank Rasky, "The Taming of the Canadian West." We did a visual treatment of the short history of the development of some of Canada's mythology, which is not now identified as mythology.

Unfortunately Canada lacks, in public terms, the same kind of mythology that the Americans have built up about the pioneering era of the Old West and so on. We have as interesting and as fascinating a background, the development of the RCMP and the pushing through of the railroad and so on.

That was an interesting result. Several of the critics in the print media—I think they over-responded—were very critical of the programme. A great many people in the public environment wrote in and said "Thank you. Please let us have some more." Some of the most moving and poignant letters came from teachers who begged us to make it available to them because it was a visual and dramatic way of teaching something, which they try to get across in a text book environment, but are not quite as successful as they could be using the audio-visual techniques.

We will be re-running the programme at an early time with a specific promotion so the younger people can watch it.

Senator Everett: Coming back to poverty; here is an issue in which you would have been well in advance of the public and maybe the politicians; in fact I think certainly the politicians. What action do you intend to take to create in poverty the same issue that we have created in pollution?

Mr. Chercover: Knowledge, information. We intend to continue to inform the general public but in the way only this medium can with impact.

For instance, it is well over a year since we went into an Indian community and filmed the circumstances in which those native peoples were living.

It is well over two years since we first initiated a study in the Halifax area and in fact exposed the conditions in which those people were living.

It is not a table of statistics that moves the general public. If you pick up a piece of newsprint and you see that poverty is of concern in a ghetto area of whatever—we did it in Montreal 18 months ago. We go into the environment.

For instance, in relation to the reservation story, which was a shocking visual experience, we go into the home with a man with his children and see the conditions under which they live at 40 degrees below zero and see the nature of their grocery stock in those conditions.

We invited the Minister responsible to come to the programme to talk with the representative of that particular tribe. He didn't want to do so unless we gave him authority to edit the film, which we would not do. We put it on without him and told the public he was not prepared to come on.

Senator Prowse: Did you tell them why?

Mr. Chercover: Yes, we did.

Senator Everett: I have one last question on the subject.

Do you propose, then, that the news and information side of your undertaking will be to a much greater percentage, devoted to the war on poverty?

Mr. Chercover: I don't think to a greater percentage. We have a responsibility to observe the scene, to reflect Canada.

Senator Everett: I am talking about the responsibility you talk about here also move Canada in certain directions.

Mr. Chercover: Sir, let me say we have over the past two years or two and a half years, continuously and precisely focused on the issue of poverty. It is longer than that. We have continued to do so. We will continue to do so, not to over-emphasize that in relation to the many other problems we have.

Mr. Fortier: Do you believe that on issues such as these two, pollution and poverty, it should be the role of the regulatory agency, such as the CRTC, to go to you and say, "This has become a very topical problem in Canada. It should be emphasized by the mass media. Mr. Chercover, your network must produce more programmes on pollution, must alert the people of Canada." Do you think this should be their role?

Mr. Chercover: No, I don't. I think the role of the regulatory authority or a Senator or a Member of Parliament or a civic or social leader should be to press the media at all times to look at all levels of society. There is only one option, if the regulatory authority is going to determine priorities, and that is they must take over the programming and I don't believe they could.

Mr. Fortier: You don't believe this should be one of their functions?

Mr. Chercover: No, I don't; not even in the positive mode that you suggest. It is a form of inverse censorship.

It is my view, for example, Pierre Juneau and I talk with one another; Harry Boyle and I talk with one another, we communicate. They only need to lift the phone and say "Don't you think this issue is not getting enough social concern". They will get a response.

Mr. Fortier: Do they do it?

Mr. Chercover: I have never had a suggestion of any kind from them in those areas but have had some quantitative proposals.

Mr. Fortier: Ipso facto do you think they should have the right of doing what they did in the "Air of Death"?

Mr. Chercover: I think what they did in the "Air of Death" was a response to a political situation which was developing and which had nothing to do with their normal function of role.

If you will recall the Province of Ontario decided to challenge the validity of that programme and the CBC—for whatever good and sufficient reasons, which I don't care to interpret—elected not to respond to the province.

The Province then elected to create a Royal Commission and since the CBC would not appear or testify at that Royal Commission, it turned out to be a whitewash of the corporation and the provincial policy on pollution and a blackballing of the CBC.

The result of that was immediate knowledge inside the system that there was going to be some six or seven provincial Royal Commissions of a similar nature to do the same thing and the CRTC stepped in to call a single Federal hearing, I think to avoid what appeared to be a snowballing situation.

The fact of the matter is that observing, number one, the programme—looking at it—you couldn't argue with it. The proper techniques were followed, no misrepresentation, no distortion. The fact of the matter is that subsequent to the hearing there has still been no statement of any kind as a result of that hearing. The provincial government imposed regulations on that company and indeed, recently, I read a report, not more than ten days ago, that the levels of fluoride poisoning and pollution in the produce and in the animals in that community has now been diminished to safe levels. After the fact, to be proven right, if you have been up in front of a tribunal and judged to be wrong, is not a comfortable feeling.

However, I think first of all if there is an impropriety or an imbalance develops as a result of exposure, that particular programme was a case in point. As I recall the result of the squealings and reactions and bleatings of corporations and departments of the Provincial Government that emanated from the "Air of Death" exposure was across every newspaper in the province and nationally.

The mere suggestion that the programme was improper, long before the decision on the part of the regulatory agency to hold a hearing, resulted in a constant dialogue. I say that is a service the public should receive. That dialogue once created, creates its own balance, of necessity.

Mr. Fortier: The question which comes to mind, which I don't think is divorced from what you have just said, is on the quality of programming. You make the point that you are seeking quality rather than quantity.

Mr. Juneau said before this Committee the more quantity there is the more likelihood there is of quality.

Mr. Chercover: I don't accept that statement.

Mr. Fortier: Would you accept that the CRTC when a station comes up for a renewal of license should be empowered to tell the owner "We have looked at your programmes in the last two years and you have had 80 per cent Canadian content but your programmes have been very poor and consequently we won't renew your license." Do you think that should be one of the fields of jurisdiction?

Mr. Chercover: Absolutely, yes. I do suggest they should be looking at the community and the programmes, not merely reflecting the feed-back that happens in this particular environment.

There is an insular quality here; For example, there is an academic establishment, there is a so-called intellectual establishment; you know there is a political establishment. Those establishments feed back on one another. They have to go out into the community and observe the effect of the performance of the station.

I don't believe you can live from aloft in the performance or fulfilment of an obligation. I believe you have to actually know what is happening in the community and the kind of identification that is being made.

I have heard 20 times in the last ten days that the youth are turning off in this country. That is not true. First of all, I can statistically demonstrate that there is a greater percentage of that key 14 to 21 or 23 years old age break, that is supposed to be turning us off, watching us than the percentage of the audience as a whole. Interesting but a fact.

Senator Everett: You make the statement here, Mr. Chercover, at page 14:

"In any event, we act in the context of a multi-media society. In the event of an unbalanced position put forward by anyone, the public dialogue which follows ensures that balance is ultimately achieved."

It seems to me, in England, there is a tradition of an ethic amongst the wide sectors of the population to expose themselves to three or four national newspapers which, individually, do not give a balanced viewpoint, but collectively they do get a balanced viewpoint. I think that is the best way to get the news.

Do you really think, in Canada, while we live in a multi-media society, that the public has this tradition, so that it is influenced by this balance that is so necessary.

Mr. Chercover: Which public?

Senator Everett: That is what I want you to answer. You can define the public whatever way you want.

Mr. Chercover: I cannot define it in any single way. First of all, it is the public in its entirety; and within it, there are thought leaders and people who influence agencies of government; there are environmental elements themselves; there are the regulatory agencies; there are the representatives of other journalistic media; there are the academics; there are the public at various socio-economic and educational levels; and each one of the public is a different public.

I don't believe that we always achieve total penetration by any means, nor could we. For instance, the audience on a programme like "W5", 500,000 households and over a million viewers, is a representative audience not of the general public but of people who are particularly concerned.

I would hazard if we were to do a socio-economic breakout, or an educational breakout, we would find more people in the economic, political, intellectual orbit watching the programme of that kind than the general public in that sense.

I believe that the ultimate effect is still achieved in Canada. One of the things we try to create is feed-back. That is one of the reasons we answer and read all the letters we get, and we get a great many. That is because we want communication and contact with the public.

One of the reasons we test response is not only in numerical terms but also much more precise terms, in terms of effect and the desirability of programmes with a number of techniques, is because we want to build a feed-back.

We have specifically sought on several occasions to involve the public, whichever public it was, whoever was available or interested, in some of these debates and issues. We are gradually beginning to get a response getting people to come to television either directly or to comment on issues which are in debate. That is a necessary part of the exercise. We are getting some of it.

For instance, we often find when we deal with an issue up front, there may be a feature story in the newspaper and there may be, in the same edition, two letters to the editor which in fact may have motivated the feature story.

Senator Everett: We keep hearing in this Committee, and one of the questions we ask is: is there any control of exercise over what your editorial people write or report on?

Mr. Chercover: I will give you an example, sir, if I may. I may be able to answer it in part.

Senator Everett: I haven't asked the question yet.

Mr. Chercover: Go ahead and ask the question.

Senator Everett: We keep hearing about this. I am getting more interested in not what interference there is with the journalist but what control do you exercise over him?

In other words, we have heard that he is left alone to do as he wants to do so that, as you put it, there is no problem of journalistic balance. I am more interested in how you control journalistic energy?

Mr. Chercover: We, first of all, have not experienced any. That is a fairly important factor. I think the reason we have not is because the people who are operators in the network are themselves active in the field of programming and journalism.

For instance, I am involved with programming as my primary function. I have to know how to read a balance sheet, I have to know how to account for what we do, and I have to work with Mr. Campbell to achieve sales, but those are incidental to my primary function which is to ensure that we have a programme service that is valid.

One of the ways in which we do that is to look for people in the journalistic field of endeavour from varied interest areas and varied political backgrounds. So we are not necessarily demanding total objectivity of any individual but rather we are seeking to put a creative sense of balance within the structure.

Secondly, we have not had the problem of anarchy because the news features and information programmes are all a unit. They are not separated into divisions which deal only in hard news or deal in the alternative to hard news, which is opinion programming.

A good example might be that we have pioneered in the area of putting a byline column on the air, the opinion of the creator. We have a good example of that in Ken Lefolli's work at the moment.

The Chairman: Does he have complete freedom?

Mr. Chercover: Yes, he does. As an example he was covering the hearings this week and out of deference to my concern, he called me, not to offer me the option of editing but to offer me the opportunity to see on Sunday what he was going to put on on Sunday night. I thought was very gracious of him but I said, "Thank you, but no thanks." "I will not come to see it. I would love to comment on it afterwards but I will not look at it."

Mr. Fortier: And yet you are a man who should know. Tom Gould, your Director of Public Affairs, writing in the Star on Tuesday, March 17th, and he must have known what he was talking about, wrote this:

"Television journalism is groping with the tyranny of the stopwatch. Brief, superficial reports are crammed into a limited number of minutes. Cameramen, reporters and editors all seek good visual material and when it isn't available they often shape the story to fit the film they have."

Is this factual?

Mr. Chercover: No. The fact of the matter is Tom was dealing philosophically, and quite properly, with problems I could deal with. I could sit here and give you a litany of sorrows about the pressures of money, the pressures of time, the pressures of pressure.

Mr. Fortier: You don't think he was commenting on episodes which he had lived?

Mr. Chercover: Perhaps. He has also worked for some other corporations in broadcasting in Canada besides ours.

Mr. Fortier: Gould continues:

"We thrive on conflict, and create it where it is non-existent, by describing events in the vernacular of the boxing ring."

Mr. Chercover: Well, I simply don't accept that. Tom brought me the piece and I said "All right. You wrote it. It is your opinion. Be my guest."

Tom is only one person in our entire news service, one person in our entire information staff. He is a first-class journalist, a greater reporter, and a heck of a guy. That doesn't make him absolutely right on every issue.

Senator Prowse: He did show it to you before?

Mr. Chercover: He brought it to me just because he wanted to borrow from me several pieces which I had done about the problems of media and identification with the public.

I had given some papers, which Tom knew about, that had to do about the concern, the disaffection of the public for the media. There is a significant disaffection that has grown in the North American society, not just in Canada but more particularly in the United States. We have all heard the phrase "The silent majority." Nobody likes the bearer of bad news. We know that and we know we have a problem.

Tom wanted particularly to get the background of some of the research material that I had done. I gave him the files and he talked about the article with me.

Mr. Fortier: Let's forget about Tom Gould's opinion. We are interested today in getting yours.

Do you think that television journalists in Canada generally, and specifically those who are associated with your network, are fair?

Mr. Chercover: Yes. If they are not I have an obligation to go back to them after the fact and I do. I say "Do you believe that you properly reflected both sides? Did you go to the manufacturer? Did you enquire of the Minister in question?"

Indeed there have been occasions when we have come back at the same piece as a result of their retrospective acknowledgment they had not been fair.

Mr. Fortier: By and large do you find they dig as deeply as you expect them to?

Mr. Chercover: I find the instinct on the part of the more responsible journalists whom I have had contact with, is to dig very deeply and to do their very best within their limitations in terms of time, money and whatever.

I do believe that it is essential that responsible people observe what is going on and react after the fact as well as before the fact. It is not sufficient to give good direction to people. You must also then observe what they do.

Mr. Fortier: You have had a fair amount of experience in the United States. How would you compare our electronic journalists with the American ones you have come in contact with?

Mr. Chercover: I would not speak of them in the same breath. The fact of the matter is that this country is better served, by so great a degree, in the area of investigative reporting and responsible journalism in the broadcast media, that you cannot compare them.

I would suggest to you if you were to examine—never mind hard news reporting, anybody can report what happened today in Parliament, what decision was made and what happened on the battlefield—but I would suggest to you that notwithstanding budgets, slickness and all those qualifications, that if you examine the only regularly scheduled public affairs programmes on the two largest American networks and compare them in any respect in terms of social responsibility or quality of journalism with what we do on Sunday nights, you would not put them in the same category.

For example, since the pressure has mounted in the United States, and it has...

Mr. Fortier: Do you agree with Vice-President Agnew's criticism?

Mr. Chercover: No, I don't. I think that Vice-President Agnew was out of line in respect to the pressures that were put on the broadcasting industry. But before Mr. Agnew's comments and since the Chicago confrontation, the most important item covered on those Tuesday night major public affair shows was the life of a professional football player in documentary form.

Now what possible value did that have? That is not an issue.

Mr. Fortier: Do you seek to educate your journalists at CTV?

Mr. Chercover: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Fortier: How do you do that?

Mr. Chercover: First of all, we offer them opportunity to pursue additional studies where such academic approaches appear to be useful to their role.

More important I can name producers and directors and story editors with us now, to whom a very few years ago, coming in from the community, from the academic community as political science majors or from whatever source motivated their interest in broadcast journalism, by all that is holy I should have said "That is very nice. Nice to see you but you don't know one end of the camera from the other. You don't know how to interview. We will see you when you get some training."

We hire young people, quite a number of them, and we start them out in research functions or story editor functions at the junior level. We give them responsibility and after they picked up the ball and run with it for while and demonstrate they can hang on to that much, we give them an opportunity to expand.

All the while they are doing this they are observing senior people. We bring all our researchers to our weekly programme conferences which follow "W5" unit gathers every week and recaps and tears apart the programme from the previous week. We allow our most junior researchers to criticize the efforts of the producers and story editors and the most senior people.

By criticizing and observing the comments, not only of the units but of the senior people in the news and public affairs area, and my own participation which is quite regular, they are assisted in setting in their own minds a kind of sense of values.

Mr. Fortier: Those editorial conferences which you hold every week, do you exercise a right of veto at all in the course of those discussions?

Mr. Chercover: I think it would be proper to say that I could but I don't do that. I don't work with my people that way. I try to convince them; I try to argue with them with logic; I try to demonstrate to them where an impropriety or imbalance may exist.

Senator Everett: But after having gone through that part of the exercise you have not convinced a particular writer that his course is wrong, do you not at that point exercise the veto?

Mr. Chercover: Well, as I said before, I haven't had the occasion to do it before the fact. I have had occasion to insist...

Senator Everett: I am talking about before the fact.

Mr. Chercover: You cannot tell before the fact.

Senator Everett: You are on a story line...

Mr. Chercover: On a story line, for instance...

Senator Everett: And you decide his is taking the wrong direction?

Mr. Chercover: If I argue he says "You have to let me finish the story. You have to let me do the actual filming. We will look at it again on the Saturday preview or the Sunday before we run it to air."

First of all each individual, and it doesn't matter whether it is in the field of journalism or any other field, must have an opportunity to make his own mistakes. You cannot absolutely ensure that there are never going to be any mistakes, because if you do, you limit growth and the contribution of people around you.

If I dictate from my experience everything that happens, keep my lines out at all times to every aspect of our programming schedule, then no one is being trained to possibly step into my position; nobody is experiencing the challenge of the system, facing responsibility to the public and being brought to face it after the fact in the event of a mistake. Mistakes are part of learning and growing.

The Chairman: A supplementary. Why did Ken Lefolli suggest that you might want to see that particular last Sunday night programme in advance? I gather he said "would you like to see it".

Mr. Chercover: He didn't ask if I would like to see it to suggest that I might want to change it. He said I might want to see it for my own information because I was coming back to talk on the same subject further.

The Chairman: You saw it on Sunday night for the first time just as I did.

Mr. Chercover: Exactly.

The Chairman: Did you think it fair comment?

Mr. Chercover: I did. Naturally I was not entirely thrilled by the fact he spoke of "an orgy of self-congratulation".

The Chairman: He described your presentation...

Mr. Chercover: It is his opinion. I am perfectly happy to let him have it.

The Chairman: How about his comments about Dr. Davidson? Were they fair?

Mr. Chercover: Since I was there and observed it I would have to say "Yes."

The Chairman: Didn't he become rather personal in his reference to the fact that he said it was his opinion that he has been black-balled by the CBC?

Mr. Chercover: It is his opinion.

The Chairman: Okay. That is fine. Those are the answers that I wanted to get.

Senator Everett: I want to come to cable TV, but before I do, at the top of page 9, talking about concentration, you say:

"That is to say, if some of our stations allied themselves in a mini-network through group selling techniques, then we would be opposed to such a development because it is contrary to the raison d'être of CTV and the result would be to impair the smaller stations and ultimately cause their service to be adversely affected."

Are you talking about Bushnell Communications Limited?

Mr. Chercover: Not necessarily.

Senator Everett: Could you be?

Mr. Chercover: Could be.

Senator Everett: I am also quoting here from an article written by Patrick Scott Oct. 15, 1969 in which he seems to refer to a CRTC meeting; he starts off:

"The foundations for a third Canadian television network were laid here yesterday."

In the middle of the article he says:

"...Chercover, who as president of CTV conceivably turned the first sod here yesterday for his own network's grave."

Mr. Chercover: He didn't listen to everything I said.

Senator Everett:

"Chercover told the commission that CTV had no objection to the principle of one network affiliate buying another."

Mr. Chercover: That is right. There was a rider. He didn't report it but there was a rider. I think it might be useful for me to report it here.

I said to the Commission I had no objection, indeed I saw the benefits that were potentially there in creating larger economic units in order to speculate in programming.

However, I said that if that particular application, which was not then in question at all—if any applicant demonstrates an intent to undertake activities which would be inimical to the interests of the network, that I would be there at the time of that application and I would oppose.

I was referring at that time to the possibility that Bushnell might combine Ottawa and Montreal for sale, to which I would object absolutely and would do so in public and I have the clearance of my board to so do.

Senator Prowse: And have now done?

Mr. Chercover: And have now done.

Senator Everett: I guess you have done great deal, Mr. Chercover, of what you refer to as "co-production"?

Mr. Chercover: Yes, we have.

Senator Everett: Is this perhaps an answer to the CRTC Canadian content requirements?

Mr. Chercover: It is indeed. I have been giving it to them for several days as hard as I know how. But the basic problem is, of course, you cannot do a great many things simultaneously. A lot of people can rub the tummy and pat their head. That is a simple mechanical thing. There are dollars involved here and there is a policy that bankers should not be in broadcasting.

If they propose a quantitative enhancement on the scale which is contemplated, then the resources which we have to devote to speculative ventures, will keep money tied up as much as two or three or four years, in the hope of ultimate return of sales in foreign markets; and it is very much limited.

Senator Everett: Does the financing not tend to come from your partner in the States?

Mr. Chercover: No. On the contrary, we do not have very many partners who are prepared to put up all the money. We have partners prepared, as partners, to put up a proportion of the money.

I spoke this morning of one dramatic series venture we now have in development at which will be coming this coming fall, a commitment for 195 one-half hours of original dramatic or situation-comedy programming. This is an area we have long wanted to get into. My own background is in that.

I have been very unhappy to have to tell people like John Basset: "Forget your inclinations. You can't afford it." The fact of the matter is we will put more than a million dollars above the normal licensing monies which are normal to the Canadian market for the exposure of a programme of this kind, which is acceptable in the Canadian market in relation to the revenue we can generate.

We will put more than a million dollars in it and be in it and we won't start to recover until some time during next season when we will begin to see a small trickle of money. But the likelihood of our recovering the expenditure is a three to five year proposition.

Everyone in the programme business knows in fact that this is the case. American producers, who have a home market which can generate 200,000 dollars an hour for programming, often find themselves exposed until the programming has gone through the initial network run and is in rerun and foreign syndication. They don't become profitable, they don't get their full investment back in their hands until an extended period of time has gone on.

One of the measurements, it may amuse you to know, of the value of a company in the production business is the extent of their exposure for inventory not yet made, the extent of their financial exposure.

A company, which has no obligations at the bank and no programmes in the process of development and production, is a company that within a very short space of time will cease to exist. A company, that has no assets except future projected assets based on programming but is in debt millions and millions of dollars, may turn out to be a valuable contributor. Programmes have to be manufactured. They take time, energy, money.

Now the answer to the CRTC is in a direct orientation of this category of programming; but unfortunately it is not enough. We have been using every resource at our disposal and building the credentials of the Canadian industry for four years and our volume is quite substantial today in this field and is getting more substantial.

We just announced the first ever Canadian programme produced for a series exposure on an American network. It is a breakthrough—it has never been done before.

Mr. Fortier: It seems to me you are almost pleading a case. If this is an unfair question say so. You are almost pleading a case for the big affiliates leaving the CTV network.

Mr. Chercover: Why?

Mr. Fortier: They are the ones who are going to produce.

Mr. Chercover: Their facilities may be used. We produce. We produce the facilities wherever we buy them.

When I use a company like Film House Ltd. in Toronto and my people put the programme together and go out in the film units, is Film House producing or are we?

Mr. Fortier: I was going to oppose that to the big affiliates such as the Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal ones being in a position to produce their own programmes, and then setting them up against those which the network will produce and they will pay anyway.

Mr. Chercover: There is not a conflict of that kind. There are never enough programmes produced at this scale and with this amount of investment.

Mr. Fortier: That is today but projecting as far into the future as you can...

Mr. Chercover: We are a consortium; we are a unit. This is one of the classic tragedies of communication that people don't realize that CTV and its stations are a consortium. They are bound together, they are units.

If we are fortunate enough to have two or more producing units within the structure, who are prepared to speculate with good money and bring programme projects into the network for placement in Canada and at the same time seek, with a great deal of aggressiveness, foreign sale of those properties, or to co-operate with the network or co-finance with the network, it is all to the good.

Mr. Fortier: That is the vision you wish to encourage?

Mr. Chercover: Yes.

Senator Everett: What are some of the figures that are involved in a co-production? How much equity do you have to put in?

Mr. Chercover: It varies from one extreme to another. In the case of the dramatic series, our equity position, our full financial commitment from the start of production to the conclusion of production of the full number of episodes planned, will be something in the range of a million and a half dollars.

Senator Everett: That will be equity?

Mr. Chercover: That is our financial exposure, cash flow. Our equity position will be 50 per cent of ownership world-wide and 100 per cent of the right in perpetuity in Canada. It is actually somewhat more than 50 per cent; but in dollar terms, our equity is, in part, balanced by their ownership of an indigenous or creative element, an artistic property.

Senator Everett: So I understand the terms, what is the total outlay for the series?

Mr. Chercover: The total outlay will be well over $2 million.

Senator Everett: The question I am asking you is: how will you finance that $2 million?

Mr. Chercover: At the moment I don't know. I frankly don't know. I made the commitment and I don't have the cash. I am going to go to one of our stations and ask for their assistance, ask them to become a financing partner, so in fact CTV's ownership position will be shared with one of its affiliates.

Senator Everett: Let's take Blue Water Gold...

Mr. Chercover: It was a feature film.

Senator Everett: We are talking about the past there. What was the total cost of that?

Mr. Chercover: Our total involvement...

Senator Everett: No. Total cost?

Mr. Chercover: The total cost of the programme was in the range of $450,000.

Senator Everett: And you were a partner with Metromedia Producers Corporation, I think, in that?

Mr. Chercover: Yes; and our cash involvement was $100,000 plus staff.

Senator Everett: How did you finance that $100,000?

Mr. Chercover: That $100,000, I was able to take out of our limited cash flow position and actually directly invest. There is no other partner.

Senator Everett: If you had not been in that fortunate cash flow...

Mr. Chercover: I was not. I had to go to the bank.

Senator Everett: Would you have had any difficulty financing that $100,000?

Mr. Chercover: Not only difficulty, it would have been impossible. I don't know of any banks interested in going into this speculative field of activity.

Senator Prowse: You just said you borrowed from the bank.

Senator Everett: There were lots of angels on Broadway.

Mr. Chercover: I know that. The very simple fact is we would never have been able to achieve it. We went to the bankers and said we would like to expand our line of credit and they said "What for?"

Senator Everett: That may have been the result of the present tight money policy.

Mr. Chercover: They said "What for?" I said "Because we are undertaking a number of these ventures. We have been successful and here is one showing a profit and now all of those profits are not going back into the consortium. We are going to have a co-production pool so we can undertake more such ventures."

They said "It is nice but you can't have some more money at the moment."

Senator Prowse: You just said you borrowed the money.

Mr. Chercover: I have a line of credit with the bank now which fluctuates up and down with our receivables.

Senator Prowse: The bank did finance?

Mr. Chercover: In fact. I was not able to get them to expand that line of credit so I could undertake more ventures in this field.

Senator Everett: What proportion of ownership of the show have you got for the $100,000?

Mr. Chercover: Plus staff and personal function; the total was one-third of the equity. We got more equity than our dollar contribution proportion.

Senator Everett: That was shown on ABC and CTV.

Mr. Chercover: That is right.

Senator Everett: What of the $450,000, have you recovered on that?

Mr. Chercover: The American partner, in the portions which they controlled, went considerably overbudget. The ultimate licensing income that we have achieved so far was $450,000 from the ABC and we allocated, internally, $25,000 of our cash investment as licensing for the Canadian market.

The fact of the matter is the programme costs ultimately incurred by the Americans. They did not over-spend on the portion we had control of, which is all the lab work, film stock, editing, track laying, second unit film crew which we sent to location etc. We controlled our portion of the budget beautifully. As a matter of fact there was a slight surplus at the end but they blew their portion substantially. They are about $200,000 away from achieving the recovery position on their portion of it. We did recover. We did control ours and we did recover $25,000 in effect on the bookkeeping via licensing which we allocated.

Our normal purchase of the feature film would be under that level but then there are no Canadian feature films, but our two, that we have been able to buy for Canadian television.

Senator Everett: I am sorry, I haven't followed you. I will have to go back again.

You have a hundred thousand dollar investment in this film?

Mr. Chercover: That is right.

Senator Everett: You did not overspend your budget?

Mr. Chercover: That is right.

Senator Everett: What return have you had on the hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. Chercover: None. Yes, I am sorry, we have had beneficially the $25,000 license fee we have allocated so that we could broadcast the programme.

We have allocated $25,000 of the $100,000 investment to licensing. When we are producing or a partner in a production venture, we must take off our broadcaster's hat and put it aside briefly. We set up a venture where there are two producing partners and whatever proportions we can negotiate which are appropriate are achieved.

Then CTV has to say to itself as a producer: "How much is this worth in relation to the normal licensing pattern?" We cannot cheat our stations or we cannot cheat ourselves by saying we won't charge any license for the use of that property in Canada.

So we in fact charge ourselves a license fee, quite properly, for the use of the programme, for the exposure of the programme in Canada.

Senator Everett: What was the total cost of the package?

Mr. Chercover: My understanding is that including our $100,000 commitment they went well over $700,000.

Senator Everett: Now presumably there has been revenue from that?

Mr. Chercover: Yes, $450,000 from the ABC network. We have not as yet arranged theatrical release or television release in foreign markets nor have we had second release in the United States.

There is a pre-commitment for ABC O & O stations and Metromedia O & O stations, to take third and fourth runs on the title. The other part of this venture...

Senator Everett: Added to that was the $25,000 licensing fee?

Mr. Chercover: That was out of our hundred. It was an internal allocation out of our 100,000. It is very complicated.

Senator Everett: Well, we will go back at it again. 450,000 is...

Mr. Chercover: Is the original budget.

Senator Everett: The net revenue so far?

Mr. Chercover: That is right.

Senator Everett: In terms of your original budget you have got your investment back if you had not overspent?

Mr. Chercover: No, no. We haven't got any portion of our budget back because after they exposed us to their overexpenditures they prevailed upon us—I suppose we could have argued that "You made the mistakes, gentlemen, without any help from us. It is too bad"; but the relationship goes much further than one programme.

We said "Very well, you overspent the budget. We will allow up to this amount. Before we can start recovering on our investment we have to see you recover your original commitment."

We have also gotten an agreement from them to the effect after they have recovered investment we will get first dollar recovery but we are a distance from that and I doubt if we will ever achieve it. I don't think we will ever actually come out on this property.

There is one advantage I think I should further mention to you. As you probably know, many programmes are piloted for series consideration via the feature film route. This property was one such programme and it is still in consideration by the American network as a series. We will automatically be a partner in ownership of the series rights in the event that this does go forward.

That is a very speculative advantage but it is there.

Mr. Fortier: May you not make the decision yourself and then bring your American partner along with you?

Mr. Chercover: No.

The Chairman: I am going to suggest that we attempt to finish the whole session prior to dinnertime and that being so I think we might adjourn now, to give our reporter a break. We will reconvene here at 4.20 and go through until 6 o'clock.

If we have to come back, we will but it may be that by 6 o'clock we can finish. I would like to adjourn now for eight minutes and will the Senators please be back at 4.20.
...Short adjournment

The Chairman: I would like to call the session back to order. Do you have more questions, Senator Everett?

Senator Everett: I have a thousand more.

Mr. Chercover: May I make a comment to Senator Everett?

The Chairman: Yes, of course.

Mr. Chercover: I wish he had chosen one of our successes rather than one of our failures.

Senator Everett: In future I will.

The Chairman: Senator Everett, carry on.

Senator Everett: I yield to Mr. Fortier, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fortier: Thank you, Senator.

Mr. Chercover, you have a competitor, I believe, who goes by the name of CBC.

Mr. Chercover: I have heard something about that, yes.

Mr. Fortier: CBC stands for what? Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. What does CTV stand for?

Mr. Chercover: C (no period) TV.

Mr. Fortier: Didn't it used to be Canadian Television?

Mr. Chercover: It never was. That appellation has been appended, thank heaven, by a lot of people who call us Canadian Television Network Limited. Our corporate name is CTV Limited.

The Chairman: You were never...

Mr. Chercover: No. Don't tell anybody. I like it the way it is.

Mr. Fortier: Is CBC a fair or unfair competitor?

Mr. Chercover: Unfair.

Mr. Fortier: In what way?

Mr. Chercover: It is very simple. The CBC utilizes the public fund to provide services to the advertising community at a more beneficial rate than would be normal if they had to operate within the confines of a normal undertaking.

Mr. Fortier: In the long run is that not beneficial to you and me as taxpayers?

Mr. Chercover: No.

Mr. Fortier: Why not?

Mr. Chercover: There are several factors. The first is, that if in addition to effective subsidization of the advertiser, it is giving him cost efficiency which is superior to that he could normally experience in buying his time, it is clear that more dollars should flow to the corporation, thus providing greater relief to the taxpayer.

But more important, in the purchase of foreign programmes, the CBC has been reluctant—and I don't blame them if they can avoid it—to precisely define their actions in this area. They spend on an average twice as much as we do and the market dictates the terms under which you buy foreign programmes.

Now they have been known to lift properties from CTV in the past and it doesn't bother us. We then let them place them as effectively as they wish and then beat them with whatever we have left. That is another issue.

Let me put to you a rhetorical circumstance. If the CBC were told or decided on its own to set up a completely separate operating commercial division, and they were told that within that division, or that division was instructed that its end goal was to break-even or make a profit but they had to meet the obligations of licensing which apply to us or to anybody else operating in this area; if they could have a mixed bag of hours similar to ours, 25 hours or prime and non-prime Saturday morning for children and afternoon for women or whatever, the balanced kind of commercial service that is required for the advertising of the various products that are usually advertised on television; and if they then went to the Corporation, and said: "We want to use the facilities of studio 7" and the amortized rate of that facility, including capital depreciation, heat, light, power, et cetera—the usual way in which you pro rate the use of a facility—were paid back to the mother corporation; if the manpower rate were paid, including 4 per cent for vacation and all the benefits included in the union agreements; and if they were to make their programmes, as any other producer has to, in the market place and then allowed to buy their programmes from foreign sources at whatever price they wanted to; if they were allowed to price their time to the advertiser at whatever price they wanted to; so long as they hit the bottom righthand corner with a break-even or profit they would be competitive in a proper sense and they would not be representing a subsidy or drain on the taxpayer to provide for advertising services at a lower rate than the advertiser can get otherwise.

Mr. Fortier: Is that the role you would like to see the CBC play?

Mr. Chercover: Yes. We would not like to see the CBC entirely out of advertising, frankly. I think that it would be damaging to the general welfare of...

Mr. Fortier: The general industry?

Mr. Chercover: Of the entire industry.

Incidentally, while it is popular in some circles to denigrate advertising, we have acknowledged the Act and the White Paper before it, visualized and anticipated the selling of goods and services and the proper execution in the community, under controls, so there is not improper representation or products that are harmful or whatever. They envisioned that continuing and providing the funds necessary to maintain this rather unique mixed system that we have in Canada. I don't argue with that. I think that is a proper approach.

I don't argue that the CBC should go entirely into 100 per cent Canadian minority interest kind of programming. There are people who put that position forward.

It is interesting to me when you read the Act very carefully you will find under section 2(d):

"the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should be varied and comprehensive and should provide reasonable, balanced opportunity for the expression of differing views on matters of public concern, and the programming provided by each broadcaster should be of high standard, using predominantly Canadian creative and other resources;"

Now that applies to the entire system and it applies equally to us as it does to the CBC.

Now when we get down to the establishment of the corporation under 2(f) it says that there should be provided through a corporation established by Parliament for the purpose a national broadcasting service that is predominantly Canadian in content and character. That is where that phrase applies. It doesn't apply to the entire system. It applies to the CBC.

Mr. Fortier: As you well know, I am sure, Mr. Juneau finds similar purport earlier in section 2.

Mr. Chercover: He fails to quote the entire paragraph.

Mr. Fortier: We had a long discussion with him on that.

Mr. Chercover: The paragraph says the "system should be effectively owned and controlled by Canadians so as to safeguard"... That is an ownership directive. It is not a content directive, at least in my semantic reading.

Mr. Fortier: I am happy to say I agree with you on this count.

Mr. Chercover: I am happy you say that too.

Mr. Keith Campbell, Vice-President of Marketing: If I may expand on that...

The Chairman: Yes, Mr. Campbell.

Mr. Campbell: An example of the kind of stand, the CBC puts forward in the City of Montreal, which is a competitive market in an all media sense, our affiliate there is CFCF and the rate, as you know, is $525 for a 60 second announcement.

On an average in prime time, our affiliate delivers about 121,000 homes. CBMT, which is the English language competition provided by the CBC, has an average audience of about 91,000. There is a marked differentiation there. The rate the CBC charges for a minute in that segment is $325.

Moreover in the French sector, CFTM, which is an independent station, as you well know, has an audience of 255,000 prime time. Their rate is $750 a minute.

CBFT, only 20,000 homes lower, they are delivering 230,000 homes in prime time and their rate is exactly half, $375.

Mr. Fortier: What about the argument which I have heard adduced by the CBC, that it keeps the competing CTV affiliate more honest?

Mr. Campbell: I see nothing honest in giving away your inventory.

Mr. Fortier: Meaning if it were not for the CBC low-cost of advertising, CTV affiliate's costs would be even higher than what they are today?

Mr. Chercover: I don't know where the argument comes from. I don't know what justification there is for it. The fact of the matter is advertising efficiencies are measured—and Senator Davey certainly knows this—on the basis of cost per minute efficiencies depending on a demographic breakout that you want and region frequency studies and so on. The fact of the matter is, and Mr. Campbell can do this better than I, the average cost per minute on the CBC competitive to CTV runs in the range of $2.80 compared to $4.20.

Senator Prowse: Is that stations or persons?

Mr. Chercover: Networks. Costs per thousand delivered, network to network comparison, $2.80 a thousand.

Mr. Campbell: The full network rate costs per thousand for CBC is $2.80. Metro net is $4.82.

Mr. Chercover: Whichever you prefer.

Mr. Campbell: Certainly if we were terrified by the CBC and let them set our rates for us...

Mr. Chercover: We would not be able to do what we are doing.

Senator Everett: What is the prime time spot rate on CTV?

Mr. Campbell: Thirty-five hundred one-time rate, reduces to twenty-eight hundred with applicable discounts for long term.

Senator Prowse: Thirteen or twenty-six?

Mr. Campbell: Metro net seventeen hundred to about fifteen hundred, depending on the particular discount structure.

Senator Everett: What is CFTO?

Mr. Campbell: $600. CBLT is $475.

Senator Everett: CBW?

Mr. Campbell: CBW, Winnipeg. That I will have to look up.

Senator Everett: CJAY?

Senator Prowse: Mr. Chairman, I have a question when he gets through with this.

The Chairman: If yours is a supplementary go ahead while he is looking it up.

Senator Prowse: What is the total income spent on TV advertising in Canada in the last year for which there is a record?

Mr. Chercover: 130 million.

Senator Prowse: Out of that 130 million, 35 million goes to CBC?

Mr. Campbell: They report 34.8.

Senator Prowse: You get 100 million?

Mr. Chercover: We don't get 100 million. All the private stations in Canada, including the CBC private affiliates, all our private stations, which number 12, and CTV combined, get the rest.

Senator Prowse: You know what I am getting at because I don't have to draw you pictures. Out of this whole thing, if CBC got really competitive and started to take their full crack out of it, there would be a lot less left unless somebody had a lot more to spend. Isn't that right?

Mr. Chercover: No, I don't think so. I don't think they would take much more out in terms of deleting it from the rest of the system. If an advertiser is prepared to pay $4 per thousand or better for audience delivered he doesn't care who is delivering it. He will be on CBC.

At the moment they are taking advantage of a cheaper rate. I think there are more advertising dollars to be spent in Canada so long as the efficiency remains within the range which I have described.

Senator Prowse: What you are saying to me now is that the CBC could be making more money by charging higher rates for advertising without interfering in any way with the income available to the private stations?

Mr. Chercover: That is my opinion.

Senator Prowse: Could you give me an estimate as to how much more? This could be important to the taxpayer.

Mr. Chercover: I am sure it could. I couldn't be accurate in this area.

Senator Prowse: You can be pretty accurate, Mr. Chercover. I don't think anyone has any illusions about your ability to be accurate.

Mr. Campbell: If you add even 15 per cent to the CBC rate you relieve the taxpayers of $6 million right there. We should not comment on it but the fact is the CBC, by their own statistics, announced their sales cost and it is interesting to note that the CBC spends 8½ cents or better, that is a conservative estimate, out of every income dollar on what they called direct sales costs. We do it for 3 cents.

The Chairman: How do you do it for so much less?

Mr. Chercover: It is not an unusual figure.

Senator Prowse: Three cents?

Mr. Chercover: Yes.

The Chairman: Why is theirs so high?

Mr. Chercover: I don't operate there.

The Chairman: Now you fellows both know...

Senator Prowse: Any fellow who is as good as this fellow...

The Chairman: You have worked for the CBC and Keith Campbell has...

Mr. Chercover: He was stolen from the CBC. As a matter of fact he was such a good buyer we had to hire him. He was probably the most resented buyer in the country. He used to buy more efficiently on behalf of his advertisers, even from us, than anybody else in the business.

I would be misleading you if I said I could give you an estimate. I think if I can tell you we can sell $4.20 per thousand as a reasonable rate and achieve a reasonable percentage of sellout, you can take that kind of factor against their $2.80 or $2.82 and simply apply it to their total revenue, it seems to me.

The Chairman: I would remind Senator Prowse that he is not the questioner. You are still on a supplementary question.

Senator Prowse: If I am out of line I will get him later.

The Chairman: Finish it off.

Senator Prowse: What I want to know is this: you sell advertising at $4.20?

Mr. Chercover: Yes.

Senator Prowse: And the CBC sell it at $2.82?

Mr. Chercover: That is right.

Senator Bourne: Practically 33 per cent cheaper?

Mr. Chercover: That is right, sir. If you take 33 per cent of their current revenue you can see the saving that might be effected or the enhancement of service that might be effected.

Senator Prowse: Do you have against that your cost of sales?

Mr. Chercover: Certainly.

Senator Prowse: Yours is what?

Mr. Chercover: Three per cent.

Senator Prowse: Can you put it into a line that I can equate here?

Mr. Campbell: Three cents of every dollar that comes in.

Senator Prowse: How many dollars come in?

Mr. Chercover: It is very simple, sir. We cannot obviously project the amounts of money coming into the stations but at the network level, I think it is now generally public knowledge that our direct income, from the sale of advertising, is in the range of 14 million of net agency commission exclusive of special events such as football.

Senator Everett: I think the point he is making is if you can say that the cost per dollar of sales of CTV is three per cent, then the CBC is 8½ per cent and then you can give the total dollar sales on which that is based.

Senator Prowse: From that you can come back.

Mr. Chercover: I just did.

Senator Prowse: No. Just a minute. Let me do this. I am told now that your cost of advertising is $4.20 per thousand for sales.

Mr. Chercover: No, no. Excuse me, sir. Our cost per thousand delivered average to the advertiser on the rates that we utilize sale on is $4.20 per thousand.

Senator Prowse: All right. Now what is the same cost if I were buying advertising on the CBC?

Mr. Chercover: At the moment $2.80 to $2.82.

Senator Prowse: Now the cost of sales for the $4.20 income for you is what?

Mr. Chercover: Three cents on every dollar.

Senator Prowse: Ah, come off it. Let's come back and put it on the mill line rate.

The Chairman: No, wait a minute, Senator Prowse. I know what you are after...

Senator Prowse: I know what I am after too.

The Chairman: I think Mr. Chercover has given you the answer.

Senator Prowse: He has not answered. I don't have all his figures and I am not about to do all the arithmetic. He can do it quickly now and he knows the answer.

Mr. Campbell: You are attempting to relate efficiency of what the advertiser is buying to cost of CTV or CBC and selling it.

Senator Prowse: That is your price of sales.

Mr. Chercover: That is cost to the advertiser. It has nothing to do with our cost of sale. Our cost of sale is applied against our net revenue from sales. I say our net revenue from sales...

Senator Prowse: You are playing semantics with me here.

Mr. Chercover: No, I am not.

The Chairman: I don't think he is.

Senator Prowse: I think he is.

The Chairman: We can't spend all afternoon on this, Senator Prowse.

Senator Prowse: Senator Davey, with all respect, I think this is something that anybody can understand and it is very simple. We were told here that the income from sales works out at a basis of $4.20 per thousand customers.

Mr. Campbell: No, sir.

The Chairman: That is not it at all.

Mr. Campbell: Our income is roughly $14 million. Of that $14 million we spend about $420,000 convincing advertisers to spend $14 million. It happens that what we deliver costs them $4.20 per thousand.

Senator Prowse: If you had to pay income tax on this basis you would figure it out that quick. You say that what your income is, is you get $4.20 per thousand listeners per minute. Is that right?

Mr. Campbell: If you want to work it on a mill line rate what we would have to do for you is take $14 million and multiply it by $4.20, divide by a thousand, and take three per cent.

Senator Prowse: Could you do that quickly?

Mr. Campbell: I think what you are trying to ask is how much money do we make. That would have been an easier question to answer.

The Chairman: Senator Prowse, I have been very patient, I think. We have now dealt with this for 15 minutes and we haven't any longer. I know what you are trying to do. It is obvious the answer that you would like to get, you are not getting. I don't think the witnesses are purposely not giving you the answers you want. I think there is a misunderstanding of terminology.

Senator Prowse: There is a hiatus here.

The Chairman: "Hiatus" might be a good phrase, and I don't want to extend the hiatus until the time of adjournment and therefore I am going to move away from this, with your forbearance.

Senator McDonald had a supplementary question.

Senator Prowse: Maybe I could write a letter to Mr. Chercover and he will write me back.

The Chairman: I think that is not a capricious suggestion.

Senator Prowse: I am not being capricious.

Mr. Chercover: I understand that. I have tried to answer. I have given you the figure of total income from regular sale of time, net after agency commission, and I also gave you the percentage of that which is applied in the area of sales costs.

Senator Prowse: May I ask one final question? If the CBC increased their cost of advertising...you are saying now that they are selling at $2.82 where you are selling at $4.20...supposing CBC took their rate from you and went up to $4.19, which would still give them advantage, wouldn't the money they got be subtracted from the amount of money that you have?

Mr. Chercover: No, sir. We are dealing in many instances with the same advertisers. The advertisers look at their placements first on the CBC, because they can get cost advantage, but they are still prepared to buy from us and from some of our stations at cost efficiencies in the range of $4 and higher, $4 a thousand and higher.

As a matter of fact if you get into the Toronto market, $8 a thousand is not at all unusual with the fragmentation that exists in that market. No problem at all, you can get it. CFTO does and so does CHCH and CBLT. CBLT is lower than either two in rate.

The fact of the matter is advertisers will drop off and drop out of television after the top range of $4 to $5 is reached on a national level. They will drop out of Calgary and Regina a lot earlier than they will drop out of Toronto. It is not until it starts to reach $6 to $8 a thousand. It is more costly to advertise in a community like Toronto, which has multiple services, so they are prepared to pay more. They withdraw those funds from the peripheral or minor markets.

The fact of the matter is if we can get this kind of cost efficiency and sell to the advertising community, there is no reason that CBC cannot either. Obviously if other media were more efficient than CTV at $4 per thousand they would be using other media. No one requires them to use television and if $4.20 per thousand were not saleable CTV would now be bankrupt.

Senator Prowse: The reason we buy stuff at a certain price is because we get certain coverage. If we buy something else it is because we get additional coverage.

The Chairman: Mr. Chercover, you will not be surprised when you get a letter from Senator Prowse and you will answer it on a confidential basis?

Mr. Chercover: To the best of my ability.

Senator Prowse: I will even write a letter to the Chairman before this thing is over.

Senator MacDonald: When did CTV become a national network, what year?

Mr. Chercover: In fact, when it started. With its eight stations, it was national to the extent it covered from Halifax to Vancouver.

Senator MacDonald: What year was that?

Mr. Chercover: 1961.

Senator MacDonald: What were your rates per thousand in 1961?

Mr. Campbell: It is a little difficult to relate it to network circumstance because at that time we were selling programmes and costing programmes in addition to time but I can give you an index from 1961 through to 1969.

In 1961 the minute prime time rate would be about $1,550. It is $1,543. It is now $2,930.

Mr. Chercover: If I may also point out, in the intervening period we did not have coverage in Kitchener, Regina, Moose Jaw, St. John's Newfoundland and a number of other territories.

Senator MacDonald: When did you finally plete the coverage you have now?

Mr. Chercover: 1966.

Senator MacDonald: When did you finally come up with the coverage you have today?

Mr. Chercover: The last implementation of additional coverage was last September when we got the St. John-Moncton markets. All through the period, in each year from the time we started, there has been addition.

Senator MacDonald: If I may interrupt you, a moment ago you told us in 1961 you had eight stations covered across Canada.

Mr. Chercover: That is right.

Senator MacDonald: At what date did you add an additional group that gave you more national coverage almost complete national coverage? I am not talking about additions you made from year to year since.

Mr. Chercover: We didn't ever add a group. We added station by station or satellite or re-broadcaster by re-broadcaster. There was no specific period at which some magic thing happened and we expanded.

Senator MacDonald: You gave me a figure a moment ago of $1500. I didn't quite follow you. You said in the period 1961 to 1969... Would you repeat that, please?

Mr. Campbell: In 1961 the cost of buying a minute on all stations that represent the network today would have been $1,543.

Senator MacDonald: $1,543?

Mr. Campbell: Per minute.

Senator MacDonald: What is the cost to buy that coverage today?

Mr. Campbell: $2,930 a minute.

Senator MacDonald: What was the cost in CBC in 1961?

Mr. Campbell: CBC Metro...

Senator MacDonald: Never mind Metro, all stations?

Mr. Campbell: You cannot examine all stations because CBC have privately-owned affiliates. You have to look at CBC owned and operated stations. $1,238 in 1961 and in 1969 $1,815.

Senator MacDonald: I am more confused than ever.

Senator Prowse: That is the purpose of the exercise.

Mr. Campbell: Not at all, sir.

The Chairman: I think that is very unfair, Senator.

Senator MacDonald: If you could buy on CTV all stations in 1961 for $1,543 vis-a-vis $1,238 CBC owned and operated stations, and that increased by 1969 or 1970 to $2,930 on CTV versus $1,815 on CBC.. what I am trying to get at is has the increase in cost per thousand been relative on CTV and CBC over this period of your existence?

Senator Prowse: These figures are not per thousand.

The Chairman: I think Senator Macdonald understands the answer. Do you understand the question, Keith?

Mr. Campbell: Yes, I do. I cannot go back to 1961. I can go back to 1965.

Senator MacDonald: Fine.

Mr. Campbell: In 1965 our CPM was $3.15. Because of accelerated costs we had to recover more revenue so in the following year our rates went up, our spot became $3.72; the next year $3.84; the next year $3.94; and we are now above $4.00.

The CBC in 1965 was $4.47; in 1966 was $4.20; then $3.64 and now $2.82.

Senator MacDonald: Those are very interesting figures.

Mr. Campbell: They are.

Senator MacDonald: Over this period what happened to the subsidy paid by the Canadian taxpayers to the CBC? Has it gone up or down?

Mr. Chercover: I am sure you know the answer.

Senator MacDonald: If I did I wouldn't ask the question.

Mr. Chercover: It has gone up. It has gone up substantially. Five years ago I think it was 104 million and it is up to 166 million in the current level.

Senator MacDonald: Thank you very much.

Mr. Chercover: I think there is another point which may be illuminating in respect to this and it is a very simple point.

Since we have brought everything down to the final position insofar as the advertiser is concerned, that is to the position of cost per thousand, it is also interesting to note that to achieve this kind of efficiency, this reduction in cost to the advertiser, has meant the CBC has had to sell more and more of its inventory and increase the number of commercial minutes per half hour during this period.

While doing so they have put out minor rate increases which when you factor with the increased number of minutes the advertiser acquires for the increased rate in fact turns out to be a continuous reduction in rate or cost to the advertiser.

The Chairman: Senator Everett has indicated he would like to ask a question.

Senator Everett: I would like to get on now to CATV situation. As I understand it, Mr. Chercover, CRTC has published a policy regarding CATV.

Mr. Chercover: Several of them.

Senator Everett: The part of the policy I think we are interested in is that portion which limits importation of U.S. stations on CATV networks, that requires the CATV operator to black out—

Mr. Chercover: That is the most recent one.

Senator Everett: —certain portions of the imported shows and encourages also the CATV operator to take an interest in programming and in fact I think he is encouraged to programme during these blacked-out portions.

Mr. Chercover: He is also encouraged to form networks in order to put...

Senator Everett: Can you tell me first of all whether CTV is in favour of the policy enunciated?

Mr. Chercover: We are in principle in favour. At the same time, reporting or speaking to a group such as this, concerned with an overview, I don't believe it is fully implementable.

You see the whole matter began with the removal from the Department of Transport, of the responsibility of licensing CATV and the application under the new Act to the CRTC.

Licensing proceeded after the establishment of the CRTC at a fair pace. It was only after the effect of fragmentation in the major markets, in the border areas and the increasing viewing of American channels began to be felt, that the Commission took consideration of this; and pressure began to mount in non-border areas for access to American signals, so those citizens could be equal with their cousins in the border areas. I am sure you are all familiar with that debate.

CRTC established a review policy with respect to the extension of service and then subsequently in relation to the issue of use of microwave, in association with CATV undertakings, to import foreign signals into the non-border territories. They held three consecutive hearings, or two rather, on the subject of those policies to be developed.

As a result they came out with the December announcement which said CATV undertakings would not be licensed to use microwave for the wholesale importation of American channels and what it would do to the Canadian system.

Subsequent to that December decision there was a good deal of unrest and unhappiness and what I call backlash of public reaction in these remote areas, saying why are we not able to have these things?

The Commission then came out in April with a new set of guidelines which did contemplate the use of microwave; did contemplate importation of foreign programming; but in order to protect the system envisioned and described in the Act for the purpose of creating a national identity and so on, they added this new twist, which was to preclude the border operators, even the ones in the border territories, from carrying programmes which were carried by the two Canadian networks.

That is a beneficial policy insofar as we are concerned. However, it is a policy which I don't believe the public will sit still for.

For example, I don't know how many cable connections there are in Canada but the penetration in Vancouver is quite substantial and many of these people have either torn down their own towers and antennas or paid a substantial amount of money for connections and service.

They are going to be told, if the policy is implemented, that they can no longer have the services which they have elected. No one is going to tell them not to put up another antenna.

Senator Everett: How many channels can they bring in in Vancouver?

Mr. Chercover: They can bring in actually four from the Seattle-Tacoma area and one from KVOS but the KVOS is a prime signal anyway.

Senator Everett: Can you get those on an antenna?

Mr. Chercover: Yes. There are only certain areas in Vancouver proper, that you can get adequate signals with a normal home set. Before CATV in Vancouver, the stations from Seattle-Tacoma were border-line; they were always reported in the rating books as "Too few to be calculated." They were just a minor kind of penetration. Someone who put up a tower and rotor could bring them in, but most average viewers would not go to that trouble until colour came along. They were not a significant factor in the Vancouver market.

When CATV began to proliferate they became a very important factor.

Senator Everett: The Seattle stations?

Mr. Chercover: The Seattle stations. Not even the Bellingham station. The Bellingham station, being a Vancouver station, suffered badly as did the two Canadian stations. Nonetheless the effect overall was reduction in viewing of the Canadian stations of some considerable substance.

Senator Everett: You think the policy of limiting that to one commercial channel is not viable?

Mr. Chercover: I cannot say that it is not viable. Let me put it to you this way, sir. You have seen the reaction on the part of the public who were deprived of something they never had, from Calgary and Edmonton and St. John's et cetera. Now tell me what the reaction is going to be when you try to take it right away from the guy who has got it. You will remember the backlash on channel 3.

Senator Everett: Your suggestion is they will have to open up again?

Mr. Chercover: Right now we have Members of Parliament reporting for their constituencies in the border territories, complaining about the loss of service not yet rendered. This is the Calgary-Edmonton situation.

Senator Prowse: You are among friends now.

Mr. Chercover: I know. I understand. You go to the issue in Toronto—I cannot speak for the Toronto Members of Parliament. I know some of them but I cannot speak for them.

When their constituents start to say "What do you mean? I have torn down my antenna and cleaned up and signed up for this service and now I have to put up an antenna again"—they are not going to go without, if it is in the atmosphere.

My circumstance is interesting. It is different because as a professional I have to watch everything that is going on and I watch a great deal when there is a major event of some significance under way.

I may have four television sets, little portable ones, lined up, and I am watching what everybody is doing. I have had a system on my home, because I live in downtown Toronto. I watched the towers rise in St. James Town and I could watch them on my television set because my signal was deteriorating. I had a tower and a master system with a head for each channel, an amplifying system and coaxial cable throughout the house and a rotor for my colour set. I had $1800 on my roof. Now it is not there any more. I took it down two years ago when I signed a cable contract. I gave the pieces to my engineering staff and they put it up on their houses.

That is fine. I am going to have to put it back again if I find there are key programmes I cannot watch when I want to watch them.

Mr. Fortier: That is the key. You will have access to the programmes.

Mr. Chercover: Exactly.

Senator Everett: Not in every case. Dealing with the one policy, the blackout policy, you will; but you won't have control over the time.

Mr. Chercover: That is right.

Senator Everett: If they limit it to one channel, there are certain programmes you won't even get.

Mr. Chercover: It goes even further. If you remember the guidelines there was a suggestion, and I don't disagree with the suggestion. Let me make it very clear, I am trying to point out that my interests, my company's interest, the corporation that I serve, the interests of the broadcasters and the interests of this Act would be best served by this policy.

However, I have heard the phrase expressed, as I am sure you have, the "art of the possible." What can you take away from the people and still make it work? We know that the public response to issues moves the political system. The political system may be forced to say "We are sorry. This policy cannot be implemented."

The other part of the policy dealing with the O'Leary Commission and Section 12A of the Income Tax Act, the suggestion was made in the guidelines they might elect to direct cable operators to delete from their systems, services from an American outlet which sells in Canada. There goes 2, 4 and 7 in Toronto. There goes all Tacoma-Seattle stations and Pembina, North Dakota.

Senator Everett: Is your 55-60 per cent coverage that you foresee when the urban population reaches 80 per cent of the country, is that based on the CRTC guideline?

Mr. Chercover: No. As a matter of fact that is a projection which I think you will find some support for—it is a penetration study both for Canada and the United States. The Americans don't expect CATV to achieve better than 55 per cent coverage ultimately either.

Senator Everett: As I understand it when people go on cable, their tendency to watch American programmes increases. Is that a fact?

Mr. Chercover: That is a factor and can be demonstrated. I have statistical tables to show in the border areas what has transpired over the past few years. I will pull one out and leave it with you, if you like.

The Chairman: We have a number of cable people coming before us for the balance of the week and we would be very interested in having it.

Mr. Chercover: This is a very, very simplified table and Mr. Campbell can do a much more expanded demonstration of this. It is Exhibit 9 to our submission to the CRTC.

Mr. Campbell: Incidentally, it is not just true in the border areas. We don't call London a border market.

Mr. Chercover: Before I leave this, this is the table.

This takes you from 1965 through to 1970 in the Toronto and Vancouver markets showing the audience percentage shares of both Canadian and U.S. television stations. In Toronto, Canadian stations had 55 per cent in 1965 increasing to 69 per cent in 1968. That was the peak. That was the "Battle of Buffalo" that you heard about. When did cable really start to achieve penetration in Toronto? 1968. In 1969 Canadian stations dropped to 67 per cent from 69 per cent. In 1970 they dropped to 59 per cent. When you look at the U.S. percentages they correspond exactly.

When you go to Vancouver, it is even earlier. The Vancouver system is the longest established and has the heaviest penetration of any metropolitan center in North America, not just in Canada.

Senator Macdonald: How do you classify Ottawa? Is that a border area?

Mr. Chercover: It has not been up to now but I can assure you that Mr. Griffiths, who didn't concern himself with pre-release before the establishment of cable, is now demanding pre-release like all the other stations.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Chercover, you were quoted in the Toronto Telegram some months ago as seeing a growing demand from the public for what you call "social orientation programming".

You went on to say: "Most program directors underestimate the capacity of the audience."

Mr. Chercover: Quite right.

Mr. Fortier: You have always heard the classic "they are all 12 years old out there, let's feed them the mindless whatever it is".

Again you continue: "I don't believe that. I can show you graphically the growth in interest in information programming..."

I am sure the members of the Committee would love to see this graph.

Mr. Chercover: I don't have it with me but I will give you some specifics.

1965 was the first year for the National Geographic series, the series which deals with the origins of man, the insect world, the nature of our environment, and it is a good programme series. I don't care where it comes from. In 1965 that programme enjoyed, as a short series of specials, approximately 19 per cent less viewers than the average prime time entertainment programming.

In 1969 those same programmes from that same series—I don't mean identical but the four episodes broadcast from that series in the season 1968-1969—enjoyed 23 per cent advantage, superior to average prime time entertainment programmes.

If that is not a graphic demonstration of growth of audience attention to informational orientation programming, I don't know what is.

I will go further and point out there have been very careful studies made, some by us and some by others, of the audience trends in terms of educational break. One thing which we all know about is the fact that the North American youth are being better educated in greater numbers, greater percentile terms, in terms of entire youth groups, today than ever before. I think America passed the 50 per cent market in terms of university level of education. That is an indication of change basically in the audience.

Mr. Fortier: Is it the audience which has changed or is it the programming producer who is making available better programmes?

Mr. Chercover: I think both.

Senator Prowse: Or is it colour?

Mr. Chercover: No, it is not colour. First of all, there is the fact that most teachers, most educators will acknowledge, and that is that the child brought up in a television household is ahead by substantial degree in terms of general knowledge of his environment and circumstances.

I have had some personal experiences in this area with my own children with their teachers. There is general acknowledgment at the high school level that there is a rather substantial difference between a child who has been brought up with television and a child who has not. They are ahead, they speak better, they can read better, they can do a good many things better, and they have more general knowledge.

Not only that, but now we see more and more of those same grade school and high school levels going on to further education. Higher educational levels are growing in terms of television hours viewed per week. That is in spite of the fact that most people don't want to admit they watch a lot of television. It has always been popular for people who produce plays to say that they read books and don't go to plays; or for producers of motion pictures to say they only go to plays. It is also very popular for all intellectuals to say "I never watch television. There is nothing on it."

The fact is the hours viewed weekly—these Roper studies are done year by year by year and then done in ten-year breaks—on every educational break are in fact rising not falling.

Now the interesting exercise—and I can obtain copies of this for you if it is of interest—is the exercise where this question is put directly to the respondent in a quite scientific sample: "Would you like to see greater variety of choice in your television viewing?" The break-down shows the responses by grade school, high school and university-level education. Obviously the answer in favour of the status quo, at the lowest level of education, is like 79 percent. The answer in favour of massive change is in the higher educational break; 68 per cent want more choice.

I think broadcasters generally, programmers generally, are responding and aware of these things.

Mr. Fortier: Yet how do you account for the fact that the most popular programme in Canada is "The Beverly Hillbillies"?

Mr. Chercover: It is not.

Mr. Fortier: It is the one that has the highest...

Mr. Chercover: It is one of the highest. First of all, sir, everything is not all things to all people; and each programme is not all things to all people.

Mr. Fortier: Are you speaking here now of programmes oriented towards minority groups?

Mr. Chercover: No. I say that the audience is many audiences. Keith, what would the audience delivered on "Beverly Hillbillies" total in Canada?

Mr. Campbell: If you are speaking of the BBM figures, which I think the gentleman is, it would be about 1.7 million.

Mr. Chercover: We have 21 million people 95% of whom have access to television. That is not the audience, a million and a half people.

The Chairman: What is the biggest programme?

Mr. Chercover: I think NHL Hockey is bigger than any of the entertainment programmes.

The Chairman: What is the biggest entertainment programme?

Mr. Chercover: It depends whether you take absolute numbers in the total coverage area covered by the CBC, because they have an 18% or so advantage over us in total homes available; or whether you do a comparative study in the comparative markets.

If you give us a comparative study in comparative markets we can tell you which programmes.

The Chairman: What is your most popular programme?

Mr. Chercover: Dean Martin.

The Chairman: I wonder how many people watch it in round figures?

Mr. Campbell: Again about 1.7 million.

The Chairman: Your point is that around 18.3 million people are not watching. Doesn't that make the point that 18.3 million don't want to watch Dean Martin?

Mr. Chercover: It doesn't make that point.

First of all, statistics on viewers, even so-called addicted viewers who say "That is my favourite programme"—how many times do you think they watch it every year? Amongst those people who are habitual television viewers, who identify a programme as their favourite, the answer is 1 in 3 episodes.

The Chairman: I accept your statistics but I am surprised by it.

Mr. Fortier: You don't think that the average viewing public, a view which has been expressed before this Committee, is looking for the lowest common denominator type of programme?

Mr. Chercover: I don't know how to identify that average audience. A proportion of the people who watch Dean Martin, because he is very entertaining and sometimes a little blue, are also people who move over and watch the "National Geographic" or "W5;" but not all the people who watch Dean Martin watch "W5" and not all the people who watch "W5" watch Dean Martin.

Mr. Fortier: Why is there a trend in Canadian television broadcasting for CTV, for example, to set up a similar type of programme against CBC?

Mr. Chercover: There is not. It is the other way around, if you don't mind.

Mr. Fortier: CBC does it?

Mr. Chercover: I don't know why. Let me put it to you this way...

Mr. Fortier: You know what I mean.

Mr. Chercover: I know what you mean exactly and precisely and let me tell you historically what happened.

"W5" was launched in the season 1966-1967 and CBC had just dumped "Seven Days". In response to questions at the political level, in response to questions from the critics, CBC were undecided on what they were going to do on Sunday night at 10 o'clock.

We stepped in and announced our programme. There was no programme scheduled at 10 o'clock on Sunday night on CBC. We announced "W5" and we launched "W5" and we were on the air for four weeks with it before the CBC announced their programme which was to go on.

Now it was a public affairs programme and they had been in that time period. They could have done anything they wished but they didn't.

After four months on the air and a good deal of bickering and a lot of public response to the fact that critics couldn't watch both and Parliamentarians couldn't watch both and people in the regulatory agencies couldn't watch both, we, CTV, elected to move to 9 o'clock opposite "Bonanza". That was a pretty gutsy decision. It didn't help our position in ratings and didn't help in terms of audience.

We elected in the public interest to provide an alternative against an American programme. Now I am being criticized because "W5" runs against a Canadian entertainment programme at 9 o'clock made by the CBC because they dumped Bonanza out of there three or four years later.

The Chairman: Who had made that criticism?

Mr. Chercover: The CRTC asked that question.

The Chairman: They didn't ask it critically, did they?

Mr. Chercover: I could take it only critically. They asked the question about "Untamed World", which we had in the time period where they had cartoons. Eight weeks after we were on the air they brought in their "Nature of Things", or whatever it was.

Mr. Campbell: To project a note of humour, the CBC was being queried on this very circumstance by the Commission last week and the Commission posed the very same question: why are you running a Canadian programme opposite a Canadian programme so it denudes the opportunity of Canadians to watch Canadian programming?

The CBC response was "Indeed, sometimes these things were accidental."

Incidentally, they do have one valid point. The CBC has access to certain periods of option time. They don't control the totality of their time for all stations affiliated with them. They advised the Commission they were moving. The Commission would be happy to know they were moving a Sunday night 5 o'clock show to Tuesday at 10.30.

I had to remind them at the coffee break they were indeed doing the very same thing, moving against another Canadian show, and they were surprised to find that out.

Mr. Chercover: But if we go on the volume and quantitative proposals that are in front of us, the fact is that options and/or alternatives are going to be more and more restricted.

The Chairman: You commented on the Dean Martin programme and said the programme tends to be blue. You have been in Ottawa so perhaps you didn't see an article in the Toronto Star on Monday. It was based on a study done by a sociologist and said "The new nudity will invade television and school stages next." Do you think that is true?

Mr. Chercover: No, I don't think that is true. I think that the entertainment industry, as such, is an industry that can be related to a pendulum and we are in the pendulum swing.

I think that in theatre and in motion pictures that this is going to swing back, frankly.

The Chairman: You don't think it will swing as far as television?

Mr. Chercover: I think we now may be on the extreme of the swing in terms of literal treatment of sex. There is a tremendous amount of opportunism involved in the volume of this activity at the moment under the guise of dealing frankly. It is just simple opportunism. I have seen many programmes in which there was no artistic merit and no programming merit. It was arbitrarily done for the purpose.

Indeed there are some producers, well known to me in the United States, who are making motion pictures for specific theatrical release but double-shooting the bedroom sequences with clothed sequences that don't destroy the germatic effect in any respect whatsoever. They are doing this in order to be able, against the backswing, to release the films in a more contained environment should it develop in the theatrical environment, or in order to be able to release those same films on television.

The Chairman: That is called "cover your bets" or "uncovering your bets."

Mr. Fortier: We have heard much about the experiment which you carried out at Carleton University with "W5."

Mr. Chercover: Which one?

Mr. Fortier: The one where the producer came to an arrangement with the university whereby "W5" programme had access to the university's facilities and what they were doing.

Mr. Chercover: That proved to be useful.

Mr. Fortier: That did take place?

Mr. Chercover: I don't know why you heard a lot about it. It was a very simple arrangement. The producer in question gave them access to the research, consultation and advice. We didn't have it exclusively with Carleton.

For instance, the Pollution Probe people at the University of Toronto have been very active with our public affairs unit. So active that I had to chastize them for sending threatening letters to a company under the guise of "W5".

Pollution Probe at one point got a little over-enthusiastic with a Peterborough manufacturer and threatened him with an exposure on "W5" if he didn't conform. He had already conformed.

Mr. Fortier: The reason why I said we have heard a great deal about it is that it strikes me this is an area where, as you have said, you are not programming for the minorities but you are programming with the minorities.

Mr. Chercover: For instance, let me give you an example: "The Ottawa River is Dead and Dying" was a single half-hour on television specifics to dramatize industrial and municipal waste dumping in this particular river which is, of course, in bad shape. That was done in concert with the Ecology Department of the University of Toronto. We don't restrict ourselves.

We may have a special arrangement with one university because they wish in a journalism course to emphasize and to integrate with an active functioning journalistic unit because it may be useful. We have done programmes, for instance, with the psychology Department at the University in Alberta.

We did a treatment on an unemployable individual who is being treated by the social service unit in the university there. It was a very important piece, very well done and very well received.

Mr. Fortier: You consider these have been successes, these experiments?

Mr. Chercover: Yes, the relationships are excellent.

Mr. Fortier: And I suppose that it has quite a bit to do with your social orientation programming whereof you were speaking earlier?

Mr. Chercover: Yes. The only problem is we tend to find the academic community has its mind made up. I don't mean that in a critical way.

I remember particularly at the Harrison Hot Springs conference on "Communication in the Seventies" I presented a piece there on the technological changes. There were two things that bothered me. First, Ken Lefolli, for whom I have a great deal of respect, was the moderator, and Ken made a long introduction of the general topic and in effect assigned to the various participants in the panel their corporate viewpoints. When it finally got around to me I said: "I want to take exception. I was asked here by a political party to add my comments on the subject of the future. I didn't come to represent the interests of CTV per se. I came here to enter into a dialogue (and I say that in this brief). I am not concerned with the preservation of the current financing arrangements for CTV, which come from the advertising community, if this political party and the public and the country itself make a decision, a conscious decision, that they want a different system, for good and valid reasons, then bye-bye CTV."

I delivered my paper and it was as clear as a bell that I was not taking a corporate position. The lady from York University, however, who deals in media, and is a very bright lady, Thelma McCormack...

The Chairman: She appeared before the Committee.

Mr. Chercover: ...appeared immediately following me and promptly allocated to me things which I had not said. She didn't even listen. She promptly reviewed the positions that she expected me to take.

Mr. Fortier: It is like when you are prepared to thank a speaker...

Senator Prowse: She wasn't going to let the facts interfere.

Mr. Chercover: Please don't let the facts interfere in any way.

Mr. Fortier: Is there a future for AM radio in Canada in the media spectrum?

Mr. Chercover: Certainly.

Mr. Fortier: Do you think that it is going to develop on a course parallel with television?

Mr. Chercover: First of all, let me state that although I did start my career in radio and had some experience in that area, I don't regard myself as any kind of expert in radio broadcasting. It has changed dramatically in the years since I have left it, and it is a good many years. It is highly specialized and its successful operators are people who talk a language that I don't entirely understand. No criticism intended. I think they are doing very specialized things successfully.

Mr. Fortier: You don't view it as a competitor to television?

Mr. Chercover: In real terms, yes, of course.

Mr. Fortier: Insofar as audience is concerned?

Mr. Chercover: No. I think as print media has adjusted to the realities of television, so too has radio. I think that they are providing a continuous news service, for example, on the hour, on the every half hour in some instances. In many circumstances they are highly oriented to information on a continuous basis; others play good music; there are those that are strictly rock and roll. They are much more precisely orientated to a specific segment of the audience, and I think that is good.

Mr. Fortier: How have the print media adjusted to the advent of television?

Mr. Chercover: I believe the better operators in print have developed a stronger orientation to backgrounding, to depth reporting, to analysis, to features; and successfully so.

As a matter of fact, as a forerunner of what may be something that we will see more of in the future, there was recently launched in the United States—and I don't know whether it is still going, it may not be—I think it is in indicator—a total feature newspaper which had only one news orientated story. The rest was all features.

The Chairman: A daily?

Mr. Chercover: It was a New York launched weekly. It did at least receive some publicity.

Now I have been in many cities in the world and many cities in North America and I think we are particularly fortunate in Toronto in that we have a remarkably competitive situation in the daily press field.

When you look at the Star or the Telegram—particularly those two because they are heavily orientated to features—and compare them to most newspapers in the entire North American continent, in terms of the quality and depth and skill of their undertakings in the entertainment field, and specialized interest areas; or look at the spread of opinion and the opportunity for the expression of opinion in the editorial area, which is now starting to be more significant than ever before; I believe there is an adjustment that has already taken place in part and will continue to a greater degree in the future. I think they are complementary.

Senator Prowse: Didn't radio first create the competition? Newspapers used to pretend there was no such thing as radio and then, by the time they finally got it through their heads that radio was there, T.V. came along and so the second adjustment was much simpler for them.

Mr. Chercover: Yes. I have talked to a number of responsible and well-placed people in the publishing field and I believe that they are conscious of the need to change their orientation. I don't say it is universal conscience but certainly a number I know personally are conscious of it.

Mr. Fortier: How have you been able to work out the obvious difficulty which you must have encountered in seeking to line up programmes for next year in view of the CRTC proposals which are hanging over your head?

Mr. Chercover: I must tell you that we have not and we may be in serious trouble.

There is a long line of history going back to the BBG, before the CRTC. We have been up for license renewal for five years.

The first thing we had to correct was the fact that our license terminated at the end of June and the broadcast year is a seasonal thing that goes from September to September.

We said "The first thing you have to do is put us in line. If you take it away from us in June somebody is going to pick up three or four months of obligation or we are going to fail to meet three or four months of obligations." They did indeed adjust our terminal date to a September date.

We then reviewed with the BBG, and then with the CRTC, our time-table on our license renewal and we suggested to them a November date—and they agreed on a November date. The reason they agreed with it is very simple. In November we are evaluating performance of current programming and in development for the following season. We usually make our selections, both from foreign and from Canadian programmes available, in the period of February and March. We announce our schedule usually at the end of March. We usually begin our process of selling to the advertising community as at the 1st of April and from the 15th of April. Our declaration dates with the major advertising elements in our schedule, have been historically April 1st through April 20th, depending on the time-table and procurement and setting the schedule.

Mr. Campbell can verify this. I will state unequivocally that every 10 days that passes between now and June 15th that we don't have our schedule on the street, will delete half a million to $600,000 from our next year's revenue and it will not be recoverable.

Mr. Fortier: Every week?

Mr. Chercover: Every 10 days, half a million to $600,000. We book fully 75% of our revenue on an annual basis in the period April 15th to June 15th. Lock it in solid. The bulk of the full cycle, the first quarter, the heavy quarter, is concluded in this spring selling period.

Senator Everett: You say that will not be recoverable?

Mr. Chercover: It will not. If an advertiser decides that it is too bad "We can't be sure what the shape of CTV is going to be" the answer is very simple. "We will look at what ever other options there are because we have to have the kind of weight. We may decide in this community, we will go with car cards or bill-boards or direct mail or we may decide to go with print" ...whatever the other medium is.

Mr. Fortier: CBC is in the same fix?

Mr. Chercover: Of course they are.

Senator Everett: Are they really?

Mr. Chercover: Not to the degree we are because they can always fragment their programmes and add more minutes.

Mr. Fortier: The view that was expressed by the CAB to the CRTC on their proposals—your network is a member of the CAB still to this day?

Mr. Chercover: It is only a network member and it is not a full member in the status of a station because it is a station association. We are a supplementary member.

Mr. Fortier: Do you subscribe to the presentation made by the CAB last week?

Mr. Chercover: By and large not in specific terms. For instance, I made a presentation, which is available to you, which covers the points of economic concern.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Chairman, since we have so little time I wonder if Mr. Chercover could file the presentation he made to the CRTC?

Mr. Chercover: If I could keep this one, I have only a single one. I could have copies made.

The Chairman: That is fine.

Mr. Chercover: I said in the brief, in relation to the question that you ask, that we in fact were not able, strangely enough, "to convince talent, producers or distributors to allow us to take options on properties which would then be dropped if the results of the deliberations should dictate. I couldn't get a single performer or producer, in Canada or elsewhere, to say "Yes, you can have this property if the regulations allow and if they don't—send me flowers."

It is interesting too, we couldn't get advertisers to come in on the basis of "We think this programme will probably be in the schedule subject to the determination of the Commission."

Mr. Fortier: But by and large the criticism of the CAB, as I understood it, was directed at the very objectives of the CRTC.

Mr. Chercover: First of all, the CAB brief started out by identifying with the objectives of the Act and arguing with the methods. Now I did exactly the same thing, in all fairness.

Mr. Fortier: But you suggested alternatives?

Mr. Chercover: Yes, I did. I also did not suggest that there was any lack of talent; but talent needs to be mounted with resources, needs to be supported with resources, and resources cost money. Time is one of the key resources and time is not in our favour. If we launch a large new volume, a greater volume of programming, which has no time for development except between now and the fall, with the resources at our disposal, the probability is we will accelerate the retreat to American channels.

Mr. Fortier: Is it merely the time-table that worries you?

Mr. Chercover: It is economics.

Mr. Fortier: Over along period of time, won't the economics become more acceptable in your projections?

Mr. Chercover: No. I pointed out very clearly, and I am happy to go into this, there are certain absolutes. One of the absolutes, that we have to deal with in Canada, is 21 million people. Let us start from that. Let us say we have a micro-wave system which is the longest in the world. We have seven time zones and we deal with time zone delays and delay-centres which cost money, and double rejections which cost money. We have 65 per cent of our viewers who have access to a multiplicity of signals from the border, so it is further fragmented. Of that total of 21 million, 6 million odd are essentially French-speaking, and while many of them are bilingual they clearly prefer, clearly and demonstratively prefer to watch in their native tongue.

You know there are lots of options. If I may be briefly facetious I would say: if Canada had made the choice originally, to go with a different standard and line system from the United States, we would have had an effective electronic curtain. We didn't do that. Were we to decide, to-day, that it was politically within the art of the possible to withdraw our current standard and impose new standards, and impose, for instance, the standards of Great Britain and use a 625 line system on a 50 cycle basis, then all the television sets would be obsolete and all the transmission equipment would be obsolete. Everything would have to be changed but we could make it.

If we went further and said that the official language in Canada, aside from that portion which speaks French, is now Ukrainian—or Italian—and force our people into that mode we could also achieve the goals.

We are not an island nation. The British have a population of 50 million and almost no cost of distribution to deal with; no competitive electronic media, the BBC is not in the commercial business at all; a low cost of distribution; no cable penetration or direct signal penetration because who watches Dutch television? Nobody listens in Flemish or Walloon. Nobody.

The fact of the matter is we are not in that fortunate position. I wish we were. I find myself always in the position of saying "here are the facts". Now it is not popular. I know it would be easy for me to walk into the Commission and open my arms and say "We accept. We believe. It is motherhood and we are with you."

I listened to Mr. Gerussi's impassioned representations respecting his family's immigration to Canada and he delivered it more effectively than he did when it was in the revue in 1965 "All About Us" word for word. It is a beautiful piece of emotional material.

The Chairman: He has been practising!

Mr. Chercover: Absolutely beautiful. My father came to this country as an infant in arms from Russia. I know about that. His father carried him into Winnipeg and they struggled to establish themselves. They sold horses to the pulp and paper industry all across the country. My mother's family immigrated from Austria and I know what struggles they had in Montreal, especially him. They met in Montreal, thank heavens, and I was born in Montreal. I am a committed Canadian and I didn't go away. But I don't ask for accolades for not going away, and I do not chastise those artists who have gone away because that is going to go on whether or not we set up new opportunities or whether or not we extend the volume. The fact of the matter is that it is going to go on. It does everywhere else in the world.

Mr. Fortier: Let us get more basic.

Mr. Chercover: How can you get more basic than this?

Mr. Fortier: And look again to the objectives of the CRTC which you laud and which the CAB also found to be encouraging. Are you saying that it should not be the role of the CRTC to impose these objectives on the broadcasters of Canada?

Mr. Chercover: No. I'm not saying that. I have not said that and I did not say that to them. I said to them that I regretted and I was apprehensive at the lack of any incentive for quality in these regulations. I am fearful of the results that will come from an orientation to quantity as opposed to quality.

Senator Everett: Do you agree with Mr. Griffiths?

Mr. Chercover: I don't know. What does he say?

Senator Everett: I though you would know. "A bid for Canadian quality and Canadian content".

Mr. Chercover: Is that out of this morning's paper?

Senator Everett: This mornings Globe and Mail.

Mr. Chercover: That was a prerelease.

Senator Everett: Do you want it?

Mr. Chercover: No, thank you, I saw it. We suggested, amongst the options, the deferral of the implementation date for the simple reason that we can maintain the viability of the unique Canadian broadcasting system; provide an opportunity for consultation to develop the regulatory structure which will produce results within the capacity of the structure; and perhaps more important, to provide after the establishment of achievable goals, an opportunity for realistic development time for programming. It is so we don't embarrass ourselves with bad programme which will simply make achievement of the ultimate goals less feasible.

Mr. Fortier: By setting back the timetable?

Mr. Chercover: Yes.

We also suggested maintaining the current Commonwealth multilateral agreement. There are a lot of reasons why, one of which is the Secretary of State is negotiating a similar on for the film industry. Why should we be taken out of the television agreement when it enhances the marketability of Canadian film abroad, which is one of our objectives.

Dealing with the classification of time, I accept a 25 per cent increase in prime time Canadian content and I asked for an increase from 40 per cent to 50 per cent maximum. This would be a full increase of 25 per cent. It is not an insignificant suggestion.

We recommended adjusting the commercial regulation proposals to conform with their own stated objective because they want to have imposed...

Senator Everett: Sir, will you go back to that 25 per cent increase?

Mr. Chercover: We have a 40 per cent prime time requirement. I say go to 50 per cent.

I asked them to examine our proposition of continuing the differential in content requirements between the public and private sectors, recognizing the Act does differentiate between the two elements, and places different and specific responsibilities on the public sector. And it does.

Mr. Fortier: What we are arguing about is really 10 per cent.

Mr. Chercover: Their proposal is the same. Their proposal in terms of the regulations is common and doesn't give another year to get there.

Senator Everett: What do you think about Mr. Griffiths...

Mr. Chercover: Let me go further and finish.

Of paramount importance was our urgent recommendation for reconsideration of the entire proposed package of regulations to incorporate incentives for excellence. We acknowledge that the qualitative approach is exceedingly difficult to administer, however, the quality of the overall programme service—and more importantly the quality of the Canadian elements of that service—are the only factors which can further strengthen a national identity, and create a strong base for high standard programme production in Canada.

Then I made some suggestions. I said "Here are some suggested qualitative measurements. It may be difficult, but here they are".

Mr. Fortier: A system of Brownie points?

Mr. Chercover: Firstly, Cost. Exactly how much money are you investing in that programme, Mr. Fortier? Twice as much as that one? Four times as much? It is worth more.

Mr. Fortier: It comes back to the discussion we had two years ago on the CRTC involving itself in programming.

Mr. Chercover: I know the problem but I must point out again, and I will come back to this, that every option that we have taken, that has resulted in a programme that has had significance and has had recognition, was an option which we elected and which was not required under a quantitative rule.

Now we go to the second suggestion: programmes which are designed to orient or inform viewers or stimulate public dialogue with respect to issues of concern to Canadians.

That is not so difficult, is it? At least it isn't to me.

Senator Everett: It might or might not be.

Mr. Chercover: And lastly, programmes which by their intrinsic merit or quality, or as a result of simple salesmanship achieve penetration in foreign markets which contribute to a revenue flow to the Canadian production industry and to the Canadian talent pool.

That is not hard either. At least it isn't to me. These are positive incentives for excellence. The British feature film industry, which it was suggested by representatives of the Commission, was created by tariff walls, one thing and another—No bloody way. First of all, it was created by a massive subsidy programme on the part of the British government; in the first instance by regulations that precluded the viewers from having access to these foreign films unless they came in from proper techniques. 65 per cent of our viewers don't have to ask permission. If the theatre has been closed and there is no feature playing, you don't go to the movies. The theatre is not closing here, I am afraid.

There is another factor, the government and the neophyte or baby industry got together and created an incentive program to convince, in fact to coerce foreign producers, and particularly rich American producers to come to England to produce. In fact they did and the periods of high production for the British film industry are those when Americans are most active there.

To indicate how successful it has all been you only need to go to look at a number of British-based and trained creative people in the arts and crafts of theatrical productions that immigrate to Canada and the United States.

Mr. Fortier: You have a few on your staff?

Mr. Chercover: Yes indeed we have.

Senator Everett: 50 per cent prime time with the Commonwealth rule...

Mr. Chercover: There is another thing. Because there was a mistake which has been hanging over our heads for years relating specifically to the decision that was so widely discussed about the classification of World Series as "Canadian", it effectively wiped out all the other things. For instance, under the new regulations the Apollo Moon Shot would not be considered Canadian.

Senator Everett: It is now under the present regulation?

Mr. Chercover: Of course it is. It is a news event with broad interest for Canadians. Let me give you an example...

Senator Everett: I have heard where they talk about an international programme and a foreign programme.

Mr. Chercover: That idea of a unique or special category which would have no classification Canadian or otherwise, operates against inclusion in your schedule of better programming. It is a bad policy.

A simple exercise is to say if you have a 100 hour schedule and you want to run 5 hours a week contributory program that is usual to the community, your schedule will be measured against 95 hours. All that means is, if you have only access to 50%, you have 50% of 95 instead of 100. To a broadcaster who looks at his public responsibility and sees a programme from a foreign source which could receive this special unique classification, as he does, he must recognize diminishing revenue potential in the commercial or entertainment package. So it is a very bad policy.

I don't know whether you want an example of an interpretation. Under the existing regulations there is a classification for events in which Canadians participate. I will give you one that was turned down and see how you feel about it.

A couple of years ago there was a major convocation of people working in the field of mental retardation (which happens to be one of my interests) in Chicago. It was called The Kennedy Award Dinner. Harry (Red) Foster, who is known to you, Mr. Chairman, and who has been very active in this field in Canada, went to that dinner along with several other Canadians to receive unique awards for the research and work which has been done in Canadian Institutions contributing in this field.

Now I cleared the network—national commercial programming—I wiped it out. I arranged for a feed. There were three Canadian acts in the entertainment segment of that thing. That is irrelevant too, really. Some of the things that happened were extremely moving and important to me.

There was a break-through some years ago in this field. There was a marvellous old couple who were researchers in this field in the late 20's and 30's and who were drummed out of the university for their incredible experiment in which they applied love. Terrible things. They adopted three of the retarded children under their care in the laboratory and one of those children is now a Fellow in psychiatric medicine at the same institution. He was called on to come forward. His I.Q., which was something under 30 when they adopted him as a baby, was over 148.

Now can you imagine—First of all, you know there are hundreds and thousands of families in this country who have been afflicted by this terrible, terrible tragedy. Now the hope and faith that must have come through to those people when they saw this young man with the courage to come forward and say "I was", and out of the wings came this marvellous old couple who had literally given up their lives, their positions, in the faith that this technique could contribute. And indeed it has now been accepted and proven to be an effective method even if it only helps slightly. You are not going to achieve what they achieved in that one circumstance but that child was recoverable completely. Other children are now being delegated to a life as vegetables, in institutions, who might be recoverable to the point of living a happy and productive life.

Now if for no other reason than the content of the program I would judge that to be "Canadian", under "matters of broad general interest to Canadians", and also, because two Canadian research organizations were there to receive International Awards, under the clause which says "events in which Canadians participate" it should have been "Canadian". The fact of the matter is we acted. We cleared the time. We presented it across the country and we received an enormous response. I still receive letters from the public on the program. The then programme officer of the CRTC said it was not "Canadian".

Mr. Fortier: Did you get authority from your Board...

Mr. Chercover: No, I didn't.

Mr. Fortier: Before wiping out other programmes?

Mr. Chercover: No.

Mr. Fortier: I am reminded here of the statement which was attributed to Charles Templeton and was reproduced in the Star last September. You probably know whereof I speak.

"Murray has guts. I have seen him lay out a lot of dollars without any authority whatsoever, knowing it had to be done and done now."

Did that happen very often?

Mr. Chercover: Yes, all the time.

Mr. Fortier: Any instance where the Board has said: "Chercover, you should not have done it and rake you over the coals?"

Mr. Chercover: No. As a matter of fact there have been many discussions at the Board level on the technique that is utilized in the active decision-making process. By and large I would say our Board supported the view that as long as I have the name, I have to have the game.

Mr. Fortier: That is the way you have proceeded?

Mr. Chercover: I proceeded before they said.

Mr. Fortier: Do you have any trouble with any one of the Board members more than with others, without wishing to intrude into the secrets of the Board Room?

Mr. Chercover: I would say very simply that the best people are always the most difficult. The more committed they are to whatever their point of view, the more difficult they are always to deal with if you are dealing in an area of controversy or an area of value judgment. I would not say that I have trouble with the Board in that respect. I have had significant and remarkable co-operation and assistance throughout the history.

When this operation was undertaken, when we undertook to buy the network, I made application in part on behalf of the ITO. And as I was doing it, since I was operating ITO, I recognized, that if we were successful and achieved the purchase of the network and I did not go with it, that my national role would be coming to an end. I had served as Programme Chairman for the network for the previous 5 years and I had served independently of the network, in effect out of my hip pocket, as a programming and operational officer of ITO, because when the network failed to meet its early obligations on the Canadian programs, we began to handle them ourselves co-operatively. I faced that possibility. Unfortunately they decided to ask me to come down and run it.

I have no complaints. It is not an easy life, by any means, operating a co-operative where many different points of view are valid and useful and contributed, because you must make adjustments, you must consult.

The Chairman: I am smiling when you say "valid and useful". Some must also be terribly annoying.

Mr. Chercover: I feel that people who want to be free of any kind of obligation are sometimes annoying. I don't say I have not been under pressure, but nothing worth doing is that simple or that easy. As a matter of fact the greater the challenge the greater sense of accomplishment if you do something.

The Chairman: I have been particularly grateful to Senator Bourque, who has been very patient with me as Chairman. He indicated sometime ago that he wanted to ask a question. I apologize to him.

Senator Bourque: I had two questions. My wife and I, when I am at home, always listen every night to "Pulse" at 6 o'clock and CTV again at 11 o'clock. Sometimes the announcer will be from Ottawa or somewhere else and he will be announcing something and just in the middle of that it is changed and on comes an ad.

Mr. Chercover: Are you speaking of "Pulse" or are you speaking of the "CTV National News"? The "CTV National News" is never cut in that way. There were cut-ins in Montreal, alternative commercials. Normally, the stations start the news with the introduction to the format. It simply says "CTV News with Harvey Kirk". We do a commercial. We follow that with the body of the news. Usually after the closing remarks of the news, the presenter says "I will be back in a minute with the Newsmaker to watch or the editorial comment." Then we have a commercial. Then he does the editorial comments.

Senator Bourque: Last week I was not home but my wife says your Ottawa correspondent started speaking about the Prime Minister and he showed the house where he had been born—just a stones throw from my home—and all of a sudden—bang...

Senator Prowse: Damn Tory!

Senator Bourque: And immediately, you see, an ad came on and he didn't come on again.

Mr. Chercover: I am surprised at that, sir, the only possible answer I can give you—I have never seen it happen in Toronto and I watch the news every night—the only possible answer I can give you is that we ordered a cut-in. When an advertiser has a different product in a different territory, he may order a substitution for the national commercial in that region. Apparently a timing error resulted in a cut of that kind.

Senator Bourque: I was wondering what happened because the Ottawa correspondent was cut out right away.

Now on Page 6 of your brief there is a thing that has been puzzling me.

"Over the past four years the average direct cost per Prime Time hour for our Canadian program service has increased by 85.5 per cent, while non-Canadian programming increased by only 7.5 per cent."

There is such a tremendous increase there, that I have not been able to reconcile the figures.

Mr. Chercover: Well, sir, I will tell you what the reason is. In part, of course, it has to do with the change, in the last three years, to complete colour, which we undertook in 1966, but a very small proportion; we were fully colour in 1966 when the BBG first allowed it.

The primary reason is as a result of our elective decision to invest more and more funds in the programs which we were doing on a qualitative basis. In other words, when we took over the network the national news budget was less than half of what it is now. We have improved the national news, I think you would agree if you are a regular watcher, over the past three or four years. Well, that costs money.

We have now services from all across Canada through the assistance of our affiliates and we pay them for their assistance to the national news; whereas the news was formerly an international film service and an Ottawa bureau.

Senator Bourque: It seemed to me it was a tremendous increase.

Mr. Chercover: It is nothing compared to the proposals that we are facing now. But we have an orientation to enhance and improve the quality of our programs, which has resulted in the viewer identity that we have achieved. For example, before we took over the network, there were three or four quiz shows in prime time. I would assure you that all of the cost of quiz shows, and more, go into the making up of one single episode of "Pig 'N Whistle".

We have been holding the line against foreign producers simply because the market here is a buyer's market. Under the existing regulations, which allow 45 per cent foreign content, the total consumption of the CBC and ourselves could only be 90 per cent of the output in one American network, which means there is more than three times the foreign product that we can both possibly consume, which means we can buy it at the market price which is appropriate.

Senator Bourque: I see.

Mr. Chercover: That is why we can control the cost of foreign programming but if we want quality in Canadian programming, aside from talent, which we acknowledge is there, and aside from the desire, which is clearly there, you have to invest some money.

"Pig 'N Whistle" is a Canadian program which competes very favourably with American programming. It only does so as a result of investment. We bring talent to the program. We spend time in the studio to mount it. We choreograph the dancers and we deal with the audience. It costs us money. It is not just a simple matter of instinct or inspiration.

Senator Bourque: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Are there any questions that any of you have? I don't want to terminate the discussion if there are. Mr. Fortier, do you have any others.

Mr. Fortier: Not at this time.

The Chairman: With the forbearance of the Committee, I have a couple of questions I would like to ask. I say to both the witnesses and the Senators I will be very brief.

You make the point in the brief, and you made the point in your oral presentation, about extending the recommendation of the O'Leary Report, 12A into broadcasting. Would that really have the desired impact? Would not many of the national advertisers simply book those stations? So many of our national corporations are American, would they not simply book through the American stations?

Mr. Chercover: They may. I suspect you will find—you are quite aware of this—brand allocations in competition. If you are talking about major soap companies, the brand people in the United States are not likely to stand still for allocations for the Canadian penetration without getting that money charged against the Canadian corporation. So I do think there can be some advantages. It may be more limited but I think at least it provides impetus.

Senator Prowse: It is worth looking at.

Mr. Chercover: It is worth looking at.

The Chairman: There are charges repeatedly made that CFTO dominates the CTV network. How would you answer those charges? I'm sure you have heard them.

Mr. Chercover: Many times. Nonsense. Absolute nonsense.

The Chairman: CFTO said the same thing this morning.

Mr. Chercover: Well, I am not surprised. John Bassett and I have been associated for a great many years. I first went to work for him at CFTO before the ground was broken on the station. I left CBC to go there. From the outset of our relationship we have fought on occasion, we have disagreed on occasion.

Chairman: I have an article here which says that you have even won some arguments with him.

Mr. Chercover: Indeed I have. I find him one of the most stimulating people in the industry, very strong in his views. He is also very amenable to the other point of view. I have been in consultation with him many times, not so much with respect to the network but in general. He said "Oh, you don't agree with that? Tell me why." He listens and says "Okay. Do it your way." No arguments at all but an individual with the leadership qualities and the stature of John will lead other people in. For instance, a Board environment is not a domination by any means. It certainly is not domination on the networks operation in any respect.

The Chairman: Did you agree with his decision to leave CAB?

Mr. Chercover: I was not consulted.

The Chairman: Do you agree with the decision?

Mr. Chercover: Let me say that...

The Chairman: No one was consulted, so Eddy Goodman told us this morning.

Mr. Chercover: Did Eddy Goodman agree, may I ask?

The Chairman: He said it was a decision which John took. I think he said he agreed.

Senator Prowse: Yes, he agreed.

Mr. Fortier: It was a lawyer's answer!

Mr. Chercover: Since I am not a lawyer I guess I cannot escape—or can I?

The Chairman: I don't want to embarrass you. It is not a question of escaping. I am just wondering, it seems to me two of your most significant members have resigned from CAB and this must give you pause for thought.

Mr. Chercover: There are 10 who have not.

Senator Everett: It seems to me the witness should be given an out on a hypothetical question if he wants to take it.

Mr. Chercover: I haven't spoken to John since his resignation.

The Chairman: I don't think I am forcing the witness to make an answer, Senator Everett.

Senator Prowse: Why don't you tell him what the man said this morning. Mr. Goodman said that they objected to the way in which the presentation was made. Is that right?

The Chairman: I am sure you understand.

Senator Prowse: Not necessarily the content.

Mr. Chercover: There were some other factors with respect to the constitutionality of the position of the Commission, which was a surprise to me.

The Chairman: I was interested in your view points, your comments.

Mr. Chercover: I will be very frank. If my decision were ultimately, and I cannot say that it will be or won't be, were to resign, I would certainly not, at this point, intend to do it while the hearings are still under way. I don't think it is productive.

The Chairman: Let me ask you a question which will perhaps be productive. It is the last question I will put to you. It is one that you can answer in five minutes or it is one that you can answer in one word. What do you think is wrong with the CTV?

Mr. Chercover: I certainly can't answer in one word because it is not "nothing".

The Chairman: What do you think is wrong with CTV?

Mr. Chercover: I think CTV is the captive of its environment and all of the policies which apply or impinge upon its operation.

I would obviously like to see CTV with more resources or programming, because that is what it is all about. Our resources are limited both by policies of the Department of Communication which imposes in the extension of services, hardships in relation to the common carriers. There are the implications of these regulations, which I add again—the quantitative regulations currently in existence were not responsible for the useful and productive decisions taken by the CTV network and its affiliates in the last four years. I don't believe these new regulations will be productive of the goals that are enunciated by the Act and the goals we have all embraced.

I feel that CTV is constrained in terms of its potential capacity by the implications of proliferating cable systems. It is outside our area of control.

I think that the only thing that I can identify with as a goal with respect to CTV, aside from the mechanical extension of our service, is the enhancement of our service, improvement of the kind of service and quality of service which we provide to our viewers. If you want more qualified journalists to work harder in investigative reporting, you have to have money to buy them. You need greater investment in financial terms to invest in international ventures which are speculative in nature but which will enable you ultimately to mount programming from a Canadian base and expose Canadian talent internationally, which incidentally they want as much as they want anything else.

Part of the brief to the Commission dealt with the communications I have had with the Minister for Immigration and he says in his letter to me, when I expressed concern to him about one of the stories I read in the newspaper, he says "Many Canadian performer organizations have made representations to me. Almost all of them are in favour of a two-way open border for performers.

"Their reasons are quite similar to yours and I find myself in substantial agreement with these arguments. They argue, for example, they stand no chance of becoming internationally established main performers unless they can penetrate the international market either through direct access to the United States or through participation in Canadian production designed to penetrate the international market."

Hurray! Now all of these things are possible and CTV, I believe, has the capacity to stimulate, to initiate, to create programs capable of penetrating the international market, providing we can finance them.

The Chairman: Thank you. One of the things which interests this committee particularly, as I said in my opening remarks, is exactly the position in which CTV fits into the overall media spectrum.

As I have said many times, in proposing the idea of this Committee, it has been conceived originally as a study of the print media. We soon discovered that print does not live in a vacuum and, certainly, there is an inter-connection and relation between the media which is so consistent that we had to get into the electronic media, as we have. We have known all along that CTV has a firm place in the media spectrum. The answers you have given today have been helpful, not only in determining the position in the spectrum, but in giving us the benefit of your thinking on a wide variety of topics.

I won't repeat all the things that I said in my opening remarks, particularly those which related to the busy time you are having.

I should say to the Senators that Mr. Chercover handed me a note "As soon as the rush is over I am going to have a nervous breakdown. I worked for it. I owe it to myself and nobody is going to deprive me of it."

Good luck with your nervous breakdown. Thank you very much for coming. Thank you Keith.

When you read the transcript you will find there were several references to things that you were going to send us.

May I say to the Senators that the schedule for tomorrow has one change which I think may not grieve you greatly, if I can find a copy of it.

Mr. Chercover: While you are looking, if I may be allowed a comment in closing, I think you probably noticed that I have not been reticent about coming forward and being very frank. It is at the same time proper for me to say it was a great honour to be called and we were delighted to be able to come.

The Chairman: Thank you. The agenda for tomorrow at 10.00 a.m. is Télé-Métropole Corporation, that is CFTM Television in Montreal; at 11.30 a.m.—Television St-Maurice, Inc., CKTM-TV, Three Rivers, Quebec; at 2.30 p.m. The Canadian Cable Television Association, at four o'clock tomorrow afternoon the Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited. I think those things are as listed.

The session tomorrow night with British Columbia Television Broadcasting System Limited, has been cancelled. The British Columbia Broadcasting System is prepared to come here in May. However, as our hearings are ending in April, I agreed with Mr. Peters, on the telephone at the noonhour break, that we would be satisfied with a written brief which we will be receiving and which will be circulated to the Senators in the normal way for your interest and consideration.

There will, therefore, be no meeting tomorrow evening.

Thank you.

THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON MASS MEDIA

EVIDENCE

Ottawa, Wednesday, April 22, 1970.

The Special Senate Committee on Mass Media met this day at 10 a.m.

Senator Keith Davey (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call the session to order, please.

We are receiving two briefs this morning, the first is from Télé-Métropole Corporation, CFTM Television in Montreal. On my immediate right is Monsieur Roland Giguère, President and Director General of CFTM Television.

On my immediate left is Mr. Gaston Bélanger, who is Vice-President in charge of Sales and Promotion.

Mr. Giguère, we have a procedure here which is reasonably simple. The brief, which you sent us in compliance with our request, has been received and studied by the Senators. I would like you now to take a few minutes, ten, twelve or fifteen minutes, as you may wish, to comment on your brief, to expand it or to explain it or to say anything else which may be on your mind. Certainly it is not necessary to use all that time, but you may use any part of it or use all of it.

Then following that, we will turn to the questioning by the members of the Committee and they will question you on the contents of your brief. We will question you on other matters and by all means if you wish to have Mr. Bélanger answer any questions, you need only indicate to him.

We are delighted to have you here. Thank you for coming and welcome.

Mr. Roland Giguère, Director General—Tele-Metropole Corporation (CFTM)—TV Montreal: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If you do not mind I would like in fact to read the brief. It is not a very long brief and then I would be more than pleased to go through a period of questions and answers.

With your kind permission I would like to deliver our brief in French.

The Chairman: We are quite prepared if you will.

Mr. Giguère: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

We thank you for this opportunity to submit certain opinions regarding Canadian broadcasting.

Before defining our viewpoint in relation to different aspects of television and prior to answering your questions, we consider it useful to describe the nature of our operation as well as its motivation. Based on this knowledge, you will be able to assess the judgements we put forward in this brief.

From the moment it began operations in February 1961, Channel 10 was faced with the problems of providing programs for its schedule.

Unlike English-speaking private stations in Canada, which could resort to an incalculable number of American productions to complete their programming, Channel 10, from the very start, had to envisage the establishment of the technical facilities required to produce a major proportion of its programming as the station was launched.

Two other reasons, as valid as the first, also demanded our attention: first, the precise commitment we made before the Board of Broadcast Governors to contribute actively to the development of artistic life in the Montreal region and in French-Canada; second, the fundamental taste of our French-speaking audience which renders it more receptive and more sympathetic towards productions mirroring its milieu.

Our programming philosophy affirmed itself rapidly by conquering a vast audience which has continued to grow since that first year. As an outgrowth of this, national and local sponsors quickly became interested in our product and the conjunction of this impressive audience with a remarkable goodwill became the key to our success.

An original staff of 190 persons grew to 285 persons in three years and, with the advent of color television in 1966, to 500 permanent employees, including the personnel of our two subsidiaries, Paul L'Anglais Inc., a sales company, and JPL Productions, a commercial production company.

So as to meet with the growing requirements of our audience, it also was necessary to double the number of hours of programming to arrive at a figure of 18 hours daily, that is, an average of 125 hours each week.

You can appreciate without difficulty the need to double the number of studios and services required to cope with an evolution which was so rapid, dynamic and interesting.

You also can evaluate immediately the mammoth task of producing in color each week in our studios sixty-two hours of varied programming.

The advent of color created serious problems, both from the viewpoint of production as well as that of profit. An expenditure of three million dollars made it possible for us to transform our monochromatic installations to a color production system without delay.

In September 1970, we will proceed in connection with the last phase of this program at an additional cost of one million dollars. It should be noted in passing that the slow sale of color receivers, delayed marketing and the high prices set by manufacturers did not contribute to any additional revenue for our station.

Solely the spectacular increase in our ratings over the years justified the raising of our tariffs to justify our investments, thus improving our revenue picture and making it possible for us to meet our new responsibilities. In any event, a booming economy benefited both advertisers and producers.

Obviously, this entire pattern was shaped within the framework of commitments made at the issuance of our license to operate as well as within a rigid observance of BBG and CRTC regulations. Generally speaking, we believe the regulations we must follow are equitable and that they allow satisfactory television for the public.

Undoubtedly, we accidentally straddled at times but we can state that we have progressed without particular difficulties in regard to these regulations. As noted earlier, the question of Canadian content never was a problem for Channel 10.

However, the Canadian Radio and Television Commission recently presented a White Paper regarding new regulations governing the percentage of Canadian content and commercial control and it appears in order for us to include here the observations and amendments which we have proposed.

In the demographic situation which concerns us, we are in agreement, generally speaking, with the measures aimed at assuring more authentically Canadian and reasonably commercialized television. It appears clear to us that the search for and discovery of a Canadian identity constitutes an objective of major importance for the survival, the definition and progress of our culture.

Among the means placed at the disposal of society towards this end, radio and television are undoubtedly the most direct and the most effective. They are not the only ones. And if one is to envisage a serious, long-term effort, it is imperative that the other media involved in the cultural life of our country, such as the printed word and the cinéma, also become positive factors.

We certainly cannot refrain from commenting today on the fact that for the past nine years, we have dedicated ourselves constantly to the purpose of reflecting our audience in its reality and in its aspirations. In addition to meeting the needs and exigencies of a second French-language service in the Montreal region and in the Province of Quebec, we simultaneously have stimulated a movement whose effects have been felt in every sector of artistic activity, especially in the recording industry.

Despite this orientation, which involves serious risks because of the major investments required for the production of our programs, the development of talent and the costs of fixed assets necessitated by technical requirements, we have experienced satisfactory financial progress during the decade.

It is beyond argument that it is simpler and less costly to receive or to purchase programs already produced. As a result of this, the owner or owners of a station may, generally speaking, expect a higher return through use of these programs.

It is thus true to say that the margin of security would diminish considerably for a television station or network if the CRTC's proposals were applied integrally. And this is a point which should be emphasized since an overly reduced margin could compromise the financial balance of the station. This threat to operational stability would bring about a reduction in the quality of services. Any possible or eventual fragmentation of advertising revenue in the field of television therefore must be a matter of general concern in the future.

It should suffice to mention the avowed commercial aspirations of community antennae to cast doubt immediately on the future profitability of television stations.

Confident of the economic growth of our country and without wishing to raise undue alarm, we believe it our duty, however, to underline the fragility and vulnerability of our industry in the face of these new regulations. While sympathizing with the problems experienced by the industry generally, for Channel 10 the new regulations signify the following:

The season September 1970 to September 1971, subjected to the regulations suggested by the Commission relative to Canadian content, would be launched without difficulty since our hourly schedule even now slightly exceeds the required 50 percent. However, in September 1971, we would have to add about seven hours of live programming between 8 a.m. and 6.30 p.m., and three hours and thirty minutes between 6.30 p.m. and 11.30 p.m. A preliminary estimate indicates an additional expenditure of $1,050,000.00 annually.

To do this, we would have to put a halt to our program of technical installation for color telecasting and invest major amounts in the preparation of new programs. Taking for granted that there will be certain changes in regulations, we already have initiated the necessary steps because the corrective measures to which I refer require a good deal of time for the creation of programs, for the purchase, delivery and installation of electronic equipment.

As I mentioned earlier, we benefit at the present time from an advantageous situation by virtue of our past involvement in the production field. We operate a well-organized production centre, with a competent and dedicated staff, and we are ready to take up this new challenge. However, we believe it would be in order for the Commission to modify its new directives slightly.

We are of the opinion that the Commission should study the possibility of reducing Canadian content of programs from 60 percent to 55 percent for September 1971 and to accord us a subsequent period of 12 to 24 months before demanding full implementation of the new regulations.

This slowdown would allow a more harmonious adaptation on our part as well as a more rational evaluation of long-term projects which could be produced. The considerable financial efforts required of our industry should not be minimized. In our case, what formerly could be considered a normal operational profit margin would drop to a questionable level of protection in the two years following the year 1970-71. Here we open a parenthesis regarding our competitor.

While the private station must create an audience for itself through acceptable services which are paid for entirely by advertising sponsorship, the state station draws largely from the taxes paid by all taxpayers and overestimates its revenues by splitting up its budgets for advertising sponsorships through solicitation of advertisers. This is equivalent to subsidizing advertising.

To achieve the new proposed objectives, it appears to us more essential than ever to insist that the French network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation adopt a commercial policy compatible with normal competition, i.e., that a stop be put to the subsidization of programs and networks for the benefit of national and local clients and that the time rate of stations controlled by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation be compatible with nationally-recognized criteria. I would go so far as to say that the implementation of our expansion program is related to this process of uniformity.

Few or no broadcasters or networks have the means to cope with annual deficits of one or two millions for one or more years. You can understand readily that with an annual investment of ten and a half million dollars in our programs, the losses which I cite are within the realm of possibility. Despite constant attention to control of our costs, a rising fluctuation in our expenditures is inevitable. Increases in fees paid to artists and musicians, as well as statutory raises budgeted for a staff of nearly 500 permanent employees, are other costs which we must absorb.

It should not be forgotten that 58 percent of the 6,092 annual hours of live telecasting by Channel 10 in 1968-69 required the services of 1,977 Canadian artist-participants to whom total fees of $1,895,000 were paid. This year, 1969-70, these fees will top $2,100,000. The figures do not include the producers, announcers, decorators, graphic artists and technicians in the permanent employ of Télé-Métropole. The commercials produced in our studios by JPL Productions Inc., one of our subsidiaries, are executed by Canadian participants exclusively and this company pays annually the sum of $120,000 in fees.

You can conclude quickly that the continued immobility of the CBC's commercial rates, in regard to the sale of time as well as in regard to production, would be but an additional contribution to possible asphyxiation.

If I reiterate this aspect of the problem, it is because for Channel 10, under the circumstances, it is of vital importance. The CBC often outbids us for the stars we have developed. In such cases, we fulfill the rôle that the state corporation should carry out. However, we refuse to grant to the CBC the privilege of reselling the programs produced with these artists by subsidizing them in regard to our clients; this is an intolerable situation which definitely would compromise the eventual orientation of Canadian broadcasting.

One of the reasons for my presence today is to protest vigorously against this system which can no longer continue. Channel 10, which commits itself each year with an operations budget of many millions of dollars, cannot depend on the goodwill of the commercial director of CBC.

The pursuit of this policy surely will compromise in future the normal progress of the second French-language system in Quebec.

In nine years, we have had to double our sales rates to protect our enterprise. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, on the other hand, has budged only slightly, if at all, in its advertising rate schedule. Apply, for a moment, this sort of competition to our country's airlines. How long could Canadian Pacific resist the assaults of Air Canada if the latter, strengthened by federal subsidies, cut its fares in half?

How many Canadian newspapers could stand up to publications sponsored by the federal government, produced at high cost with the best journalists of private industry, and selling its advertising at a rate and the newspaper itself at half the price of its nearest competitor?

These examples are as plain as a pikestaff and demonstrate graphically the CBC's unfair position in the commercial field. We believe this situation must change if a truly Canadian television industry is to survive.

A final word in connection with Canadian content. For the past two years, we have exerted certain pressures on American producers so that French dubbing of their programs be carried out in Canada. Among the reasons given is the fact that these programs would be accorded a Canadian content percentage.

We have asked the Commission to recognize that a part, minimal though it might be, of the Canadian percentage required be allotted in this form. For our part, we have paid in the Montreal region, in the past two years, some three hundred thousand dollars to artists in dubbing fees. I am convinced that this is an aspect of artistic activity which should be taken into consideration.

It is clear that the position of the purchaser is weakened and his argument becomes less valid in favor of dubbing in Montreal rather than in Paris if the Canadian status of the program vanishes completely. By the same token, I would recommend that the French dubbing of feature films benefit from the same amendment to the proposed directives. We have not become involved in this aspect of dubbing but we believe it would be possible to create a certain amount of work in this area.

Finally, commercial policy: We have noted the absence of any special commercial consideration for the total sponsorship of programs. Though total sponsorship of programs has dropped considerably in the past five years, Channel 10 still carries an important number. Application of the proposed regulations would signify the end of sponsorship of programs of 15 and 30 minutes and one hour.

You will appreciate that it would be difficult for us to require a one-product sponsor to link the four commercial messages allowed him in a half-hour and the two minutes of a 15-minute program. This point is most important because it involves the very philosophy of program production.

We always have promoted the sale of programs energetically because the sponsor, seeking a higher level of identification in a given market, is prepared to pay a certain premium. Since we began operations, we have sought program sponsors specifically to help us sustain our operational expenses which always have been very high.

Without having succeeded completely, we have retained a certain number of program sponsors and co-sponsors. It would be onerous for us if these sponsors—clients not only of Channel 10 but usually also of our associated stations—were to turn to the policy of purchasing spots. We have asked that an exception be made for sponsored programs and that, in the event of total sponsorship, the four commercial messages be considered as two breaks only.

To recapitulate our brief observations on the regulations suggested by the CRTC even as we reiterate our support for the objectives proposed, we make the following recommendations:

1. Extension of the period required to attain the level of 60 percent Canadian content.
2. Recognition of partial Canadian percentage for programs and feature films dubbed in French in Canada.
3. Special category for sponsored programs.
4. A review of policy governing the number of breaks in so-called spot carrier programs.
5. For us, any increase in Canadian content must be related directly to an evaluation of the CBC's commercial policy.

All these remarks are inspired by two factors:

1. Our desire to fulfill adequately the important rôle of a broadcaster and to accept fully the responsibilities which it implies;
2. The need for a private station to gain sufficient advertising revenue to carry out this function in every way.

We have endeavored in the first part of this brief to show you a profile of what we are, to describe what we wish to become in future and the conditions which are essential if we are to succeed.

The Chairman: Well, now, I am going to suggest I do not think it is necessary for you to read the balance of the brief.

Mr. Giguère: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Because up until there I think you have been talking substantially about CFTM and I think it was good to read that to the Committee. The balance of the brief certainly some of us have read and I know I have some questions on the balance of the brief anyway.

I do not think it is necessary for you to read it. I think with respect I prefer to turn to the questioning because, as you know, we have a second brief this morning. I have some questions I would like to ask you.

The questioning will begin in a moment with Mr. Fortier. His questions will be in French, but certainly the questions I have for you will be in English. The other Senators may speak either French or English, but whichever language we speak to you in, by all means you answer in French.

Mr. Giguère: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Giguère, there is one French network in Canada, is there not—the CBC network? CFTM in Montreal is the largest television station in Canada. I notice on page 15, of your brief, that you speak of your “associated stations”, and that you also talk of the possibility of establishing a second French service in Quebec.

Can you tell us, to begin with, in what respect and in what way you are associated with other French stations—other private stations in Quebec; and, secondly, whether you are considering establishing a second French service in Canada in the near future?

Mr. Giguère: In answer to the first part of your question, in Quebec City and in the Chicoutimi area, there are two television stations (one owned by the CBC and one affiliated with the CBC), and two independent stations. With the Quebec City station, we have...

Mr. Fortier: CFCM in Quebec City and CJPM in Chicoutimi.

Mr. Giguère: That's right. We are associated to some extent with these stations on a programme-supply basis. What binds us together at the present time—or what, if you wish, constitutes the link—is the fact that these programmes which we produce, are broadcast on the channels used by these stations and are sold by one particular company. It is therefore a commercial bond which currently links us with these two stations.

Mr. Fortier: Which company sells the programmes?

Mr. Giguère: There is no outside company, Télé-Métropole sells the programmes.

Mr. Fortier: Then it is your company?

Mr. Giguère: That is so. To answer the first part of your question, the reason we do not speaking of affiliates is because we are associates. There is no third company, no third party control, if you like. There is a measure of association among the three stations.

Mr. Fortier: Is it only at the programme level, or does it extend to the advertising level as well?

Mr. Giguère: At the programme and advertising levels. Concerning the second part of your question—we announced, in June last year, that it was our intention to become a network before the end of the year—that is, we shall ask the Commission for permission to operate using the microwave transmission facilities for a certain number of hours each week. When that time comes, we shall officially form ourselves into a network. I would point out to you that the second French service in the province does exist—but it exists unofficially.

Mr. Fortier: Unofficially. Have you made a formal application to the CRTC?

Mr. Giguère: We propose to do so before the end of the year.

Mr. Fortier: Would this application today take in only the other two stations of CFCM and CJPM, or would you possibly want to include more stations?

Mr. Giguère: Let's say that the first part of our project would include those two stations. May we also say that if we are to provide a second complete service, then, clearly, we should have to think about bringing other stations in the Province of Quebec into the association. When that happens, they will have to ask to be released from their affiliation with the Government-owned network in order to join the second service.

Mr. Fortier: Right. Is it the Chicoutimi station or the Quebec station that is affiliated with the CBC?

Mr. Giguère: Neither the Quebec station of CFCM nor CJPM is affiliated with the CBC. They are independent stations.

Mr. Fortier: So they are independent. Firstly, a rather nasty question, but I am going to ask it just the same—is it to make more money or to compete more effectively with the CBC that you want to double your size by forming a network?

Mr. Giguère: May we say first that the main point of the exercise is not to make money because—and we have stated so publicly—the establishing of a second broadcasting system using microwave facilities will not be a source of revenue. The ideal attitude which is the one we have at the present time is to try to offer a better service.

Mr. Fortier: For the viewers?

Mr. Giguère: Exactly!

Mr. Fortier: I suppose, too, that it is to provide competition for the CBC because there is strength in unity?

Mr. Giguère: We already compete with the CBC as is clearly indicated in the brief. When we talk, if you like, about the commercial aspect, and if you are talking about our competition—and I am not speaking merely for myself not just on my own behalf, let's say, but I am speaking for our associates at the same time—I am expressing an opinion that is held quite commonly in that respect.

Mr. Fortier: Will this second service, this second French broadcasting network, also benefit non-Quebeckers some day?

Mr. Giguère: It is quite possible because, there are large groups of French-speaking people outside Quebec, and it will be a part of our long-range plans to associate with those groups in some form or other. You know that the ways and means are infinitely varied, but anyhow, we intend to provide a second French service. May we mention, for example, the part of Ontario adjoining Quebec where there are large groups of French people...

Mr. Fortier: New Brunswick too?

Mr. Giguère: Yes. New Brunswick too.

Mr. Fortier: That forms part, as you say, of your long-range plans?

Mr. Giguère: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: I see that in your brief you are continually referring to the CBC competition and I get the distinct impression that, where you are concerned, this competition is—I was going to say "unfair" but that is not the right term. Is it competition that is harmful to you? Is that what you are asserting?

Mr. Giguère: You know, we are wholly in agreement with the principle that the CBC remain in commercial competition. We do agree with that principle.

Mr. Fortier: Are you not of the opinion that the CBC ought to be barred from commercial competition?

Mr. Giguère: Not at all. We believe that it is necessary to have competitors at the commercial level in all the markets in the Province of Quebec and, if you wish, to carry it further, we might say markets throughout Canada. What we do not agree with, though, is that the CBC should subsidize the sponsors. That is what is happening.

[Text]

The Chairman: May I just ask at this point a question which is interesting to me. I do not know the answer to it. Perhaps you do not know either but is the CBC more commercial in French on its French network than it is on the English network? Do you know off hand.

Mr. Giguère: Off hand I would say it is more commercial.

The Chairman: Is it about the same?

Mr. Giguère: It is about the same. I would say that, generally, the criteria or the basis of the commercial aspect of the activities would be the same.

The Chairman: I take your point. I just wondered if it was more commercial.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortier: If your representations are received favourably and the CBC agrees to raise its advertising rates to a more reasonable level, will you then concede to the CBC the role it now plays in the field of broadcasting, or do you advocate a change in this role?

Mr. Giguère: In saying that, are you talking about its role as a broadcaster?

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Giguère: You are putting me in a difficult position because I would like to judge the CBC with greater objectivity.

Mr. Fortier: I am sure you are going to do so.

Mr. Giguère: I would like at least to try to be objective. I think the CBC...

Mr. Fortier: When they came, they were asked what they thought of you.

Mr. Giguère: The CBC plays a very important role, a vital role, not only in French but in English too all over the country. I believe that the CBC does things that are altogether outstanding and produces broadcasts of excellent quality in some sectors.

Mr. Fortier: Broadcasts that the private stations could not produce. Is that what you are getting at?

Mr. Giguère: Yes. It is.

Mr. Fortier: Can you give some examples?

Mr. Giguère: I shall give you an example. If a concert with 110 musicians is broadcast on a Sunday evening, you can quite understand that the expenses on that occasion are astronomical. In private industry—I am speaking for us at Channel 10 and the stations which work with us—we do not have that kind of money, because such a broadcast is actually a purely cultural endeavour. And from that angle, the CBC has done a great deal in the past and I believe—and this is only an opinion—that the hand of the CBC French network has been forced over the past 4 or 5 years. Perhaps in some cases the cultural aspect of the broadcasts has been trimmed down, if you wish. And then again, we might say that this is constructive, that it is perhaps time the CBC realized that, in order to enter into dialogue with the public, one may produce avant-garde broadcasts and broadcasts of an extremely high cultural nature but, from another standpoint, it is essential not to get so far ahead of the audience that it cannot catch up.

In this respect it has to be acknowledged that, on the French network over the past four years, the CBC has been much more competitive than it ever was at the programme level. And to some extent this is what gave rise to my comments on the commercial aspect, because that aspect is definitely competitive. When the cultural level is mentioned, it is obvious—I am talking, you know, about the purely cultural (symphonies, stage productions, operas and troupes that are going to charge something like $85,000 or $100,000 for the presentation). It is obvious that that is one of the roles of the CBC. I believe that the CBC does in part fulfil its role.

There is need for the CBC, as there is need for all broadcasters, moreover, to carry on a continual analysis and evaluation, because they are in a society which is passing through an exceedingly rapid phenomenon of evolution. Therefore, the broadcaster who seeks to reflect his impression of it and who wishes, of necessity, to keep ahead of it, is obliged to reappraise his attitudes towards his audience. And it is perhaps something the Corporation does not do enough of. That is a very general comment, you know. But you are asking me for my impressions, and I am giving you one.

Mr. Fortier: It is one of the reasons for your being here, and to pass on to us the benefit of your experience. You have already worked at the CBC, have you not?

Mr. Giguère: I was one of the pioneers in CBC television. I was one of its first employees.

Mr. Fortier: If you were general manager at the CBC today, Mr. Giguère, what would you do to improve it?

Mr. Giguère: One of my former classmates is general manager of the French network, and it is fortunate that he is not here this morning. Certainly—and I am returning here to my theme when I speak of reassessment—I believe the CBC should reassess its position. That would be the first thing. First I would discuss a philosophy, and I would assemble a team of people who agreed with it; there would be a redefining of objectives, because it is so easy, in an organization as huge as the CBC, to lose sight of objectives that may have been set five or ten years earlier. It is very difficult to communicate in an organization with five or six thousand employees, some French-speaking and some English-speaking. Without a doubt, the first change I would make would be to redefine objectives, so as to be quite sure that all my senior staff members were fully conscious of them and I would also examine the system of communication.

Mr. Fortier: Such problems are no doubt linked to the size of the undertaking?

Mr. Giguère: Of course.

Mr. Fortier: Are you not afraid that your second French network may have to cope with the same problems one day?

Mr. Giguère: You can rely on me.

Mr. Fortier: I know your viewers have always relied on you, and that it has paid off. The CBC is a huge public undertaking; CTV is the second English network in Canada, with 13 English-language stations across the country; and CFTM wants to set up...

Mr. Giguère: Officially, the second French network.

Mr. Fortier: Is there going to be any room left in Canadian broadcasting for a small independent station?

Mr. Giguère: Of course, I think it is difficult to give you a general answer, but perhaps I could give you the basic premise of my thinking. I start from the principle that here in Canada (and I have thought about this many times because we are directly involved) we must look to the future. I think there is room in Canada for two complete systems, one publicly-owned and one privately-owned, both with English and French networks. I would mention another very important aspect to you—finance, the future availability, as far as I can predict, of funds for the operation of broadcasting enterprises. I do not see how the media can accommodate a third station, or system.

I touched briefly on the question of cable. It is obvious, heaven knows, that if cable systems were left to themselves—I am not criticizing the cable systems, I would like you to accept my statement as a technical comment; I am making a very cool analysis (clinical, if you like)—that if cable systems were left to operate without regulation, broadcasting stations would obviously be doomed from that moment on. This is because if, in 15 years' time, all the households in this country, or 90 per cent of them, were hooked up to cable systems, well—if conditions are imposed on cable companies, as are imposed on broadcasters...cable, you know, is a medium—

Mr. Fortier: A technique.

Mr. Giguère: A technique. It is a vehicle, it transmits a picture or a signal.

Mr. Fortier: Because according to its original definition, cable is only a means of improving the quality of service. It was with that in mind that it was designed, anyway. But today, the CRTC says...

Mr. Giguère: They have opened the door.

Mr. Fortier: ...you have the technology, you have developed it and we are going to regulate it; and now they are saying produce some programmes; is that correct?

Mr. Giguère: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: That is what the CRTC has said to the cable companies?

Mr. Giguère: The CRTC specified the nature of the programmes. They said: render a service to the communities in which you operate—give them better service. In addition, Pierre Juneau said two years ago in Quebec City...

Mr. Fortier: In May, 1969?

Mr. Giguère: Last year. He was giving a clear statement of CRTC policy when he said that the cable companies should not hope to attack national advertising because that would contribute to the fragmentation of advertising revenues.

You know, that is not something to be left to chance, knowing whether one will make two million or one million. It is a purely technical and financial question. If you look into it, you will find that at Channel 10 we will spend $10,800,000 before we make a nickel this year—$10,800,000 in cold cash. So there is a tremendous risk in every season. That is why witnesses appearing before the CRTC, and before you this morning, say that you have to realize that the available funds amount to just so much, and when the advertising revenues have been distributed between the public and private systems, there is nothing left. So if you split those revenues, you endanger the very existence of our business. You know, a company like ours can easily lose a million dollars if we are investing $10,800,000 annually. It is very easy to do so. You just have to be a little out in your calculations, and you end up with a loss.

Mr. Fortier: I am following your remarks with interest. You went very far when you said that the cable industry may mean the end of broadcasting stations as we now know them.

Mr. Giguère: If...

Mr. Fortier: If it is not regulated?

Mr. Giguère: If cable systems are granted the privilege of national advertising and the sale of regional and local advertising, and if the programs they distribute are not regulated, then I claim that the very existence of broadcasting enterprises as we know them today hangs in the balance.

Mr. Fortier: As you know, when he made the CRTC announcement on April 10, Mr. Juneau went so far as to say that the Commission will be able to authorize the establishment of cable television networks. Do you not think the CRTC is moving towards a policy that will result eventually in the elimination of television stations like yours and those of the CTV network?

Mr. Giguère: I think the CRTC has stated its policy. No statement has been issued that conflicts with those already made.

Mr. Fortier: Agreed.

Mr. Giguère: And it is taken for granted before stating another policy but it should not be thought that resistance to change—if I criticize the CBC for not increasing its advertising rates—you should not think that because we are in a television station, we should stand still. No; where cable TV is concerned, when the crunch comes a way will have to be found of incorporating production facilities into the cable system.

Mr. Fortier: Facilities like your own?

Mr. Giguère: It goes further than that. Last fall, Eugene Hallman, Vice-President of the English network, made a statement that corresponds curiously to what you are saying this morning. In the future, there will obviously be dangers for broadcasters, but that is part of developments in business life. We are prepared to accept that. Production facilities will always be important, because the cable operators like the broadcaster, will necessarily want programs. You have to know how to turn out programs, and it cannot be learned overnight. You know, we built our production centre, we have been producing for nine years, and as I said, we are constantly reassessing ourselves. You must not think that simply by deciding one day to have a television program schedule, one can have it just like that.

Mr. Fortier: Programming will have to be created?

Mr. Giguère: That is why we feel safe to a certain extent, because we have what I believe is the best organized production centre in Canada.

Mr. Fortier: Would not the ideal be what Mr. Bushnell and his company are in the process of doing—buying a few major television stations such as those in Ottawa, Montreal and particularly Cornwall, and also buying cable TV systems in order to be ready to cope with any eventuality? Should not a company like yours be moving in this direction? Should it not take such steps in order to protect its flank?

Mr. Giguère: That is a good question, and we have thought about it. Upon examination, however, and in addition to the conclusions with which I have already mentioned, we found that the amounts involved were enormous. To gain majority control of the cable systems in Quebec, say, would perhaps take $75 million. That is a tremendous sum, and I for one am not prepared to bank $75 million on the future of cable.

Mr. Fortier: You do not think it is the system of the future?

Mr. Giguère: I think cable systems are capable of being that, but there may be other systems as well. It should not be forgotten that the cable, if you stop to consider it, is a "pet theory". We started with the telephone, then wireless, then we turned to microwave transmission, then the cable, and satellites are next. So which is it to be? There will be something else, you know. I am told that work is being done on lasers. Some very advanced studies are being conducted in New York. I do not know what the laser is going to do in communications, but it may have an extraordinary influence. I am not an engineer or a technician, but let us just say that I do some reading from time to time in order to know what is going to happen. Nothing is absolute, you know.

But we are discussing the principle, if government authorities, acting through the CRTC, decide that—well, I think if that is the case now, we are talking about 10 or 15 years. I would like to remind you that in Montreal, only 14 per cent of households—and cable has been there for 10 or 15 years or whatever.

Mr. Fortier: But it is increasing at a rate of 35 to 40 per cent annually.

Mr. Giguère: It is rising more quickly. But the fact remains that the majority of households do not have it yet, and I do not think you will find a majority of households with it over the next five years.

[Text]

The Chairman: Just what percentage of the homes in Montreal have cable?

Mr. Giguère: About 14 per cent.

The Chairman: Would this 14 per cent be equally divided between French and English homes?

Mr. Giguère: I would not hazard a guess in this but I would suspect they would be in the majority for English-speaking people in Montreal.

The Chairman: There would be more English using cable than French?

Mr. Giguère: Yes.

The Chairman: The French-Canadians who have cable in Montreal presumably would be bilingual—all of them would be.

Mr. Giguère: They would, yes, their first interest would be in American programs, but if you stop thinking about the utility of cable in the Montreal area, if I may say so, with a very simple antenna you can get these same American stations and you can get a very high-class antenna for $125.00 with beautiful reception from the frontier stations, and it will cost you ordinarily $6.00—by the month—so there is an economic factor also, and cable will not give you much better quality than you would get with your antenna.

The Chairman: With a good antenna.

Mr. Giguère: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Before leaving this field in which you have enlightened us, Mr. Giguère, I believe it is appropriate for me to refer you to the last paragraph in your brief...

Mr. Giguère: I hope it is a good one!

Mr. Fortier: ...and explain to us to what extent the federal Government should help the private television industry in Canada.

Mr. Giguère: You have noted that it is a small paragraph of four and a half lines...

Mr. Fortier: It was thrown in at the last minute?

Mr. Giguère: I do not know what thought prompted it.

Mr. Fortier: You do not expect us to let it pass without comment?

Mr. Giguère: This is the basis of my thinking. I think it would be in the interests of the public at large if the Government were to assist broadcasters in one way or another. I can go no further, because I cannot give you an exact idea. But let us consider a parallel case. The Government now pays $50 million to the film industry, in one way or another. It becomes a partner with a film producer and a company.

Mr. Fortier: There is an Act respecting it. Gratien Gélinas is President...

Mr. Giguère: Quite. I believe it would be a good thing if we were to study the possibility of making funds available to broadcasters for special projects. I mentioned some things we could not afford to do, but if such funds were available—besides, the Government has an auditor for film production, and twice a week he visits producers to check on their expenditures, and so on. I do not see why television producers—since television is a very important mass medium, the most important in this country at this time, in my opinion—should not have millions at their disposal for some programs. These sums could be available to them, under Government control, and if a broadcaster such as ourselves, with production facilities, asked for funds, they could say: "Here's what we'll do."

Mr. Fortier: You cannot do it all alone.

Mr. Giguère: We cannot do it alone. If it were done merely with the advertising revenues we have, we could not afford it. But here it is, if you want it, our proposal in black and white, and this is what it can achieve; if you think it valid, then, place the funds at our disposal.

Mr. Fortier: You would not be afraid of having the CBC take it from you, then?

Mr. Giguère: The CBC already has its $160 million a year.

Mr. Fortier: At that point, could not the CBC say, as you do: "Members of the House, you cannot have it both ways—either you have a single state-owned system, or you have two system?"

Mr. Giguère: That is correct. But I am talking about a few special projects, not regularly scheduled programmes. I mean unusual, ambitious ventures.

Mr. Fortier: Ambitious ones that might interest minority groups rather than your whole audience?

Mr. Giguère: Quite. I say again, a production centre has creative and production people with imagination and highly individual approaches to their work—we have some people with us who have some tremendous ideas. They cannot be implemented because of the very great risks involved. First of all, some of the things we do are not profitable. There are many programs in our schedule that bring in nothing. But the fact remains that we could take on and complete other things in other fields without hurting the CBC's subsidies.

Mr. Fortier: Télé-Métropole is not a public company, is it?

Mr. Giguère: It is incorporated under the Companies Act. It is a public company; control of the shares was held by Mr. DeSève, who died, and control has now passed on to his executors, of whom I am one.

Mr. Fortier: Who are the other shareholders, apart from the DeSève estate?

Mr. Giguère: There are almost 175 shareholders, including those with minority interests.

Mr. Fortier: You have never resorted to public financing, have you?

Mr. Giguère: No, never.

Mr. Fortier: This is just to establish the basis of my question. You say that Mr. DeSève, the majority shareholder, died; I am sure that as his executor, you have had occasion to regret the rates of death duties that have had to be paid?

Mr. Giguère: That is a good question!

Mr. Fortier: Since the Committee's hearing began, suggestions have been made to us by various broadcasters and newspaper publishers. Do you personally recommend that in the media, it would be a good thing for death duties to be deferred, say, until the shares pass out of the hands of the family that are the original owners? Are you with me so far?

Mr. Giguère: Yes, I follow you. What you are suggesting is that upon the death of the majority shareholder, as in our case, the death duties we have paid—we have only paid part of them, and negotiations are still going on about the rest—should be left available for operating the business; I would say that it would do no harm, in our case at least.

Mr. Fortier: There have been many cases, as you know, in which the owner of a business has died, and the heirs have had to sell it in order to pay the death duties. As I said, some witnesses have told us that it will create a distinction between those Quebec companies that are in the news and information business, and industries active in other fields.

Mr. Giguère: I certainly do not object to leaving death duties within the business to be used to improve it. Perhaps that is the approach I suggest to you in the paragraph we mentioned; it is a possibility.

Mr. Fortier: Do you and your fellow executors intend to seek public financing for Télé-Métropole in the near future?

Mr. Giguère: You know, we have—certainly not in the near future, and if we can avoid doing so, we would very much prefer to run the business as at present.

Mr. Fortier: You do not think there are advantages in having a broadcasting business belong to the public?

Mr. Giguère: Oh, there may be some advantages, yes. It can make development capital available to management, but you know, that gets at the very heart of a business. I mean the life of a company, its growth and development. If these can be financed out of the corporate income of any company, unless someone wants to make a capital gain—we both know that a majority shareholder can put shares on the market to establish their value, and thus increase his personal fortune to a certain extent but if it not essential to the actual running of the company—in any case, it is out of the question for us at the moment.

Mr. Fortier: That is not wishful thinking?

Mr. Giguère: No.

[Text]

The Chairman: I wonder, if I may interrupt, on a somewhat different subject for a moment.

Mr. Fortier: I was about to change the subject.

The Chairman: If I may interrupt for a moment I would like to ask Mr. Bélanger; I would be interested in knowing how your rates compare with those of CFTO, Toronto? CFTO was before the Committee yesterday morning. What is your cost per thousand in prime time?

Mr. Gaston Bélanger (Vice-President, Sales, Télé-Métropole Corporation, Montreal): Well, the average cost per thousand in the prime time area which is 7 o'clock to 11 o'clock is in the vicinity of $1,230.

The Chairman: $1,230.00

Mr. Bélanger: Yes. That is global. That is the base,

The Chairman: Would that be the best in Canada?

Mr. Bélanger: On a BBM basis, no. I think the CBC stations are definitely best. In the private stations, just because they have a larger audience, with a higher rate than the majority of the stations.

The Chairman: I have a question which I have wanted to discuss throughout the hearings and I have never raised it because time has not allowed—and of course we are finishing our hearings on Friday. There is a reference towards the end of your brief about ratings. I would be interested in knowing how many rating services your station subscribes to.

Mr. Bélanger: Well, we subscribe to two rating services. We subscribe to BBM, the Bureau of Broadcast Measurement, which is industry sponsored.

The Chairman: Yes. We are familiar with them.

Mr. Bélanger: And also with Nielsen.

The Chairman: You subscribe to both.

Mr. Bélanger: We subscribe to both.

The Chairman: From time to time is there a great variance in their figures in terms of—presuming this is 11 o'clock on a Wednesday morning, when the surveys do come out, does it sometimes happen Nielsen reports one figure and BBM reports another for the identical time period.

Mr. Bélanger: They may vary but slightly.

The Chairman: It is only slightly?

Mr. Bélanger: It varies slightly and if you took a common instance over a period of a month with both services, you will see that there is a parallel. They are pretty well just the same.

The Chairman: Well, then, why do you subscribe to both?

Mr. Bélanger: That is a very good question. I think it is partly an evolution. Actually we have subscribed from the beginning to BBM. There were some problems at one time, some doubts to the validity of BBM within the industry.

There have been some major changes in the management of BBM, so we went back to BBM because we felt it was giving us two things, a confirmation of the performance of our shows and giving us two surveys, to be able to see if there is a pattern.

The Chairman: Aside from those two national services, are there any other major national survey companies who are active, who try to sell you their services, or are those the two major ones?

Mr. Bélanger: Those are the two major companies.

The Chairman: Which one of those services is most recognized by the advertising agencies, or are they both?

Mr. Bélanger: Well, there again there has been an evolution. Some years back Nielsen was the one that was recognized but today BBM is receiving the acceptance of the majority of advertisers.

We feel we must have both because of our clients who subscribes to Nielsen. Consequently in order to be able to analyze the situation, we subscribe to Nielsen and use Nielsen for them because this is the criteria they use for buying.

The Chairman: Are you satisfied as to the authenticity of the ratings? Do you think they are a reasonably accurate reflection of your audience.

Mr. Bélanger: I believe so.

The Chairman: You use them to sell advertising, I know, because I have done that myself. Mr. Giguère, to what extent do you use the ratings for programming a station.

Mr. Giguère: Very much.

The Chairman: Would you explain to us how that happens.

Mr. Giguère: Well, another reason why we have two systems is that they differ considerably in their methods. When Nielsen came in, they had a different method than BBM had. This may be another reason why we have been subscribing to both services but we use this in the analysis of the audience.

For instance, if you are creating a programme you want to see the impact of this programme on a very specific sector of your audience. If it was teenagers, for example, the result of the ratings will indicate to you if you are reaching your teenagers, because they make a very thorough analysis.

The Chairman: Both companies?

Mr. Giguère: Both companies now; whereas they differed considerably when they started. Nielsen was giving the number of homes when they started. BBM was giving the circulation. That was two different approaches to the rating system but now they are considerably the same.

You know, the two systems have adjusted as they went along.

The Chairman: What is the circulation of your station?

Mr. Giguère: Well, the last statistics we had was $40,000,000 in viewer hours every week.

The Chairman: How many individual people watched your station in a week, according to the surveys?

Mr. Giguère: How many?

Mr. Bélanger: Per week.

The Chairman: Or any statistics you want to give us.

Mr. Giguère: Well, let us say, just to give you an idea, between 6:30 and 11 o'clock we can say that we have 260,000 homes on an average per week, which, translated in terms of persons, can be anywhere between 800,000 to a 1,000,000 on average.

The Chairman: I have only one other question on the ratings. Is there any other information you would like to get from the ratings survey that you do not now receive? In other words, is there additional information that they could provide which would be useful to you.

Mr. Giguère: Frankly, no.

The Chairman: You have everything you need.

Mr. Giguère: Of course, we have got our own research department, mind you.

The Chairman: What do they do?

Mr. Giguère: They take these ratings and they project them and also from time to time we make our own surveys. We have people coming in and out of our station every day, hundreds of people, so if we want a feeling or a definite idea as to how we are performing or what people are really thinking we put forward very simple questions.

You go around and you ask 300 people to answer these questions and then you put them together and you have an idea. It gives you a very fair idea of how you are faring.

The Chairman: Mr. Bélanger, the Executive Director of the Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association, Clyde McDonald is a former broadcast research man. Was he at one time president of BBM?

Mr. Bélanger: He headed BBM for a number of years.

The Chairman: Since he has been...

Mr. Bélanger: He had his own...

The Chairman: He had his own company, McDonald Research, as I recall. Since Mr. McDonald has moved over to CDNPA, which is now a matter of several years, have the daily newspapers become more competitive in terms of selling with statistics than they were at one time?

Mr. Bélanger: I believe, sir, they definitely have used a very different approach to what they were using in the past. There is no doubt the influence of Mr. McDonald in that area, in the area of statistics, is making a difference.

The Chairman: I have only one other question to ask you in this area. National advertisers, in making the big decision about using either print or television in a campaign in Quebec, for example, the decision he has to make is; does he use print; does he use television; does he use both; does he use something else?

Does he make the decision, in your opinion, primarily on the basis of statistics, audience reach or does he make the decision primarily on the kind of a product? I think I know how you will answer.

Mr. Bélanger: Definitely on the kind of product, not strictly statistics. There are a number of factors depending what strategy he intends to take for example the money available in the market.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Giguère, as you say in your brief, giving figures to support your claim, Canadian content has never been a problem on Channel 10, and you make the suggestion that undoubtedly you made also to the CRTC, that of deferring introduction of the 60 per cent requirement for 12 or 24 months. You also mention that the effects of what you have done in this area have been felt in all branches of the arts, particularly in the record industry. I know that you are an experienced veteran in this field, in which you have been active for years, and I would ask you the following question. A station like yours has managed to develop French-Canadian talent, which was perhaps more readily available than English-Canadian talent, which tends to be diverted into the American market south of the border. Do you agree that the operator of an English-language radio or television station faces a more acute problem than you do in meeting the content requirements proposed by the CRTC for television and AM radio?

Mr. Giguère: That is a complex question. I believe the problem is the same for everyone at the outset. As I said, setting up a production centre and getting it into operation demands a sustained effort. It is quite clear that in 1970, the English-language television broadcaster trying to meet the new requirement is somewhat hard pressed, because when he began his operations, he may not have noted this atmosphere, he may have taken a different approach. But as for minimizing the difficulties we face, and comparing our difficulties with those our English-language colleagues will face—no, I do not think they are insurmountable, and I have said so publicly.

Mr. Fortier: How is it that your English-language colleagues did not "create this atmosphere" I am using your own words now—but took a "different approach." Were they forced to do so, or did they do it deliberately, in your opinion?

Mr. Giguère: What you are asking me to do is to pass judgment on the motives of my English-language colleagues.

Mr. Fortier: But you are in constant touch with them, you exchange statistics and ideas?

Mr. Giguère: I think there are two different influences at play. You know, it is easier to programme using a ready-made product.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, I agree.

Mr. Giguère: So right away, you have an easy way out. It is easier to program, obviously. It is more profitable, too. The risk is less. These are reasons—I make no accusations, I particularly do not wish to make accusations against my English-language colleagues. They have made some pretty splendid efforts over the years; after all, they have done some very good things, and there can be no question of criticizing them; in any case, that is not my job.

Mr. Fortier: You understand why we are interested in hearing from you.

Mr. Giguère: I am giving you an opinion. Anyway, I said in my brief that it is easier to buy a ready-made programme, and it is more difficult to work in this country using live performers. You know, it should not be thought that when we began operations, all the performers were there waiting for us. We discovered them, trained them, and made them stars.

Mr. Fortier: Is there any reason why your English-language colleagues could not discover English-Canadian performers, train them and make them stars?

[Text]

The Chairman: Well, it may not be a fair question to put to Mr. Giguère.

Mr. Fortier: I am sure Mr. Giguère will answer it or not.

The Chairman: We do not want to be unfair.

Mr. Giguère: To answer that question in all fairness I must say, they do some of that work. It is a matter of volume really because they are doing it, but the request presently is that they should do more. It is a question of...

[Translation]

Mr. Fortier: It is not insurmountable?

Mr. Giguère: No, not in my opinion.

Mr. Fortier: Do you still belong to the CAB?

Mr. Giguère: We still belong today.

Mr. Fortier: Why "today"?

Mr. Giguère: Because—and we said this publicly—we want to study the situation, first of all to discover what happened. We were astonished at the announcement, at the adoption of such a radical attitude, and we said that publicly, too. We said we would look into what happened before making a decision. We also stated that we might leave the CAB.

[Text]

The Chairman: Did not the Toronto Telegram in its Saturday edition say that you had left?

Mr. Giguère: Well, they may have said so. We did not.

The Chairman: Did they not?

Mr. Fortier: So did Joan Irvin in the Montreal Star.

The Chairman: They said in fact that you had left, but you were still considering your position.

Mr. Giguère: We are still a member of the CAB.

Senator McElman: Did you participate in the discussions up to the point of the presentation—that is the discussions of the CAB?

Mr. Giguère: Well, one of the members of our organization, Mr. Paul L'Anglais, is a Director of CAB. He sat in as a member of the CAB Board.

He suggested—and this also was declared publicly—amendments to the attitude of the CAB to the new proposals; and let us say that this is what we are looking into because after that meeting, there seems to have been some confusion. Something was left hanging up in the air apparently because I was definitely under the impression—I joined Mr. L'Anglais in Ottawa later that week—that the attitude of the CAB was not the one of complete negativity to the problem but one of, let us say, discussion.

White papers are put out for discussion and act is that we took the rules and regulations. We looked at what we are doing in our operation. I am not the judge of the other stations or other networks in this country, but we felt it was possible and we said so at that CAB meeting via Mr. L'Anglais who is a Director.

This is why we were so surprised not to say astonished, when publicly the legality of the CAB was really put in question.

This is an attitude that under no way shape or form we could be a part of. This is why we left the meeting.

The Chairman: The legality of the CRTC? You said CAB.

Mr. Giguère: I'm sorry, the CRTC.

Senator McElman: Would you then agree perhaps, Mr. Giguère, that between the point of the final meeting on the week-end of CAB, when it presumably reached a consensus of what its presentation should be and the point of that presentation, that there was perhaps a lack of communication within the CAB.

Mr. Giguère: That is what we are looking into, sir. That is what we want to find out. We want to find out what happened. You know, in a Board of Directors—I think there are 25 members on the Board. You can have 5 Directors that do not share the opinion of the majority and this is fine. We agree with the fact that the CAB could have presented a brief that would not be in line with that one.

We agree with that principle because this is a democratic process. We agree with that.

But what we cannot agree with was such a basic policy, because it is basic, you know, not to recognize the CRTC; and we could not share that point of view.

The Chairman: Senator McElman, have you any other questions?

Senator McElman: Not on that point.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortier: You spoke of certain American programmes that are dubbed in French. What percentage of Télé-Métropole's programmes are American and dubbed in French?

Mr. Giguère: As you can see from the figures I gave you, this is still a recent development; it started about two years ago. The percentage is not very high at present. But I can tell you that for the next fall season, I believe 50 per cent of the American programs we broadcast will have been dubbed in Montreal.

Mr. Fortier: In your own studios?

Mr. Giguère: No, it is done by companies that specialize in it.

Mr. Fortier: Before that, they were dubbed in Paris?

Mr. Giguère: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Did Télé-Métropole initiate this trend?

Mr. Giguère: No, the CBC was first, I have to admit that. Then we followed suit, and why not? The amounts involved are considerable, you know. To give you an example, a series of 40 programmes can come to, I don't know, somewhere between $60,000. and $75,000 in fees per series. It provides work for performers, in the meantime.

Mr. Fortier: You recommend that for such programs, the CRTC should recognize a percentage of Canadian content, and that there should be a points system. Is that what you recommended to the CRTC?

Mr. Giguère: That was more or less it, yes. The idea is that a 5 per cent Canadian content should be allowed for that as part of the CRTC's total content requirement; I suggested 5 per cent. This gives us a much stronger argument when we are dealing with an American producer, because we tell him quite simply: "Look, we have to think about Canadian content; and if we dub it in Montreal, we get 6 per cent; if we dub it in Paris, we don't".

Mr. Fortier: You say you favour a press council for Quebec. In your view, would such a council have a different function from that which the CRTC is supposed to perform and tries to perform?

Mr. Giguère: I think so.

Mr. Fortier: Could you give us some idea of how it would differ?

Mr. Giguère: First, I should like to make it clear that the press council would be concerned only with information and news, not with programming. I think that a press council with sufficient prestige would be very useful, because in the course of a year, there is quite a variety of problems that confront broadcasters and newspapermen, perhaps the latter more than the former. I should tell you that the man who put this proposal to us was a print journalist. He came to see us and explained his proposal, and we listened carefully and said yes. It is a prestige organization, for all practical purposes, in which the public, journalists and owners of broadcasting companies or newspapers would all have a say. It is a body without specific powers, but if it pronounced an opinion on some serious matter, it would—shall we say—carry weight.

Mr. Fortier: What is known in Europe as a "court of honour"

Mr. Giguère: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: You are doubtless familiar with the press council that operates in England; as you know, it has only a moral power and only over print, not the electronic media. My question really was: why do you feel it is necessary in Canada, in general, and in Quebec, in particular, for the electronic press itself to be subject to a press council?

Mr. Giguère: Note that when you say "subject", that may be a bit strong.

Mr. Fortier: Voluntarily subject.

Mr. Giguère: Remember, we have never had any major problems. It was 10 years last February, and we have never had a major problem. But I believe the machinery is valid and that is quite an arbitrary opinion on my part. My statement is not based on any problem I could specify, but ..

Mr. Fortier: ... if there had been a press council?

Mr. Giguère: That is exactly what I am trying to say. We have never had problems or libel suits, or the like.

Mr. Fortier: In the area of news and information?

Mr. Giguère: Only in that area, which we share with the print media.

Mr. Fortier: What are you doing today at Télé-Métropole to ensure that when an important issue is being publicly debated, Canadians will hear both points of view? I am thinking of things like the letters-to-the-editor and readers' columns in the print media. More and more newspaper space is being given over to what we might call dissent. What are you doing in this area as far as television is concerned?

Mr. Giguère: First, our producers, announcers and programme hosts have been warned about being objective. That is what we aim at when we deal with an issue. But if you ask whether we present both points of view on every controversial subject we handle, I will say no, because it would take twice as much time.

Mr. Fortier: Twice as much money?

Mr. Giguère: But what I do, for example, in support of our claim to objectivity, we have never refused any group or individual asking for air time to express his or their views. I can assure you of that. I am going to give you a specific example. You know there have been some very controversial political issues in Quebec, during the last two years, particularly. We did our duty as broadcasters and presented the facts. On one occasion, with Bill 63—and heaven knows, there was a good deal of protest over that—after presenting the facts, we were criticized by those who did not share our attitude at all, and we gave them equal air time at our expense. Things like that.

Mr. Fortier: That is a good example.

[Text]

The Chairman: I want to terminate this session so that we can turn to the next witness in a few minutes. I am not saying we do not want to ask more questions. Of course, we do, but I would like the Senators to be mindful of that. I know Senator McElman has some questions and I think Senator Smith has some questions.

Senator Smith: That is alright. Most of mine have been answered.

Senator McElman: On this subject you are just speaking about, Mr. Giguère, I would like to put this question, not in the context of your station but all broadcasters generally in Quebec. It is very obvious that there is quite a bit of discontent in Quebec.

Do you believe that broadcasters generally in the province have led public opinion here, participated in public opinion or simply reflected public opinion, or is it a combination? Can you give us your view on that.

Mr. Giguère: Well, I cannot generalize, Senator. Let us say that I could not say that at our own stations, we wanted to lead people into thinking one thing instead of another. We have worked on the assumption that by presenting the facts, and trying to be very, very close to the reality that we are giving our audience an opportunity of making up its own mind.

I would not want our station labelled black or white, you know. I do not think that is basically the job of broadcasters. I think our basic job is to tell what is going on, informing them, without any bias.

To go a little further. We do not editorialize on our stations. We have commentators. We have people who are invited to comment and they are of all allegiances. They are invited to comment and we make it a point to try very hard to see that all points of view are presented. But it is an opinion of a man and we say so because then we really get involved in active journalism. Even though it is the function of a broadcaster to present information, their other functions are very important.

You know, the basic function of a newspaper is to inform people. News is the essence of a newspaper, let us face it, but news is not the essence of a television station. It is important, mind you and I am not minimizing the importance of news and public affairs and so forth; but let us say that there is quite a nuance in specifics of each media; and that is why I say, speaking for ourselves, we have not tried to lead people in any way shape or form.

We have made a tremendous effort in trying to present the realities and to reflect realities and then it is up to the people.

Senator McElman: News presentation, I would say, immediately is changing of late but news presentation over a long period of time has leaned strongly to headlining those things which are sensational or are presented in sensational fashion.

There are those who believe and have suggested that an element in Quebec province have learned how to develop the sensational; thereby have in fact used television itself, I mean "used" in the sense of the way news and facts are presented. They have learned to use this to their advantage. Do you believe that, as a person?

Mr. Giguère: Well, there again I would not want to be absolute in my evaluation but I would suggest that there is certainly a large part of truth in what you are saying.

Senator McElman: Do you believe that this is being done in any particular area of the broadcasting media in Quebec. Let us be specific. In your opinion has the CBC French language network in Quebec been used to a greater extent than private broadcasting.

Mr. Giguère: There is a very hard question.

Senator McElman: I realize it is a difficult question. Perhaps you would like to pass.

Mr. Giguère: What you are asking me is if there are some separatist elements within the CBC.

Senator McElman: No. I am still staying within the context of the discussion we have had up to this point—not that there is anybody within the media themselves who are saying: "We will promote such and such"; but as to whether there has been a definite section such as the CBC French language television in Quebec, which has fallen into the pitfall by one who knows how to use the sensational approach.

Mr. Giguère: Well, to answer with a generality, I would say that this is not unique with the CBC. It is common to all media. You can find this not only in Quebec. The point that you are presenting, you can find across this country in any province.

I suggest to you that it is quite evident that if there is some fracas, and if there is a news element in it, it is the basic job for a newspaper man to take it and report it. And, you know there is more interest for the newspaperman and even for the reader, even if it is of secondary importance, if there is some sort of activity, negative activity, than reporting that: "Last-night City Hall passed the annual budget."

Mind you, all our citizens should be very interested about their municipal and provincial and federal budgets. I think that is positive thinking but if you report that there was a demonstration of a few hundred people, well, I suggest to you that for a newspaperman, you know, it is more attractive.

Senator McElman: Then, in current practice is it a fact that one who knows the techniques of creating a sensation can in fact obtain the preponderance of coverage for the media generally.

Mr. Giguère: I have to answer "yes" to that question.

The Chairman: More on television than on print?

Mr. Giguère: No. I think it is general. I cannot be specific about the interest of news in itself. I think this is common to all media. I think it is common to all parts of the country and not limited to Quebec situation. But I follow you when you say that people outside of the media have become very conscious of the media and yes, I will agree with you that there are some very bright activists that are very prominent and would expect to get national attention.

There is no doubt about it.

Senator McElman: I am one who places a great deal of credence in intelligent poll taking.

Mr. Giguère: Yes.

Senator McElman: And in the context of the current polls in the province of Quebec, I would ask you; Can you believe that it would have been possible for one specific group to have obtained the support that it now obviously receives without having developed a methodology for the usage of the media.

Mr. Giguère: I do not think I would give that the importance you are aiming at. This thinking—this basic organization, that you need to get attention from the media, I do not think is primed to that extent.

Senator McElman: One further question only. The media generally seems to be moving in the direction of greater in-depth reporting rather than the headline type of reporting and the sensational.

If the media had arrived at the idea of such a development and there had been over the last three years, let us say, much greater in-depth reporting of all media, do you believe that in such a milieu, one who has learned to "use" the media—do you believe that he could achieve what some are said to be achieving?

Mr. Giguère: I cannot follow you when you are giving intentions, you know, and say: "Well, this is how they planned it". It does not tie in like that, you know.

Senator McElman: Not planned by the media.

Mr. Giguère: Not by the media nor by the party that you are speaking of. It was not planned to that extent and I can affirm to you that there certainly was no basic collusion between the media and the parties to whom you are referring.

Senator McElman: I did not even suggest that.

Mr. Giguère: No, but by way of consequence, one could draw a conclusion like that. You know, I can assure you, to my knowledge, I do not think such a situation exists.

The Chairman: Thank you kindly, Mr. Giguère. May I perhaps close off the session by saying that the Committee is well aware of the fact that you head one of the most powerful and influential and certainly one of the most successful television stations anywhere in Canada and I think that the clarity of your presentation here this morning indicates one of the reasons why this station is so successful.

We are grateful to you and to Mr. Bélanger because, as I have said so often that the Senators are tired of hearing it, this is not a study of broadcasting. It is a study of media but broadcasting has a very real role to play therein and certainly your operation is a very significant factor to be reckoned with, not just by advertising agencies, but by people like us who are interested in the over-all media spectrum.

Thank you so much for coming. Thank you Mr. Giguère and thank you Mr. Bélanger.

We will adjourn until 20 minutes to 12, that is 8 minutes and then we will receive the brief from CKTM. —A short recess

The Chairman: May I call the session to order. From time to time it has been reported to me that the air conditioning is too effective in this room and therefore I would like to welcome Senator Quart, coat and all.

The second brief this morning we are receiving is from CKTM TV. The two witnesses are Monsieur Henri Audet who is on my right and who is President of St-Maurice Incorporée. Mr. Audet has been here before as part of the group who appeared for the CAB presentation. You were part of the group, although not the chief spokesman.

On my left is Mr. Robert Bonneau who is the manager of CKTM. I know that you were here this morning during the Télé-Métropole presentation and I know you have been here before so perhaps I can dispense with my usual opening statement.

We can proceed right to your opening statement and then we will question you.

Thank you and welcome.

Mr. Henri Audet, President of Television St-Maurice Incorporée, Station CKTM, Trois-Rivières: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Special Committee, I would like to tell you how pleased we are to be here this morning and I have had an opportunity, as you said, to be here before and all our colleagues who have appeared before you conveyed to us a sense of satisfaction with the atmosphere you have succeeded in creating for this Committee.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Audet: So it is with great pleasure that we come here to discuss a few things with you.

You have already presented my colleague, Robert Bonneau, who is the manager of our station and a member of our Board. With your permission I would like to switch to French.

The Chairman: Of course.

Mr. Audet: To make this job a little easier for me but I will be very glad to answer any questions in whichever language you would desire.

The Chairman: Well, even if we put our questions in English, you may answer them in French. We have simultaneous interpretation and the translation is fine. I am only sorry that my own French is not really good enough to follow you.

I am sure it is not.

Mr. Audet: I am sure it is.

The Chairman: But, please proceed.

[Translation]

Mr. Audet: Mr. Fortier asked me, during the intermission, to try not to read our brief, and I understand that it is perhaps a bit long to read even if the brief is relatively short. But I shall try to summarize it, if you wish, and I would request your indulgence since, unfortunately I am not a member of the legal profession, I do not have the ability of these professional persons to summarize a situation in a few words.

Mr. Fortier: Radio and television broadcasters are not as bad as that.

Mr. Audet: Then, I can tell you that CKTM-TV was founded by me. I left the CBC after 13 years in somewhat responsible positions, in order to establish my own company and set up station CKTM-TV in Trois-Rivières.

As you know, station CKTM-TV is located midway between Montreal, Quebec City and Sherbrooke which already was a region very open to all the influences of the surrounding cities. We answered the call of the Canadian government which, at that time, requested private stations to take responsibility for broadcasting in all the cities except the six principal ones of Canada. And so, we felt that the Canadian government through the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was inviting us to accept a challenge which was very interesting. We faced it with pleasure and we took on certain obligations to the Canadian people who entrusted us with an important mission, and we also understood that at that time the Canadian government was towards us.

In our brief, as you have read, we thought we would give a short history in order to place the matter which we are discussing into details of this history, except to say that there is no doubt that broadcasting, from the beginning, has taken on special importance in Canada, and that the Canadian people and their government have very rapidly become aware of the importance which television and radio would eventually assume. Initially, only radio was talked about and this is surely what explains the number of Commissions which have studied the problems of broadcasting in Canada.

I would perhaps like to note briefly that the scale, in terms of either the range of operations, or the necessary capital for these operations, is exactly what was foreseen 18 years ago.

Undoubtedly you will recall that 18 years ago when I was associated with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—and I was one of those who was open to much criticism then—and it had only $4,500,000 to establish two stations in Toronto and in Montreal, and it seemed to be an enormous amount at that time. It was already asked some years later how—and I was also a member of that committee—it would be possible to establish a microwave network to link up all parts of Canada.

It is, therefore, remarkable, isn't it, that within a period of a few years, Canadians have succeeded in setting up such a strong system, and which, I believe—this can be said among ourselves—has been a source of pride for Canada in all the other countries. I had occasion to visit other broadcasting organizations a few times in other parts of the world, and that is the comment that was made to me personally, that several countries much stronger than ours would like to have a broadcasting system similar to Canada's.

We have perhaps reached a period when we are trying to see what we have done previously and what we shall do, where we have arrived, and what we shall do in the years to come. And I believe that this is what is important, to see the future, and I have noted from this morning's questions, that this is what interests you.

In the last few months, let us say, the last few years, we have asked ourselves: if broadcasting has been so important among Canadians, would it not be normal to assume that in exercising a certain influence on broadcasting, one could hope to acquire much more quickly, or much more efficiently perhaps, Canadian objectives such as, the promotion of Canadian identity, of Canadian culture. And the broadcasters have been the first, and with much enthusiasm, to face this new challenge. We are happy that so much trust is accorded us. On the other hand, for those of us who assisted in the development of the whole system and for those who are called upon to make it work, there is one point which troubles us, and this is the lack of proportion which exists, Mr. Chairman, between the collective means which the strength of the stations can dispose of, and the range of operations to undertake.

Since we are re-evaluating the situation, it seems to me here that perhaps if we are sincere Canadians, and we must assume that we all are, we wish Canada to be a great country, having its own strong culture, and that all Canadians must take on the task. They must decide to make an honest effort to promote a Canadian culture and identity with the spontaneous and enthusiastic assistance of broadcasters. But, the broadcasters themselves, I believe, cannot in future, take upon themselves alone in spite of their confidence, the creation of a Canadian culture and I believe that the contribution, as several have indicated before me, can be decisive. I believe that Canadians can be assured that broadcasters will work with all their power to reach this objective.

We do not pretend to have solutions to all these problems; they are too great. It would be presumptuous for a station of our size—which is nevertheless a station with a medium-size market; let us say we are not at all in the same league as the person of the station which you heard before us—to try to give answers to all questions. What we thought we should do is bring you our experience—in all simplicity, and for what it is worth. We are ready to answer, and we have made some suggestions which appear to us applicable to a case such as ours and to several of our colleagues, with whom we have had discussions in the past, and we are ready to answer all questions which you would wish to ask.

[Text]

The Chairman: Thank you very much. I think the questioning will begin with Mr. Fortier.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Audet, as you point out in your brief and as you have just told us, you have been a member of the special committee on Television at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and of a committee in charge of the establishment and management of the Canadian television network. According to your experience of the last 18 years, are you of the opinion that the public network, the English and French-Canadian television network, has developed in the direction wished for 18 years ago?

Mr. Audet: Your question is a big one, Mr. Fortier, and would perhaps require a book to answer it. I shall attempt to give you a very short simple answer. I believe the answer is yes, that the objectives that were determined at that time have been realized and, in fact, they have been attained much more quickly than was expected. As you know, better than I, certain goals had been set and these goals were always reached several years before the required date.

The first objectives were slightly different than those presently considered, and I think this is normal because one must always think of the present and of the future rather than the past. But, it is nevertheless good to recall that some goals, like national unity, did not have at that time the importance which they have assumed by the chain of events in Canada. Initially, the principal aim was to assure that each Canadian could at least enjoy a television service, and already this looked difficult. Since that time, community antennas have appeared and it has really been an absolutely explosive situation.

I believe that this has been due perhaps a bit to the character of Canadians. We have been used to struggling alone in the face of formidable competition, and so I believe that, yes, we have attained our goal and I think that the Canadian system has reached it. I am one of those who believe, as Mr. Giguère expressed it a moment ago, that it is a good thing that there is in Canada both the CBC system and a private system. I do not know if I've answered your question?

Mr. Fortier: Definitely. You say then that you share the opinion stated earlier this morning by Mr. Giguère, that there is a place for a government network and another network. Do you go so far as to say that there is also a place in Québec for a second private network?

Mr. Audet: Yes, and that is something I have already expressed in public—that I think there is eventually a place for a second network in the French language. As Mr. Giguère has indicated, it seems to me that it would be a step forward, that the situation cannot be forced but that one would probably have to proceed with caution.

You have probably seen lately that federal statistics were used indicating that 40 per cent of Canadian television stations have a profit margin which, let us say for all practical purposes, is nothing. Many of the stations in the Province of Québec, if stations like Télé-Métropole are excluded, are in this situation; they are marginal operations. I think that in any new development, the danger of ruining the system by trying to develop it too rapidly will have to be taken into account in an absolutely precise and intense way. I am one of those who advocate the establishment of a second French-language network in Québec while taking the necessary precautions.

Mr. Fortier: Where would a station like yours, presently affiliated to the CBC, be placed in the eventuality of a second French network?

Mr. Audet: We appeared recently before the CRTC and our comments on this can be summarized as follows: we would like, at the time when the situation becomes probable or imminent, that all parties concerned (the independent stations, the stations affiliated to the CBC) probably under the initiative of the CRTC, unite to try to determine the most practical way of carrying it out. I believe that we will have to be practical when establishing such a network. At that time, we are prepared to serve where circumstances will show that we must.

Mr. Fortier: Does your affiliation with the CBC bring you more advantages or disadvantages?

Mr. Audet: That is a very difficult question. The affiliation which we have had with the CBC is a happy one. We have fulfilled our obligations and we think that the CBC has fulfilled its obligations. We had had discussions, as all parties do who join forces and work together, but on the whole, our association has been very pleasant.

I have not stopped to ask myself if there are more advantages than disadvantages. I think that, besides being a preview of things to come for all stations in Canada, it has been a method of establishing television in Canada. There has been this cooperation between public and private enterprise.

Mr. Fortier: If you had tomorrow morning, one million dollars to improve the service which you offer to your viewers in your region, what would you do with it?

Mr. Audet: I am a Canadian and I made my choice several times, I am in Canada by choice. You know, Mr. Fortier, I don't think I can answer your question. We should expand all our services if this is the meaning of your question. We would like to be in a position to give more in each sector, to have more employees in the technical fields, and in programming, which would allow us to be more dynamic. I think it is one of the problems of Canadian broadcasting at the present time. Certain statements by gentlemen we know have led us to believe that stations were the means of printing money. I think this is absolutely false, and that this has been one of the big problems which we have had to face—that of destroying this myth. Therefore, we have all had to be very prudent in the expansion of our business and our case is no different since we would like to be able to progress a little more quickly. I believe it would be good for all Canadians.

Mr. Fortier: You are, I am sure, in close contact with your viewers in your region, in your market. Do you feel that you answer the needs and demands of your viewers? Do you feel that you lead public opinion or do you feel that you follow it to a certain extent?

Mr. Audet: We try to lead public opinion. I can tell you that in all important issues we try to be ahead of events.

Mr. Fortier: How do you do this?

Mr. Audet: Allow me to answer the first question; then I shall also answer the second.

Since the beginning of our station, we adopted a philosophy of maintaining a dialogue with our listeners. It sounds like a cliché in 1970 but back in 1958, it was very new. We have been, I believe, one of the first stations in French Canada, and perhaps in Canada (I would not want to boast too much) to stop and ask: what is television? And we concluded that, in a market such as ours, a dialogue was necessary. So all those who appeared on our television station, were reached personally at their home. We tried to ask him, looking straight into his eyes: what I understand about events is such a thing; what I foresee is such and such; what do you think of it? This is what we tried to do, while recalling the usefulness of the sense of smell among the Greeks. It was thought that television would become the new kind of public meeting place, where in a funny kind of way, everyone participates in discussing an idea while staying at home, but at the same time sharing in eventual results. It looked very new at that time.

If you remember, at the beginning of television, people were talking above the heads of their listeners and seemed not to notice that they were there. We told ourselves that there must be the greatest consideration for our listeners who are our partners in a conversation and should be treated with the same consideration as if they were in our home.

Mr. Fortier: What kind of programme have you developed for reaching this objective?

Mr. Audet: We have applied that same policy to all our programmes. Our programmes, if you take the chapter headings, are similar to those on all the other stations. It is only the way in which we have tried to develop. I am going to give you a concrete example, it's easier.

Recently I was asked to participate in a seminar of the affiliated stations of the CBC on news presentation. There were two representatives of the English-language private stations and myself for the French-language stations, as well as two representatives of the two networks—French and English—of the CBC. What we suggested was a form of news presentation which would show the effect of events on people. For example, if you see a film report of a disaster, a fire, a wall falling in, it's dramatic. But we feel that this is not the only role of television. Isn't it more human and more personal to show the expression of the children and of their parents who are the owners of that house and who see the wall of the house falling? Isn't that a more human message? And we would like more and more—to answer your earlier question—and we are doing it more and more, to get statements from those people at the instant it is happening to them. We are already doing this on a considerable scale I think, for a station our size.

Mr. Fortier: I hope there are not too many walls falling in Trois-Rivières?

Mr. Audet: No, but it happens from time to time, unfortunately, with us as elsewhere. In fact, bigger structures have fallen.

Mr. Fortier: Yes, bridges. For my part, your answer has satisfied me on the subject of the million dollars but I am going to put another question to you and it is not a hypothetical one: what is the greatest problem you have to face in Trois-Rivières in the administration of CKTM?

Mr. Audet: That is a question which would require a good deal of thought. I can try to talk of certain problems.

Mr. Fortier: The most important in your opinion? Can you say today to the Senate Committee—indeed you have said as much in most eloquent terms—we operate the television station CKTM affiliated to the CBC, but there are certain things I am not happy about in the context of the broadcasting industry in Canada. Now I ask you: what is your first problem?

Mr. Audet: Our first problem is a hypothetical problem, I think. It is that we are aware at the present time of the new thrust forward in technology to which I have alluded and which we participate in, and we are trying to stay in the vanguard of it. We go everywhere and participate in all circles and levels of discussion about it. At the moment, as you know, we are about to be affected by it in a number of ways. This doesn't apply to us; but the problem is a compelling one across Canada, let us say in the majority of stations across Canada, where our audience is fragmented by the intervention of community antennas bringing in foreign signals. I won't say that this is the only problem, but it is certainly one of the factors.

It seems to me that some means must be found so that the fragmentation which is the inevitable result of the introduction of community antennas which, incidentally, (and it must be said, I think, in all fairness as your excellent expression has it,) use the stations' signals to resell them to their subscribers. It seems to me that this development must necessarily be accompanied by some sort of system, which I couldn't suggest; I could suggest some alternatives, but it must be accompanied by some influence which would increase the dynamism of a regional station such as ours, in proportion as the invasion of its market by additional frequencies is allowed to take place. At the same time, I think that the system itself should provide for a station of opposite tendencies which would permit the local station to measure up to this increased competition. That appears to me to be one thing. We have some worries about the dividing up of funds available for programming. There is talk, for example, that cable may gradually originate programmes and all that.

I would emphasize, as Mr. Giguère said not long ago, and we are of the same opinion, that cable has a good role to play in Canada, without any doubt, as indeed have the satellites and the other systems I would like to discuss if we have time. All the elements, in my view, must form an efficient and harmonious whole, must work together instead of against each other. Then, if everyone set to work to make programmes, and you have already been told I am sure, that the important thing in broadcasting is production, and the centre of production—forgive me if I stray a bit from the subject, I will come back to it.

Large centres of production have been set up in the chief Canadian cities with the aim of producing programmes of national interest and importance, which every Canadian will want to see and must see, to which every Canadian must have access. This system has been agreed upon, as you know better than I, with local stations making broadcasts of local character and importance. These two systems are complementary, which means that a viewer in a given region, such as ours, has access, on the same station, to these two kinds of broadcast at the same time. But, to bring about these broadcasts, both the national and local centres require considerable sums of money. Teams have to be put together. Mr. Bonneau and I have a team to work with which has taken us 12 years to build. It is very complex.

To feel the pulse of a region every day, to try to be objective, is not a thing which can be improvised; it is something which is built at the cost of years of hard work, and, mind you, I am not complaining, I am proud of it. But if too many people try little things here and there, it seems to us that there is a risk of debasing the general quality, and it would perhaps be better, given the fact that we are after all in a country of 20 million inhabitants which faces terrific competition, to concentrate all the energies in the big production centres. If we want to provide other programmes with a content different from that of the local station, they would perhaps have to be produced by a very big production centre for distribution to the little towns, I don't know.

Mr. Fortier: And the centres of production in your view of things would remain under the authority of the television stations as they are today?

Mr. Audet: That is what I think. Mind you, I think that in the past we have always been too absorbed by the technological aspects of radio and television. I think that these are the aspects which strike the uninitiated. We talk of satellites, of cable transmission; it seems like a novelty, but these are well known things which...

Mr. Fortier: Improved technology?

Mr. Audet: If you want to transmit a programme from Montreal to Vancouver, I don't think that any specialist will want to tell you what is the best way to do it. It depends on the day, it depends on what you are trying to do. And so in the same way, if you want to transmit programmes—and programmes are an important thing in our opinion—technology has been regulated up to the present time because it was easier to touch and to grasp. But what they really wanted to do was to insure a fair and reasonable distribution of programmes. In the same way, it seems to me that the possibility of producing and listening to these programmes must be preserved in the future.

Mr. Fortier: The CRTC, of course, has declared in an unequivocal fashion that cable was more than a matter of technology, hasn't it? The CRTC seems to want to encourage programming by promoting programme production by cable companies. You are surely acquainted with their decision of April 10th—what do you think of it?

Mr. Audet: We were happy when we saw their decision to find that in the preamble they establish the fact that existing stations should first of all continue to exist, and, I thought I understood, should be predominant within the Canadian system.

Mr. Fortier: The Commission is of the opinion that transmission by cable is the chief function of its participation in the Canadian broadcasting system and that it must be made to operate without endangering the quality of the rest of the system?

Mr. Audet: We are very glad of it. Until the publication of this decision, there was reason to wonder about this problem, to ask yourself: has it been decided that existing stations should disappear? I think that it is unequivocal; it has been decided that they are there to stay and that seems to me good and just.

Mr. Fortier: But all the same your audience in a centre such as Trois-Rivières is going to be fragmented by the force of circumstances?

Mr. Audet: And it is on that that we have advised the CRTC and now advise you also, our great concern stems from that very point. I think in areas such as ours and in most Canadian regions, the establishment of a service exploiting the resources of a region to the limit—indeed on our station, we have, I assure you, called on all who are willing to come and exchange with our public the fruit of their experience or their knowledge. The number of people who pass through our studios every year is, I think, quite remarkable, but it is limited all the same. Will you permit me to make a brief parenthesis while I think of it? It is true also from the Canadian point of view. It is impossible to imagine, I think, that we could produce programmes in Canada comparable to those of the United States. And I don't think that we can hope to produce programs in Trois-Rivières of a quality similar to that of the United States.

Mr. Fortier: What percentage of your programmes do you produce in your studios at Trois-Rivières?

Mr. Audet: It would perhaps be more interesting to answer your question in a more general way. I would say that half our broadcasts come from the French network of the CBC, and the other half from the station itself.

Mr. Fortier: How many programme hours per week?

Mr. Audet: We have between 110 and 120 programme hours per week. Can the figure 120 be used for purposes of addition? 120 is difficult to divide by four, and that is what I would like to do.) Let's then, divide 110 by four, or let's say, out of 100, a quarter of the production is done in the local studio.

Mr. Fortier: A quarter?

Mr. Audet: A quarter, including transmissions for example produced by other stations such as Channel 10 in Montreal, or from other sources.

Mr. Fortier: How do you get your services from Channel 10?

Mr. Audet: We receive certain broadcasts.

Mr. Fortier: On magnetoscopic tapes—you buy them?

Mr. Audet: We buy them in certain cases, and in certain other cases, they are paid for by our sponsors.

Mr. Fortier: Of course they are not broadcast directly.

Mr. Audet: At that point, they are retransmitted; let us say, most of those programmes, even if they are transmitted by the CBC on Channel 10 or elsewhere, have been pre-recorded.

Mr. Fortier: That means then that a quarter of your programmes are bought?

Mr. Audet: They are, let us say, Canadian productions which are broadcast on our station, of original Canadian production. The other quarter is made...

Mr. Fortier: Excuse me for interrupting you. If I understand correctly, they don't come from the CBC?

Mr. Audet: From the CBC, you have half our programme hours right there.

Mr. Fortier: That is the network, are they broadcasts which you have to present?

Mr. Audet: We have to carry the network programmes and we choose others over and above the limit set by the regulations.

Mr. Fortier: Agreed. Have you run into any problems so far with the CBC arising out of the fact that you buy magnetic tapes, let us say, from CFTM, for example?

Mr. Audet: We have discussed it on several occasions, but I don't think we have ever encountered any particular problems. I think that everyone admits that it is the only way of creating an alternative service in regions such as ours. I think that this applies to almost all the regions of Quebec at the moment, which are regions, it must be admitted, which are not very strong from the economic point of view.

Mr. Fortier: What is the percentage then of these 120 hours per average week—what is the percentage of broadcasts with Canadian content?

Mr. Audet: With your permission, I am going to ask Mr. Bonneau who keeps our statistics to answer your question, and I can continue after that.

Mr. Robert Bonneau, Manager of CKTM-Trois-Rivières: Our present programming, calculated in terms of the regulations now in force, contains about 63 per cent Canadian content.

Mr. Fortier: And if you calculated in terms of the proposed regulations?

Mr. Bonneau: It would be lower, of course, because apparently, for the time being at least, the proposal does not recognize as Canadian content broadcasts produced in the Commonwealth, and the broadcasts coming from French-speaking countries. It would probably fall to 56-59 per cent.

Mr. Fortier: The present percentage of Canadian content at CKTM exceeds the policy on Canadian content as stated by the CRTC. This doesn't present any problems then does it?

Mr. Bonneau: That is exactly what we stated to the CRTC in our brief, but we emphasized nonetheless that we foresee problems in the mathematical control of this system which is going to mean that in an organization such as ours, perhaps one person or one and a half persons will be required to supervise compilation. We are confronted with regulations which entail figures, mathematical restrictions and which obviously must be supervised from day to day, particularly if we move from the regulations with at present require us to present Canadian content on a basis of three months to a Canadian regulation which would require a basis of four weeks. To do this, you have to take into account all the seasonal fluctuations, the special programmes, everything has to be turned inside out. For this we would need a whole administrative department, as we pointed out.

Mr. Fortier: That is the famous problem of calculation and paper-work, surely not an insurmountable one?

Mr. Bonneau: No, but it takes on a perhaps exaggerated importance in a small organization.

Mr. Audet: With your permission I would like to make a comment which might interest you. We were pleasantly surprised to read the brief from the CBC and of Channel 10 in Montreal and to see, on reading our own, that the same problems presented themselves and that they were set forth in the same positive spirit of cooperation. It is our intention, and we have demonstrated it, to meet the Canadian content objective. We have merely indicated that we would prefer to continue to do so by following a sort of guideline, rather than by following a rigid mathematical formula, which is perhaps going to force us to reduce certain aspects of our own programming in order to satisfy mathematical requirements. Indeed I thought I understood that the Chairman of CRTC, in his replies to certain questions, indicated that he was able to understand the problem.

Mr. Fortier: You have just mentioned the positive spirit of cooperation which you and certain of your colleagues presented to the CRTC. How do you reconcile this positive attitude of cooperation with the attitude taken by the CAB, of which you are Vice-President, and which has been described as negative by all the commentators who have studied this problem?

Mr. Audet: You know that I agreed to appear before this Committee at the invitation of Senator Davey before being appointed Vice-President of the CAB, and that your question puts me in an embarrassing position.

[Text]

The Chairman: We do not want to embarrass you but I think it is a valid question and it is one we are interested in.

Mr. Audet: I will try to answer to the best of my ability.

The Chairman: Yes. We do not want to embarrass you.

Mr. Audet: I think it has been said here this morning that things that are sensational make news and a lot of what has been said about the negative attitude has been very unfair.

I think that if you read the briefs that have been presented by the CAB and by its member stations and read them carefully in your home without pressure of the spotlights and everything, you will see that they have expressed essentially what we have expressed today in our conversations with the Board.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortier: Even when they threatened to dispute the jurisdiction of the CRTC, Mr. Audet, on the matter of programming and Canadian content?

Mr. Audet: I don't think, Sir, that the CAB threatened...

Mr. Fortier: What was Mr. Henderson doing there?

Mr. Audet: You are a lawyer; I don't understand legal procedure, but, if you say to Senator Davey at a given moment that there is a legal procedure to fulfill and that such and such a thing must be put in the record in case one day you should want to change course, I think that Senator Davey would probably be obliged to have confidence in you and to say to himself: that is what we must do.

Mr. Fortier: In your opinion it was a measure of protection?

Mr. Audet: I think it was perhaps a prudent measure. That is how I interpreted it, I do not think it constitutes a provocation.

Mr. Fortier: All right, that's a good explanation. You are saying then that the brief of the CAB, even after what has been said of it, is more positive?

Mr. Audet: I think so. You know, one thing which has not emerged out of all these meetings is that all broadcasters, whether English-speaking or French-speaking, have devoted their whole life to building the Canadian broadcasting system and intend to continue to do so in the best interests of Canada. If they sometimes wonder how they are going to manage to do it in these days, I think that it is after all a reasonable question.

Mr. Fortier: The development of Canadian culture and identity...

[Text]

Senator Bourque: Are you still on this CAB subject because I have a question.

The Chairman: Senator Bourque and Senator McElman have a question but you carry on, Mr. Fortier.

[Translation]

Mr. Audet: I hope that the third question isn't the worst.

Mr. Fortier: The development of Canadian culture and identity—in your brief you recognize that broadcasters must be concerned with this. And you say that, on the other hand, this should not be the sole responsibility of the broadcaster. Do you think that, in the field let us say of the print media there should be a government agency such as the CRTC which should encourage the papers to propagate this Canadian culture and identity?

Mr. Audet: To tell you the truth, I don't pretend to be sufficiently familiar with the newspaper field to put forward a suggestion as to how the newspapers should be encouraged. I think I should prefer to remain on more general ground, but it does seem to me that all Canadians should make a concerted effort.

Mr. Fortier: You are not complaining of the effort demanded of you by the CRTC?

Mr. Audet: I should like to make a distinction. We of the French language do not find it a problem. As you have seen, we have already reached the required percentage. We don't mean to flatter ourselves on that account, it is the language barrier which has protected us but which, on the other hand, has, as you know, caused us other problems.

The problem differs slightly in the English and French-language groups. Even we would like to have access to more programmes made in Canada. It is possible to reflect Canadian culture, but when you are absorbed in the problem of reflecting Canadian culture you realize that there are not many films which have been produced in Canada. The film, it is always said, is an economical way of interesting the public. I have one opinion, and my colleagues have another different opinion on the subject of the film. A film may be a great cultural work if it is a serious film. It is often the equivalent of a masterpiece. A masterpiece in film is the equivalent of a written masterpiece, but the standards are different. In the same way, a masterpiece on a record may perhaps also be a masterpiece. Thus, in order for these masterpieces to become available, we must be able to make them known to the public. In order for them to be known, we must, in our humble view, create a favourable climate of opinion in all fields.

Now, there are perhaps also practical applications. You might imagine, for example, giving a person or a group of players a grant to put on a play in a small hall somewhere, and I'm all for it, it's very good, it mustn't be stopped. But couldn't one conceive of the same grant being given to a group to go and perform on television? Couldn't one imagine that the same grant might be given to a film producer who really wants to do an authentically Canadian work in order to make this work available? Couldn't provision be made, for example, in certain cases so that certain organisations would pay royalties?

I am going to give you an example of something that happened with us: at one point we wanted to show "Nuages Sur Les Brûlé". I don't know if you know it. "Les Brûlé" is a sort of novel which was written by a native of Trois-Rivières and a real native of Trois-Rivières, Mr. Hervé Biron, who was then editor of the local paper. The National Film Board was happy to rent us this production, but later, representatives came to see us and said: "Listen, if you want to borrow that work for broadcasting, you must pay royalties". And that would cost us, let us say, between $10,000 and $15,000. Thus, unfortunately, we were not in a position to broadcast it. So then we said: "Shouldn't there be people other than broadcasters to make provision for this kind of thing. I think that the same applies for broadcasts which have already been recorded in the past and which should, because of their quality, be re-shown to the public, but which cannot be because at that point all the actors, royalties, etc. have to be paid all over again. Would it not be a good idea to make provision for bodies which would supply the necessary funds when we want to do things like that, which seem to us good and necessary in meeting Canadian goals?

Mr. Fortier: That comes quite close to Mr. Giguère's point of view this morning in connection with private enterprise?

Mr. Audet: That depends. We are discussing something at the moment which is not necessarily subsidies. We say: give subsidies to the creators then, and we will create within the limits of our means. I think we have shown our intention of continuing to do so, but we can't build a structure all by ourselves. That would be unthinkable.

[Text]

Mr. Fortier: I will yield.

The Chairman: You will yield. I think Senator McElman has a question and Senator Bourque had a question. I think we will go to Senator Bourque first, if you like.

[Translation]

Senator Bourque: Mr. Audet, your territory or your region, covers Grand-Mère, Shawinigan, Nicolet, Ste-Angèle, Champlain, what in fact is the extent of your territory?

Mr. Audet: The extent of a territory is usually defined in technical terms, by a contour-line along which the signal is of equal intensity.

[Text]

The Chairman: There is this map in the book, Senator Bourque, at the back of the brief.

[Translation]

Mr. Audet: It could be said, I think, that the beam currently used in the industry is the second circle which you see here and which approaches Quebec, Sherbrooke and Montreal.

Senator Bourque: You haven't very many viewers in Montreal, it's not your territory?

Mr. Audet: We don't try to reach Montreal. Our programmes are not aimed at Montreal viewers.

Senator Bourque: You say that what you excel in is the local news chiefly because all those people are interested in having the local news and that you must more or less, in such places, give more local news than a station like Montreal or Toronto. Do you have much competition then from Montreal stations? They always go everywhere that you go and they have more varied and extensive programmes than you can provide. Is it from them that your greatest competition comes?

Mr. Audet: I think that there can be no hesitation in answering your question. Our chief competitor is Channel 10, CFTM, which you have just heard, because it provides an alternative. We are affiliated to the CBC, and Channel 10 provides alternative programming. Have you another question, because, if not, I should like...

Senator Bourque: This is part of the same question. You see, I think that when you come to national advertising, people who have a lot and who cover a certain amount of ground don't buy from you if they are already in the Montreal stations. You have trouble getting that advertising, don't you, and that prevents you from making an income which would permit you to expand and to do a lot more programming than you are actually able to do. Is that it?

Mr. Audet: Is that your question, or is it the introduction to your question?

Senator Bourque: No, that is part of my question.

Mr. Audet: Fine, then. There can be no doubt that the presence of other stations slows us down, let us say, in obtaining national advertising, although we are nonetheless I think in an excellent position from that point of view.

Senator Bourque: It costs your station much more, for example to get national advertising than it would cost a large station; it's ten times more, is it about that?

Mr. Audet: There is no doubt of it.

Senator Bourque: That leads into my question. Here I see on page 14 of your brief No. 7:

"It seems necessary to establish measure of financial assistance similar to that which is illustrated by the financial assistance given to Acres Limited by the Federal Government (through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation) to allow them to acquire Traders Group Limited, whose control threatened to go to outside interests. A similar aid would be priceless to Canadian stations in their efforts to promote Canadian culture and to preserve the ownership of Canadian media."

But, if you ask, and I know that this much perhaps should be granted you, is it much harder for you to get money than it is for the stations in the big cities?

Mr. Audet: Is that your question?

Senator Bourque: Yes, that is my question.

Mr. Audet: Well now, Senator Bourque, point 7 to our way of thinking, doesn't apply so much to operational expenditures as to investment expenditures, and the point we wanted to emphasize was perhaps this: it is that at a given moment, and it has arrived, it has been decided to limit the participation of foreign companies to 20 per cent in broadcasting companies which seems to us an excellent measure. We would have wished that at the same time funds had been put at the disposal of the Canadian broadcasters which would permit them to acquire the shares which became available when all these companies had to sell their shares. Many of our colleagues and we ourselves have been slow in our efforts in this direction because of the fact that the market, at the moment, is after all an extremely difficult one and full of uncertainty. And this means that public finance is more and more difficult. Thus, the efforts of everyone to bring about this Canadian goal would have been, I think, more worthwhile, more productive in creating a system such as is desired if, at the same time that that regulation came out, some place had been found to say: all stations now come under the terms of this Act and it applies to other fields.

Senator Bourque: I know Trois-Rivières a bit because in 1919 I was the founder of Le Nouvelliste in Trois-Rivières. That was a long time ago, 50 years ago.

Mr. Audet: Your name is still very well-known.

Senator Bourque: And so I know the difficulties that I had in that region; I had a tremendous amount of work to do. And that is why I asked you that question, to know if I had changed, or if you were faced with those problems?

Mr. Audet: Now as to your question, we have tried, to answer it in other sections of the brief; when we want to undertake serious works, it is beyond our means. Let us say then that our station wants to hire a group of actors or musicians which is beyond our means. We would like perhaps to be given the same consideration as the artist who asks for a grant to go to Europe to take in European culture. We have local theatre groups which sometimes, not always, obtain grants to put on plays. We say: would it not be worthwhile for those same people to be given grants to come and perform on television. And more people would see them at one time than could see them if they filled our halls in Trois-Rivières every day of the week. It seems to me that if we are sincere in our determination that we want Canadians to be exposed to beautiful things, is it not reasonable to present them via the medium which can reach the most people? It seems to me—and I think that a process of involuntary selection has taken place—that the funds available for culture seem to exclude radio and television, and nobody knows why. I think it is accidental. I don't want to give the impression that I think it's intentional. I think it is accidental, and we may allow ourselves to put emphasis on the fact in the hope that someone may hear.

Senator Bourque: I am very sympathetic to your problems. I have been through the same things.

Mr. Audet: We have a steep slope to climb from that point of view.

[Text]

Senator Smith: A supplementary question on that very point.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Smith: Mr. Audet, is that now not being done, the idea of having public support given towards the fostering of development of television? Is that not where some of the tax money is now going to which is being funnelled through the CBC directly?

Is that not why we have drama programmes on the CBC network? Is that not why we have some of the higher class music on the CBC? Is not that same objective of which you speak now being reached through the CBC and are you not, as a station operator, continually having these programmes available to you; or perhaps you are thinking of the local impact on the local people who have an opportunity to develop their own particular talent?

Would you clear up this question in my mind.

Mr. Audet: Yes. I am glad you asked that question. I agree fully with what you have just said in the sense that the CBC—if you take our station the CBC funds serve to present to our people programmes of national interest and importance or of such scope that we could not afford them.

It is true then that through this affiliation with the network, our listeners have available to them a number of things of great interest and importance.

On the other hand we would like very much to be able, as you have just said, to perhaps extend this effort to our regional scene. This is, I believe, the purpose of our discussion this morning, to tell you, as Senator Bourque said, how we feel we could improve this system for Canadians.

If I may just go out on a tangent for a minute, at the same time I think we have to consider the great problem, which is being discussed at the present time, of increasing the over-all Canadian effort in the way of culture.

The Chairman: What do you mean by "over-all"?

Mr. Audet: Well, I mean including but not only stations affiliated with the CBC but stations outside the CBC as well.

The Chairman: In other media as well.

Mr. Audet: Perhaps not in every media as well. Let me perhaps confine my remarks to television, just because I know it really better, but I am willing to try to answer that to an extent.

If we include, as well, other areas—this is where I think private broadcasters look at their resources and they say collectively we make $17,000,000.00 a year in profit before taxes so presumably we are left with $8,000,000.00 collectively; and we know that to sponsor a national system costs approximately $150,000,000.00 a year. The proof of it is the CBC. So if we want to duplicate the effort Canadians are making, we have to find, we feel, another $150,000,000.00. It depends how far we want to go. But it looks as if we are in the process of trying to find another $150,000,000.00 and the private broadcasters are saying: "Well, all we have collectively is, say $7,000,000.00 a year;" in the good years. That is in 1968. I do not believe you will find the same thing in 1970.

So, the objective and means at hand appear to be in two different categories. They do not seem to be in the same order of magnitude. It is David and Goliath or the giant and the pygmy.

Somehow the reasoning before the public seems to convey the idea that if broadcasters were willing to co-operate tomorrow that they could do it. I think that in all good faith and good intentions, broadcasters are saying we are willing to try—will you please help us.

Now, this is my tangent. Perhaps I should come back to your main point.

Senator McElman: On your tangent, surely you do not suggest that the private broadcasters are going to require another $150,000,000.00 to achieve this desirable purpose? Surely you cannot take the total.

Mr. Audet: Well, let us put it this way. Perhaps if someone wished—I am not suggesting we do, I am just saying in this process—I think we have to take into account if we want to double this effort of the CBC, it would cost another $150,000,000.00.

I know I am not answering your question directly but I think I am purposely trying to put this into a big equation. This is an important factor.

Senator Smith: Just like a good engineer would.

Senator Bourque: You are merely speaking the facts.

Mr. Audet: Probably, yes.

The Chairman: Senator McElman, you had an earlier question.

Senator McElman: Yes, I will get to it after this one. I only wanted to say you have the hardware now. You have your carrying charges built in. You have all of these things that parallel the CBC.

Certainly I cannot accept as valid a duplication or doubling up of $150,000,000.00 would be required to go much further towards the achieving of Canadian content and unity in culture and identity and so on. It is not a valid proposition.

Mr. Audet: I would not like to put words into anybody else's mouth but it seemed to me in his appearance that the President of the CBC indicated that certain things could be done for so much.

I am afraid now I am not conveying his words properly but he made essentially the same points as we have made in our own presentation, that certain things could be done, that certain things might cost too much; that certain things might make programming more difficult.

I do not know if I am answering your question now or not.

Senator McElman: Well, I would like to ask a supplementary to this. Let us forget about the CAB approach for the moment; but the reaction of broadcasters to the Canadian content and other proposals currently before them by the CRTC is that it is too expensive and it is required in too short a time.

In view of the period of time that has elapsed—I would remind you that the White Paper on Broadcasting of 1966 expressed the very intentions that are now being expressed in the proposed regulations. The report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, etc., of the House of Commons was presented to Parliament on March 21, 1967, better than three years ago, which again stressed the very things that are being discussed now.

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, if I could very quickly read one paragraph of that. This is from the Commons Committee on Broadcasting:

"The Committee concurs with the White Paper" statement of objectives. We are convinced that Canadians want radio and television programs of Canadian origin and character, although programs produced in the United States are available to a majority of Canadians who obviously enjoy them. A Canadian identity demands public affairs and news programs about Canada and about the world through Canadian eyes. Canadian broadcasters have a special responsibility to provide such programs because they will not come from any other source. Although the United States will continue to be a source of many dramatic and variety programs on Canadian stations, Canadian broadcasters must develop such programs in Canada to the fullest extent which availability of talent and resources permits."

It goes on further to talk about what is coming on, satellite, cable and all this sort of thing.

Here was expressed the will, the purpose, the aspirations of the Canadian people of what they wanted from broadcasters who have the privilege of a licence to use the air waves. Here was the expressed will and wish of the Canadian people through their Parliament.

My question is: why have the broadcasters of Canada, with that before them for a period going back to the White Paper of four years ago, been so slow in producing Canadian content, that the CRTC would be forced on behalf of the Canadian people to say "Here, finally you have got to do what the Canadian people asked you to do."

Mr. Audet: Well, sir, I think my only answer to you can be Mr. Bonneau has told you what our percentages are.

Senator McElman: I am talking about broadcasters in general.

Mr. Audet: We have done what was announced in this White Paper. We have achieved that.

Senator McElman: Your station.

Mr. Audet: Yes. Now, in all sympathy with my industry colleagues, I think I must say that in the discussion of new regulations which I understand or we were lead to believe was only a White Paper, people brought out I think in all due democratic process, as we are doing this morning, certain considerations and certain qualms they had about certain aspects of the way things were done.

Now, please remember that I think it was profusely obvious in the written presentation brief of the CAB—perhaps I should not get into that ground. I want to point out I am not here to speak for the CAB position.

The Chairman: We appreciate that.

Mr. Audet: It has been reiterated on several occasions that the Association was entirely in favour of the objectives pursued. There was no idea of saying these objectives are not good. This is my own interpretation.

Senator McElman: But, sir, did they not subscribe to motherhood in the same fashion a number of years ago when the first Canadian content requirements were laid down? At the same time did they not make the same protest they are making to-day that these were impractical, unreachable and beyond their economical capacity to absorb?

Mr. Audet: Sir, I think I should perhaps ask you for mercy at this time because I am not here to defend the CAB but I think I will follow you one step further if the Chairman will permit.

The Chairman: Yes, of course.

Mr. Audet: I think that this is natural, is it not? New regulations are proposed and meetings are held to consider them. It is natural that the plus and minus be presented and I think that this should be taken in all good faith and sympathy. I do not believe that anyone who comes honestly to present a view, whether it agrees with our own or not, should be labelled as opposing it.

I think this is as far as I will go for a moment.

The Chairman: If I may say, Mr. Audet, it is not our intentions to embarrass you. I am sure Senator McElman is not attempting to embarrass you or to ask you embarrassing questions. He appreciates, as I do, that you are here representing your station and not representing the CAB. At the same time you are the Vice-President Elect of the CAB.

I think it was perhaps in that spirit his question was put to you. I am not going to insist that you say anything more but I think I should in fairness ask Senator McElman, if he is satisfied with the answer of the witness.

Do you wish to pursue this thing?

Senator McElman: I shall not press it, Mr. Chairman, I was simply following this line because we have a witness who has gone a very long way towards meeting the requirements and ambitions of the Canadian people for Canadian content. I was hoping perhaps to elicit some replies that may be useful to other broadcasters.

The Chairman: I have two questions which are very short, I assure my colleagues because it is past our adjournment period. They are very short and to the point. In the English version of your brief at page 10 you say:

"Emphasis was placed on the increase of Canadian content on television without an equivalent demand for the same efforts on the part of other cultural media..." and then you list the other media.

Were you suggesting that there should be no demands on television or there should be demands on other media?

Mr. Audet: I am suggesting that there should be demands on other media.

The Chairman: Specific demands?

Mr. Audet: Well, perhaps just a study—May I present some information I have with me here.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Audet: We made a survey, for instance, in two Canadian cities, one in Ontario and one in Quebec. We went unannounced to the public libraries and asked them "What are the two hundred books that really move in here?" And they said "They are here on the shelves because we keep them there".

The Chairman: We would be most interested in the results. Could you let us have the results.

Mr. Audet: If I can. I hope I can find them in this thing here.

The Chairman: Which were the cities?

Mr. Audet: One was Kitchener, Ontario and the other one was Trois-Rivières, Quebec.

The Chairman: Which are about the same size, I would say.

Mr. Audet: The same size and I think perhaps reasonably representative of the same Canadian cities in their own areas. This is an unofficial survey. We have just done it on our own.

The Chairman: When?

Mr. Audet: This has been done—the only date I have here because I have given my own copy to someone else, is the date that I have received the Kitchener one which is March 18th so it has been probably done around March 15th.

A random survey of 220 books, fiction and non-fiction. United Kingdom 34 per cent.

The Chairman: This is in Kitchener.

Mr. Audet: Yes. I am sorry. This is a Toronto Library. I apologize.

Mr. Fortier: That is not as representative.

Mr. Audet: No. It may be representative of something else. United Kingdom 34 per cent. U.S.A. 57 per cent, Canada 9 per cent.

Now, in the children's room, this may interest you again. United Kingdom 12 per cent, U.S.A. 88 per cent, Canada 0 per cent. If we do not feel that our children deserve to be educated with Canadian books, how can we say television will cure this?

Now, Trois Rivières. We are protected by all kinds of language barriers, so people say. We know otherwise, as Senator Bourque knows.

158 books French 80 per cent, Belgium 2½ per cent, Switzerland 2½ per cent, Canada 15 per cent.

Now, in the children's section, French and Belgium 65 per cent, others 30 per cent—U.S.A. 5 per cent and Canada 0 per cent.

I think we have to admit that our culture or our way of looking at culture is not the way we see it in public. I am sorry to bring it out in the open.

The Chairman: No, on the contrary, I think it is a good thing to bring it into the open. I think it is things like this which should be in the open, as long as you do not argue that two wrongs make a right.

Mr. Audet: No, no. On the contrary I think we are together looking at ourselves.

The Chairman: Because it is so late, let me just put my last question to you which ties right in with this. You say on Page 8:

"...the weakness, we have to admit, of the Canadian culture by opposition to the American culture which is backed by considerable human and financial resources [is] so powerful that no country in the world has yet found a formula to resist to its penetration."

Implicit in that statement is a pretty pessimistic forecast for Canada because if no one in the world has been able to resist it, you presumably think that we will not be able to resist it.

Mr. Audet: Well, we did not come to any conclusion.

The Chairman: Would I be fair in drawing that conclusion?

Mr. Audet: No. The point we would like to make, if I may suggest respectfully, is that we feel we have a very steep hill to climb. We really have to make a very strong effort if we want to retain the Canadian identity and I think we have to accept that we have to foot the bill if we want to do it and we are willing to do it. We feel it should be done and I am one of the ones who feel it should be done. I feel very strongly about this.

The Chairman: Mr. Audet and Mr. Bonneau, may I thank you. May I say to you as far as your library survey is concerned, my colleagues on this Committee will not be surprised to know, that I had thought very seriously of including in this study a reference to books, to book-publishing and to readership and so on. With the end of our hearings on Friday, I am sure my colleagues on that Committee are delighted we did not.

On the other hand I am not sure that it would not have been a very useful study. Certainly I am grateful to you for the points you have made and if there is any additional information of that kind you have, we would be delighted to receive it.

I would simply say in closing that you have been a very gracious witness. We do not apologize for having you here. We wanted broadcast representatives from outside of English-Canada. We wanted broadcast representatives from outside Montreal, frankly. We wanted people in Quebec in your particular community situation. Your views have been valuable to the Committee.

I am sorry that time did not allow us to go into one other area. You are, I know, a graduate of MIT and I think you will have views on technology which we would find useful. I would only say in closing, if there is additional information that you are able to send us, either in the area of technology or in this whole area of the cultural problem we have been discussing, we would be delighted to hear from you.

The Chairman: Specific demands?

Meanwhile, we do appreciate the fact that you have been a most gracious witness. Thank you, Mr. Bonneau.

I would say to the Committee we meet at 2:30 with the Canadian Cable Television Association and at 4:00 with Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited. I would remind you again that the session this evening with the British Columbia Television Broadcasting System Ltd. has been cancelled.

Thank you.

Mr. Audet: Thank you, sir...

The Committee adjourned.

Upon resuming at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call the session to order. As the Senators are aware, the Committee is entering the final phases of the public hearing aspect of its activity.

This afternoon we begin to turn our attention to really the last major branch of the media which we have under our particular study, the whole area of community antenna or cable television. Not only is it the last phase that we will be studying, I think by all odds it is the newest and most perplexing medium we will be attempting to analyze.

We are grateful to the witnesses who are here. We are to receive two briefs this afternoon. The first brief is from Canadian Cable Television Association. Seated on my immediate right is the organization's President, Mr. C. R. Boucher. On his immediate right is Mr. G. A. Allard, a Past President of the Canadian Cable Television Association. On my left is Mr. R. C. Chaston, who is a Director of CCTA.

Mr. Boucher, the brief you were kind enough to prepare in compliance with our request was received more than three weeks in advance. It has been circulated to the Senators who I think have had an opportunity of studying it. We would like to ask you some questions on its contents.

I am sure you are familiar with our procedure. We ask you to make an opening oral statement in which you can talk about the brief or talk about other matters and following your oral statement we would like to question you on the contents of your written document and your oral statement or other matters which may be of concern and interest to us.

Thank you for coming. Welcome. Why don't you proceed?

Mr. C. R. Boucher, President, Canadian Cable Television Association: Thank you, Senator Davey and Honourable Senators.

Let me say that we welcome and appreciate this opportunity to be able to submit a brief to the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media on behalf of the Canadian Cable Television Association.

It was also intended that our Executive Vice-President, John Loader, should accompany us, but unfortunately he is ill.

The Canadian Cable Television Association represents systems serving 971,750 subscribers, or 88% of all cable subscribers in Canada.

The CCTA Board of Directors is chosen so that there is representation from all parts of Canada.

Since 1952 the cable industry in Canada has grown out of a genuine desire by Canadians for better quality signals and greater choice of programmes.

The first and primary role of the cable television industry is that of a community antenna television service. This role is a passive one. It is merely doing what each Canadian can do for himself with a rooftop antenna if the signals are available in his area—only we do it better.

A second and active role for the cable television industry is a function that some of us foresaw as a possibility more than a decade ago—the origination of programmes of community interest. However until the CRTC policy announcement of May 13th, 1969, we were not encouraged to engage in any programme production.

Generally, we regard as a new challenge the CRTC's seal of approval to engage in cablecasting activities at a community level, originating programmes to complement rather than compete with local broadcasters.

I must emphasize that this role in community programming, even if we agree with the concept, is not the service for which our customers are paying. For many years to come our customers will still continue to subscribe to cable because of its primary function, to be specific an improved antenna service. There are other roles envisioned, of course, and I will mention those later.

Much has been said about the rapid growth of cable during the last two years but this growth is largely attributable to systems which got under way in the mid '60's and have only lately become operational.

Naturally their subscriber list is growing rapidly as they reach normal penetration in the relatively large markets they serve. I mention this because in the last two years no major CATV developments were begun in large urban centres, therefore the growth will level off. This growth will only commence again with new major developments in cities where cable has yet to be licensed.

In a press announcement last week the Canadian Cable Television Association stated that it appeared the CRTC has been persuaded that the Canadian broadcasting industry was in danger of extinction by cable television.

The CCTA, of course, is in complete disagreement with this conclusion. It has always been the contention of our industry that since, in most cases, we offer an alternate means and a better means of receiving signals to the unsightly and sometimes hazardous household antenna, the effect of CATV systems on the broadcasting industry is not disruptive.

From the very many views presented to the CRTC in the past two weeks at the public hearings still continuing here in Ottawa, neither the broadcasters nor the creative community appeared to regard the CATV industry as an obstacle to the development of a truly Canadian broadcasting system. We regard ourselves as a vital contributing element.

We might elaborate here that presentations made by networks and various groups representing creative talent and performing talent are less concerned with the competitive effects of U.S. signals but they are looking for a greater opportunity to express themselves in every way. They feel confident that the potential exists in Canada to develop our own Canadian programmes which can more than hold their own—that is, to develop a unique and interesting form of Canadian programme much more acceptable than the present Canadian fare which seldom enjoys mass popularity.

Since the submission of our brief to this Committee, the CRTC has issued a further public announcement setting out proposed guidelines which will form the basis of the Commission's deliberations in deciding on the issuance or renewal of CATV licenses.

The extent of the effect of these guidelines is still being analyzed by the CATV industry and clarification sought on several important points raised in the announcement.

We do not believe the Commission intends to reduce the value of cable television to the subscribers by refusing to allow the systems to distribute signals which are readily available off-air or to limit the choice of programmes available. Unfortunately, some press reports on these proposed guidelines have been based upon premature and, in our view, inaccurate conclusions formed by interpreting the CRTC's announcement in the worst possible light.

The financial community has also reacted adversely, but we are sure that as soon as the meaning of the guidelines becomes clear, confidence in the industry will be restored.

Many cable companies are dependent on a favourable reaction from the financial community, particularly at this time because they must comply with new ownership regulations. This is a result of a directive from the Secretary of State that limits foreign ownership to 20 per cent. This has caused an unusually heavy demand for financing from Canadian sources as licensees seek to conform with the new Federal directives. I might add that this is not restricted to cable but also applies to broadcasting interests.

We are optimistic about the future, and are somewhat encouraged by the CRTC announcement of April 10th because it does permit a limited use of microwave to serve areas where U.S. programmes are not available off-air. We are disappointed that the financial community has not seen this in the same light.

What of the future?

In presentations made before you recently and in statements made elsewhere, you are aware of the "promised land" of CATV in which 20, 40, and even 80 channels have been envisioned. It has been forecast that many new services will be available on CATV systems in future years and we shall deliver these services as soon as technical, financial, social and, dare I say, political problems have been resolved. But more important, there must be public demand, general acceptance of these additional services, and at a price that can generally be afforded.

We are confident of the future of Canadian broadcasting and the part we will play. It appears others share our view. Witness this statement made by a CBC representative when appearing before the CRTC last fall in Vancouver, and I quote: "We know that the public is demonstrably interested in multi-service television and in many areas this can only be provided in a practical way by CATV systems."

We must state, however, that to our customers we are an urban instrument supplying an improved TV antenna service. This is primarily why the public subscribe to cable and judging by the proven acceptance of this service it is apparent this industry's future is assured.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Boucher. We will now proceed to the questioning and the Senators will direct the questions to you, although they may in the course of the afternoon want to ask questions of your associates. If, indeed, you wish to direct any of the questions in turn to either of your associates, by all means please do so.

I think the questioning this afternoon will begin with Senator McElman.

Senator McElman: Mr. Boucher, your brief, particularly pages 22 and 24, questions the authority of the CRTC to regulate cable programming and subscriber rates. Do you envisage testing this authority in the courts?

Mr. Boucher: Well, Senator, this brief was meant to be informative and presenting facts as we saw them. The Association does not wish this brief to be construed as a challenge but merely a position or an informative document, for the lack of a better description.

Senator McElman: I appreciate that, but do you envisage testing the authority?

Mr. Boucher: Well, the Association itself, as I say—we have analyzed the facts as we see them, have presented them and are absolutely candid about the situation as it exists, but no decision has been taken to challenge in the forms provided by this Association.

Senator McElman: All right. That is the Association's position. Are any of your member units currently taking anything before the courts?

The Chairman: That you are aware of obviously?

Mr. Boucher: I am not aware of any but there are cable operators making presentations before you.

Mr. G. Allard, Past President of the Canadian Cable Television Association: I wanted to mention the authority of the CRTC was challenged by one non-member of the Association. This was with respect to the authority of the CRTC to grant an exclusive license, but I believe this was dismissed.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Couture at Thetford Mines

Mr. Allard: That is right.

Mr. Boucher: I think that was last fall. I had forgotten about that one.

Senator McElman: As an association, do you feel that it is for the good of the broadcast industry, including cable television, that there be a regulatory body laying out guidelines.

Mr. Boucher: I think we are on record as being in agreement with the principles of the Broadcasting Act and, of course, this prescribes that there must be a regulatory body. Broadcasting is a very complex, as you well know from all the presentations that you have heard and everything that has been written; there are so many factors involved. What is done in one area is bound to affect another; there is bound to be disturbance of the ecology along the line, if that is a proper terminology.

So there must be someone who oversees the orderly development, as the CRTC put it, to achieve balance. So in that sense, certainly, we believe there must be this type of body.

Senator McElman: In the Montreal Gazette of September 6th last year, there is a report of a speech given by Mr. Loader, your Executive Vice-President. He was speaking to the Broadcast Executives Society and the quotation is:

"The right to employ and enjoy the maximum capacity of the receiver should not be limited by regulation for any reason."

Would you like to comment on that and perhaps elaborate on it?

Mr. Boucher: I think that he is expressing a view that most of us, certainly the majority of us, have in the industry, that there is a basic right for Canadians that they have—similarly to magazines, as an example, I think this is the example we use in our brief—the right to access to what is available.

In other words, we don't believe that an artificial, say, "iron curtain" or "electronic curtain" would be a rightful means of depriving the Canadian public. I don't think that is the CRTC intent.

I might suggest, that was the context of Mr. Loader's remark.

Mr. Allard: I might point out, Senator, that this is spelled out in the preamble of the Broadcasting Act itself. I can't remember the exact wording. I think it suggests Canadians should be entitled to the greatest choice possible, subject to existing regulations. I can't remember the exact wording but it is in the preamble to the Broadcasting Act itself.

Mr. Boucher: I think there are numerous references in our brief and one in particular that comes to mind, of course, is that the Fowler Commission Report was quite emphatic about the fact Canada should not become a broadcasting or television ghetto. I think this is also the same context.

Canadian people do want, as a right, the choice. I am not saying United States programmes or anything. My own personal view, of course, is it would be a terrible disaster if Canadians did not have access to as much material as is available. After all that is what made us Canadians.

The Chairman: What made us Canadian? Having access to American television made us Canadians?

Mr. Boucher: I can give you an example on that. When I was a youngster, when we were teenagers, we looked to the States as the promised land and we were bound here and knew we couldn't escape. If we could have escaped to the States, we felt this was tremendous. This, I must admit, was a kind of hope, but you don't find that today.

The Chairman: May I make it clear that you are speaking for yourself, and you may speak for others, but you are not speaking for me. I accept your statement of course, that you felt that way.

Senator Prowse: I think he speaks for a great many people.

The Chairman: He may be but he is not speaking for me.

Mr. Boucher: Unfortunately, I did not conduct a poll amongst our Association members but I have spoken to many, many people across the country and this is something I had not thought about until about a year ago and this is generally accepted. Some of the press reports you have had, for instance, on the situation in Regina, where there is no access to American television there...

The Chairman: You said that is what makes us Canadians. Is the fact that many people long to go to the States what makes us Canadians?

Mr. Boucher: No, I am sorry...

The Chairman: I am not quarrelling with you.

Mr. Boucher: I think we have the freedom of choice here and this is a very important part of being Canadian.

The Chairman: You mean freedom of choice is part of being a Canadian?

Mr. Boucher: I think it is the most important part.

The Chairman: I think I understand the point.

Mr. Boucher: This is what I mean. I think I should have qualified it. We can choose in so many areas and this is why I am here, for instance.

The Chairman: We can pursue it later.

Senator McElman: Let me pursue another angle. Let us say in Edmonton that there is a capability of 20 channels and a cable company wishes to bring in 14 U.S. channels and 6 Canadian. Should that be regulated in any sense or should they have complete access?

Mr. Boucher: I spoke of the need for balance. I think this would be an imbalance, of course, and the Association has never stood for unrestricted mass importation of U.S. signals. We are on record before the CRTC as having said we are not for a complete freedom to import everything from everywhere in the sense that we can flood the entire airways or cableways of Canada with U.S. programming. This was not the intent of our industry, I dare say, beyond the major networks, and perhaps the two independent sources of programmes in the States like NET. After all there is a limit to viewing and the more signals you bring in to Canada—first of all, there is economics but secondly, you have to limit the amount of hours the individual Canadian would spend watching American programmes anyway. If a wide choice would be available, I think this would have to be re-assessed. As things are today certainly the choice is limited to what is generally distributed right across the continent.

Senator McElman: I come back to the basic question: should this be regulated at the choice of the cable owner or by a regulatory body, an agency established by government?

Mr. Boucher: Well, if all points are considered I think a regulatory body is certainly in a better position to rule on specific instances and to do it on the considerations of the area to be served. I think this is paramount rather than having broad importation with no restrictions.

I think if you were to ask me whether selections should be based on one particular area, then I would say this would be the better way of doing it; and, of course, a regulatory body would be the only ones structured that way now. They would be the ones to choose what that market could tolerate.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Boucher, for many years, indeed until 1968, the CATV systems were considered as broadcasting-receiving undertakings only, and as such, were not subject, for example, to the BBG authority. In those days they developed following the granting of permits granted by the DOT.

Mr. Boucher: Right.

Mr. Fortier: I think you reviewed this history in your brief. In those days the Department of Transport merely satisfied itself, before granting or refusing a permit, that the hardware was in good condition. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. Boucher: Well, not quite. Firstly, from the late fifties DOT licenses were required. In 1963 the Department of Transport then adopted the policy—as a matter of fact, they froze licensing of cable at that time and adopted the policy of referring each application to the BBG, which is not unlike considerations that the CRTC are giving CATV applications today.

Mr. Fortier: But I think you will agree that the BBG never went into the applications in the way that the CRTC is doing today?

Mr. Boucher: I accept that.

Mr. Fortier: I think you can speak in your capacity as President of the Association to this question: did any one of your members originally envisage doing anything more than a passive role as operators of CATV systems? When you and your colleagues went into the business, what was your first intention?

Mr. Boucher: Well, if we go back in time to 1952 the prime motive at that time was certainly the primary function and this continued to be the case for the majority of systems and probably still is today.

We have statistics that indicate how many would like to actively participate in cablecasting. That is in our brief so I won't dwell on that.

In large urban centres, in a more general way, there were cable operators at that time that envisaged that role. Some in fact in the Montreal area did engage in that role. I think they have been originating since the late 1950's and never stopped and are still continuing to do so.

In that sense let us say that in the larger systems there was appreciation of this aspect.

Mr. Fortier: There was also appreciation and co-operation from the television stations and the television networks, was there not?

Mr. Boucher: I am afraid not. It went the other way.

Mr. Fortier: From the earliest days there was antipathy?

Mr. Boucher: Well, I can only speak from experience since 1958 and 1959 and I know of certain experiences where there certainly was not co-operation. I suppose if you appreciate the broadcaster, seeing this type of thing develop, he was very naturally apprehensive. In areas where co-operation was tried within the network, for instance, its efforts quickly came to an end.

Mr. Fortier: So your evidence today is to the effect you were always viewed with suspicion by the broadcasters?

Mr. Boucher: I think we were guilty until we could prove our innocence in that sense.

Mr. Fortier: The area of closed circuit broadcasting, as you say in your brief, even Mr. Juneau has implied that perhaps the CRTC did not have jurisdiction over it. Is it your view, as an association, if not the CRTC, that is a Federal administration agency, then there should be provincial agencies which should have jurisdiction over the closed circuit broadcasting?

Mr. Boucher: Well, firstly there is jurisdiction over the licensee simply because it is a condition of license today and that control exists with the CRTC.

Mr. Fortier: I don't want to get into a legal hassle.

Mr. Boucher: Let me put it this way: I think it would have to be one or the other. I don't think we could live with two masters.

Senator Prowse: Or without any?

Mr. Boucher: Without any... I think the natural realm of community programming is very restrictive in itself. I think there is a lack of appreciation that you seldom, if ever, get 100 per cent penetration in a market. The averages are given in our brief and in Montreal, I believe, it is something in the order of 16-17 per cent penetration of that market and maybe the high in Canada might be in the order of 70-75 per cent. So that I think you cannot reach everyone. By virtue of the type of signal it is primarily in existence to supply—simply because of our passive role—our customers would not be paying for this. I am not saying it would not be done.

I might sum up by saying that many cable operators are most interested in the challenge this provides for them. It is so new, we are experimenting. We don't know where it is going to lead us. We are being encouraged by the CRTC to develop but I think they are looking for flexibility just as much as we are.

Mr. Fortier: Your statement is jurisdictionally you accept to being under the thumb of the CRTC?

Mr. Boucher: If I understand the question, would it be any different if we were not in that category. I think as things are developing now, I doubt they would be any different. I doubt we could develop in such a way which would be different from what is envisaged by the CRTC, for instance.

Senator Prowse: May I have a supplementary on this? In effect you really provide a public utility, don't you?

Mr. Boucher: Well, our service is a luxury and again by limitations, it is certainly not a necessity. The more penetration restrictions there are and legally, there have been many—there have been instances where this has been tested and legally, no. In intent and fact, no, we do not; because it is a luxury item.

I think the proper way to examine it is: what are we really, if not an extension to the customer's antenna? We could be renting rooftop antennas instead of the facilities of a system. There are alternatives.

As you are well aware from presentations before this Committee, there is also the alternative of the home antenna. It is finally being appreciated by broadcasters and the Government, that if cable was denied to carry certain programming or certain programmes on stations that are available in the air, the population will merely revert to household antennas. So in that sense we cannot be considered a public utility.

Senator Prowse: Aside from the fact a person can provide their own plant, the same as I could provide my own electric light plant for that matter...

Mr. Boucher: Yes.

Senator Prowse: You pretty nearly need to have an exclusive territory. Are there cases where you have got two or three different CATV companies available to customers in the same area?

Mr. Boucher: No.

Senator Prowse: Or do you have exclusive territories? That is the point I am getting at.

Mr. Boucher: The exclusive territory is not a necessity. It has never been a fact of life from a legal point of view; but from a practical point of view, you cannot exist side by side, you see.

Mr. Allard: The Commission would allow you to live side by side. The Commission grants exclusive licenses.

Senator Prowse: Aside from them licensing, what I am getting at is the practicalities of the business. You would hardly have two or three cablevision companies laying cable and trying to go into the same areas in competition with each other. Would this be a practical type of thing? This is what I am trying to find out. Is it the type of business that, by its nature, really requires an exclusive franchise in an area in order to efficiently, effectively and reasonably serve the public in the area?

Mr. Boucher: I think from the point of view of efficiency you are quite right; but the industry is very young and who knows... There could be changes. As it is today, it is merely business sense that another cable operator will seldom—and I say "seldom" because there has been one case that I know of—wish to overwire.

Senator Prowse: He might race you for an adjacent area but he is not going into an area you are already in.

Mr. Boucher: Yes, that is right. There has been one thing that has been exaggerated somewhat in our industry. I say "somewhat" because some of the articles that have been written about the huge profits involved in cable are pure myth. I think the DBS Reports certainly bear that out.

The point is the customer can only afford so much and there are practical economies of serving a specific area and there must be a return. You must figure in your return, operating profits.

The Chairman: I would remind Senator Prowse that he is on a supplementary question.

Senator Prowse: I am still following in the same line. However, I am subject to being clipped any time.

The Chairman: We are all trespassing on Senator McElman's time, that is all.

Senator Prowse: I am sorry.

The Chairman: Go ahead, please.

Senator Prowse: The other question I had was this: I think in Ottawa there are two or three franchises where it seems to me, and this is certainly a personal opinion, it might just as well be handled as one public utility rather than two or three different ones. Do you feel that it might be possible to provide the service more efficiently and more cheaply if licenses were given the same way as electric licenses and gas franchises are given? In other words, you take what looks like an economic area and say "Okay, boy, go ahead within the limits."

Mr. Boucher: The Association, of course, has not debated or come up with a view on this point but there is a competitive element to begin with. Even if there is not a matter of territorial competition, there is certainly service competition, isn't there? So competition does exist. Your question is if it went the other way and it is very difficult to answer because a lot of study has been given to that. I will give you my personal view in this one.

There is the possibility of apathy, but bear in mind that in many markets you have to be very careful how you would choose to operate in a given territory because the economics of that territory are very important. Of course, now that we have the rising cost of electronic equipment and the general higher cost of doing business, I think you need larger and larger territories. That is why there has been no specific development in very small communities of late.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, Senator Prowse, the analogy can be drawn to raising the other question which follows logically: would it not be more economical to serve a community with telephone and power together, more economical for the residents of that community if both services were provided by one organization. They are so distinctly different, you cannot run electricity down, for instance, a natural gas pipe. You cannot use the same equipment, you cannot use the same facilities.

If I may be permitted to come back to Mr. Fortier's question regarding a public utility as to whether we indeed or in fact provide a public utility service.

If television can be considered an essential service I do believe, and I am not speaking for the Association, in certain areas we do provide a quasi-public utility service, yes.

Mr. Fortier: I should declare my interest first. I was acting for Monsieur Couture in front of the CRTC and before the Supreme Court. I realize that the matter is now fini. I think the point of view of the Association which was not expressed before the CRTC, but which was expressed by the present operator of the system in Thetford Mines, is important.

You will recall my argument. This is, as you say, a new field; it is a new area. It is a field where the entrepreneur is the one who is providing the investment and the hardware and the service. If we accept that there can be a good CATV system and there can be a bad CATV system, why should not the viewer be given the opportunity of choosing between the two? Why should he have imposed upon him a system which may not, in his community, be as good as the one they have in another community? This is without any reference to any particular market.

Mr. Boucher: Let me answer it this way: the way things are today, to obtain a license to operate in a given area, you have to go to the CRTC. The CRTC is a public forum and the CRTC is now probably the body who receives the type of letters or hears public concern that the DOT used to handle, be it problems of reception—not necessarily on cable, or just hydro noise. With the growing awareness of the public of this forum, I suggest you would not have a problem if there are public representations—in other words, if the viewer is heard.

The second part of your question still remains a practical point of economics. From a business point of view, I think probably this is the first time in history, in that particular case you mentioned, sir, where someone wanted to—I think the term used was "overwire an area." Frankly I would not do it.

Mr. Allard: It was the second time and before the CRTC took over control of our industry. This happened in Victoria in 1964 where a local operator was providing very bad service and somebody overwired and now the operator is out of business. This was permitted under the DOT.

Senator Prowse: The new fellow came in and actually took over?

Mr. Allard: Provided a much better service to the community. He took over from the original operator.

Mr. R. C. Chaston, Director of Canadian Cable Television Association: It would be a matter of interest to you, I am sure, that the CATV industry, together with the DOC and other interested parties, have been working for the last six or eight months developing quite sophisticated technical standards. These are almost complete and within the next two or three months, they will be in effect. At this point, the quality of service provided will be very clearly established and will be a reference for all systems across Canada.

Senator Prowse: Pretty well standardized?

Mr. Chaston: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: That would meet the principal objection.

Mr. Chaston: Right.

Mr. Fortier: Still it is an area where a Government agency has come down in favour of a monopolistic situation.

Mr. Boucher: I suggest perhaps that there is also a time element involved in this situation.

Mr. Fortier: The operator of the system is not competing freely in the market place with another operator.

Mr. Boucher: Not on a day-to-day basis but I would not be at all surprised, if things continue to go as they are today, that you might have competition at hearings for license renewals, for instance.

Mr. Allard: The premium we are going to have to pay for that might be very expensive indeed.

Mr. Boucher: Especially for the customer.

Mr. Allard: For the exclusive license.

Mr. Chaston: To pursue that monopoly question, one does have to ignore the fact that these signals are in the air. This was established earlier on in the conversation and we chose to ignore it. We chose to pursue another point of discussion. In fact, if one attempts to ignore the fact signals are receivable in many cases with a simple antenna, that is ignoring a very great deal.

Mr. Fortier: That is as far as the receiving aspect of the operation is concerned. Insofar as the disturbing aspect is concerned, it is not in the air any more.

Mr. Chaston: As far as the subscriber is concerned the alternative is there.

Mr. Fortier: Is that not your principal interest?

Mr. Chaston: Yes; but the customer has a choice.

Senator Prowse: Once you start to initiate programmes then, of courses, your statement does not apply, does it? In other words, once the cable system itself starts to initiate programmes and to originate programmes within what amounts to a closed-circuit system, then there is not competition insofar as that area is concerned at least.

Mr. Allard: Strictly closed circuit. I think anybody can get in the business.

Mr. Boucher: It happens in a small sense in theatres today. They call them video theatres which is no different in concept really.

Senator Prowse: I think we are wavering both of us. We are on different sides here somewhere and not quite meeting.

The Chairman: Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: Let us move to that area of your operations. It is quite evident now that licensing and licensing renewals are not only established but expected and that cable systems will move from the strictly passive role to cablecasting.

Now what do you envisage as the type of original programming that will come from this development? Will it be largely a local thing, taking in community interests, or will there be professional entertainers involved? Just what do you envisage?

Mr. Boucher: Well, we envisage precisely what you have said—community programming. Some of our members have said it is comparable to an electronic stage for the community. I think that is a very good description.

There is certainly a need in the community for this type of programming. There are very many interested groups across Canada who have been seeking air time on television stations, for instance, and because of economics just have not had an opportunity to express their views. Cablecasting seems to be an ideal tool to explore that very basic area of community programming.

For instance, in your community if you wanted the opportunity to get to the people with a message, it is very difficult to get sufficient air time; but in cablecasting activity, you would not find nearly the restrictions on air time.

Of course, other views in our industry are certainly very strong that there should be a broad representation or very broad expression of opinion from various factions or various groups in the community.

I personally cannot see it developing in competition to the type of programming you have in television stations today. But as the CRTC put it "rather it should supplement." I think this is very realistic.

Senator McElman: In other words, you don't see yourself bidding for programmes that a current broadcaster would consider buying for prime time?

Mr. Boucher: Well, this brings in a larger aspect of our industry and this is what the CRTC have expressed some views on from time to time—the east-west concept of networking. We visualize that in the immediate future and for many years to come, it will be pretty well restricted to—I hate to use the words "minority programming" but maybe minority appeal is what we are looking for.

The Chairman: Maybe "special interest" would be better.

Mr. Boucher: Yes, thank you very much—special interest programming, which would originate in one system and bicycle to another. There could be a programme exchange and I think this development is very practical and realistic.

In the sense of competition and in the sense of a network, it is very difficult to visualize this developing. If it does, it certainly could not happen in the very near future because this is not the type of role that we find ourselves in, in a practical way.

The Chairman: Mr. Allard I think wants to contribute something.

Mr. Allard: As long as the Commission will not permit us to sponsor any of the programmes that might originate on one channel in our community, it would be foolish indeed to compete with programmes that are available to broadcasters.

Senator McElman: Basically, the programming format you see ahead is one of community involvement rather than an entertainment channel?

Mr. Allard: If I could just use an expression—I believe community inter-assistance in Canada today can provide a mirror to the community which the community can use as it best sees fit.

Senator McElman: You don't see entertainment playing a large role in this type of cablecasting?

Mr. Allard: Maybe in the future when we talk in terms of pay-TV, for instance.

Mr. Boucher: One of the basic problems we have in this area is economics. We charge a nominal fee averaging, say, from 4 to 6 dollars a month. If we were to actively compete with a network for programmes, we are talking about fantastic sums of money, even if it is spread over the entire subscriber list in Canada. Obviously the subscriber has to pay for it. So now the subscribers would find himself having to pay $7.50 to $8.00 or $10.00 a month, even $20.00 a month. Then you are going to lose a large section of the population that cannot afford that kind of money—and this is in the immediate future.

I don't know how long the condition could last but I don't see any foreseeable change. Therefore you would automatically reduce the penetration you have with cable because fewer people could afford the service; and you would see the spiral goes downward as the cost goes higher and higher for more selective programming.

I cannot visualize and I don't think we generally in the industry visualize this as a possibility or as a probability, certainly not for the immediate future.

Senator McElman: This leads to the next question. Your costs are obviously going to increase as you start cablecasting, for staff and technical people and so on. Do you see this resulting in an early increase in the rates that are being charged generally?

Mr. Boucher: As conditions are today, it doesn't appear that there will be any significant increase generally in the immediate future.

Senator McElman: You feel you can handle this within your current rate structure?

Mr. Boucher: I will give you one specific example of one likely source for additional revenues required for that. It might be because now you are offering a little bit of something extra to a minority group which you may not have as subscribers, especially in ethnic regions of a city. This is one source.

I think there is natural growth involved and it is hoped, and it is the view of the industry, that if the public do accept this form of programming, we might achieve even greater penetration, which would to some degree even offset the cost of programming.

Community programming cannot be equated in any way in cost, say, to a CBC production. It is a different kind of programming and technique; although it requires very substantial investment from the point of view of the cable operator to get into cablecasting, it is certainly different from buying a $140,000 camera where we might spend $10,000 on a camera, for instance.

Senator McElman: Where, Mr. Boucher, do you anticipate getting the cameramen, for instance, and the technicians? Are you going to train up people who have no experience? Obviously this would give a pretty poor fare certainly for a time. Or do you feel that there are people available now? I understand there is a scarcity.

Mr. Boucher: This falls into two categories. These opinions were expressed at the CRTC last week. From the point of view of creative talent, certainly there is lots available. Technical talent is something else again; but of late, I think because of growth of broadcasting generally and the prospects of educational television, more schools, especially in the larger urban centres, have courses in the television arts, be they technical, operation, creative or what-have-you. Those courses are available today and they have been graduating people.

I was amazed at the amount of applications that seem to be going in from people who can obviously do a fairly good job, if not a very good job, in most major operations. That has happened to me in our own operation.

Senator McElman: I can see the possibility of getting at least semi-trained people in the larger market areas, but do you not think this is going to be a very severe problem in the smaller areas where cable now exists?

Mr. Boucher: I think the smaller areas probably will take longer to instigate or to get into cablecasting and some areas may never. We cannot say at this time. It is a bit early.

With the rapid development in videotapes and the lowering of the cost of videotapes and videotape techniques, it could be done. While there may not be a studio per se and a lot of local origination, at least there could be programmes available from a regional aspect or the closest major centre or a consortium across Canada, which does exist for community programming as such.

Mr. Allard: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see, for instance, an operator in Baie-St-Paul spending a lot of money on local origination when this potential is 1,000 subscribers. There are many areas of this nature in Canada.

I really believe, if I may use an expression, that we are whistling Dixie when we ask all operators to originate programmes in their community.

Mr. Fortier: Unless he belongs to a network and the latest proposal has been to open the door to CATV networks.

Mr. Boucher: This could develop but it is so early in the game it is very hard to do anything but give an educated guess. But what you are suggesting could very well be the possibility.

The Chairman: Are the CATV stations across the country now permitted to do their own programme origination?

Mr. Boucher: Oh, yes.

The Chairman: Could you tell us something about how much is done?

Mr. Boucher: Perhaps Mr. Allard could tell us what has been done in his region.

Mr. Allard: I believe we have some statistics on this, Mr. Boucher.

The Chairman: In this brief? I didn't see them.

Mr. Boucher: I think this was a percentage of people who are going to actively participate. I will give you the specifics as I understand them.

Mr. Chaston: We originate 35 hours of live programming each week from two studios, mainly in French, but there are also programmes catering to the Greek and Italian communities. We have 200, 300, and in some cases 350 people through the studio in a week. This has been going on over the past five years.

The Chairman: When you say 35 hours a week, what kind of stuff do you do?

Mr. Chaston: Broadly informational, educational programmes.

The Chairman: When is it on during the day?

Mr. Chaston: Broadly from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 9.30 at night.

The Chairman: Do you do it between 7.30 and 9.30 at night in prime time?

Mr. Chaston: Yes.

The Chairman: How many nights a week on prime time?

Mr. Chaston: Five.

The Chairman: Five nights a week in prime time.

Mr. Boucher: I might suggest that later this afternoon and tomorrow morning you will be hearing from two cable operators which I know are also engaged in cablecasting, and they might have a view in that respect.

The Chairman: You say that 88% of cable subscribers in Canada are represented by your Association. Of those 971,750 subscribers, what percentage would have the opportunity of seeing, on the average day, programme originations by your cable systems—in round figures?

Mr. Boucher: Perhaps I would say in the order of 15% or 20% now because of the large urban systems. However this is growing very rapidly and our survey indicates there is going to be added participation or more cablecasting in the fall.

The Chairman: Why have these people been so slow to begin their own programming?

Mr. Allard: May I answer this? Because there is no requirement, there is no incentive.

The Chairman: Surely the incentive comes from the subscribers who pay you a fee to receive the service. Surely that is the incentive to provide a service.

Mr. Allard: When you are, as I expect we are, entrepreneurs and profit-oriented, there is no justification in the community where CATV systems per se will bring us 60 to 70% density, to originate programmes and pay the costs thereof.

In areas like Montreal where CATV is not in as great a demand as, say, other communi- ties in Quebec, then it behooves us to spend money on programming to attract additional subscribers.

The Chairman: Then programme originations on cable do attract subscribers?

Mr. Allard: In certain communities, yes. In Montreal they certainly do attract additional subscribers.

The Chairman: Why Montreal? Why not in Toronto?

Mr. Allard: The residents of Montreal can receive three or four local channels and if they have a rooftop antenna two U.S. channels. CATV systems offer the four local channels and one additional U.S. channel.

There is not enough demand in, say, seven channels per se to entice people to subscribe to the cable and therefore, the cable company originates its own programmes to attract more subscribers.

Mr. Chaston: That is right. Basically also, of course, because of the two basic languages in Montreal, we have also originated these programmes predominantly in French to equate some balance between the two offerings.

Mr. Boucher: I might suggest, Senator, there is another reason. We had no idea what our fate would be with respect to the Broadcast Act until the first announcement that the CRTC made. That was barely a year ago.

To build studio facilities, to erect your systems and in some cases to create additional carriage capacity, one year is a very little time. This is one of the reasons why our survey seems to indicate there is going to be more activity. Certainly activity is planned now. I know that a tremendous amount of money has been spent on many systems to get into that kind of thing in the urban centres.

The Chairman: What has the Canadian Cable Television Association done as an association to enquire into the concern which special interest groups might have in this kind of programming on cable?

Mr. Boucher: This is not done at the Association level but is certainly being done by the individual systems. Of course they are in the community and talk to the people.

The Chairman: Would this not be a good thing for the Association to do?

Mr. Boucher: It is probably more effective that the individual operators do it on their own, at this stage of the game anyway, because their immediate concern is filling the needs of that particular community.

The Chairman: Let us take an organization like, let us say, the Canadian Bar Association. Is the cable operator in London going to approach them? Is that not a thing that should be done nationally?

Mr. Boucher: Firstly, our Association is collecting and has been collecting data and there is a dialogue within the group to appreciate in what areas the Association can be of some assistance.

The Association has, for instance, initiated dialogue with the National Film Board.

The Chairman: That is a government agency.

Mr. Boucher: Programme sources.

The Chairman: Non-government agencies?

Mr. Boucher: Well, we have approached it from the reverse.

The Chairman: You are leaving it up to the individual station?

Mr. Boucher: The individual station is the Association, isn't it? They have been feeding in this information and there is a better appreciation for the role of cablecasting. From the point of view of programme production or originating programmes, this is a very new role for us and I dare say we have not been broadcasting oriented in general.

The Chairman: One of the virtues of cable which you have talked about here today, and I agree with you, is special interest programming. I think you are perfectly right. All I want to know is who is there in Canada, either you as an association or the individual stations, who is approaching special interest groups to say "Are you interested in cable?"

Everybody talks about it; but do we in fact know it?

Mr. Boucher: Yes, we do. The individual operators obviously are experimenting with specific programmes, if they get a group saying there is an interest in this type of activity. I think in Toronto there is quite a bit of that and certainly in Montreal.

The Chairman: Could you give us an example in either Toronto or Montreal?

Mr. Chaston: You could consider the Red Cross and St. John Ambulance, that sort of thing. They have come to us and they have been running programmes for at least a year.

The Chairman: You say they have come to you. You didn't go to them. Who are some organizations you have sought out? I am not attempting to embarrass you. I am saying "Here is a great opportunity for you fellows. What are you doing about it?"

Mr. Boucher: I think it is happening, Senator Davey. We had to start from scratch and certainly, in the past year, there has been growing evidence that this type of thing is going on.

If I might speak for the companies I am associated with, we have been talking to various groups and actively thought out the type of programming and they are now doing their homework.

The Chairman: Groups like what?

Mr. Boucher: Health units on drug addiction, for instance, is one area. There is a group very interested in getting across the whole concept of regional development in Ontario, for instance. They want to explain that and get public appreciation of the problem. This is another area. They are now thinking about the type of format.

We have been approached from areas where we didn't have the faintest—one party approached us...

The Chairman: A political party?

Mr. Boucher: No. I am sorry. An individual. There seems to be a matter of a lack of appreciation as to whether people should buy a car or lease one. I think there is a real story and I think it would be a public service.

The minute we start actively then it begets more interest. I think it is a matter of experimentation and getting to know what goes, what is expected, what the community really needs.

I know for a fact that this is being researched because, after all, if the cable company is going to involve itself in programme production, he wants to make sure he has something the viewer will watch. Nobody wants to produce something—there is professional pride there.

Senator McElman: You have done some original programming and I am sure you have feed-back on it. Perhaps it would be helpful if you told us what were the highest rated shows you carried.

Mr. Chaston: Perhaps I should make it clear that we have a programme director and this is the kind of information on which he would have more accurate answers than I. Perhaps we could get this from him and give the information to the Committee later.

Senator McElman: Do you have a general idea?

Mr. Chaston: We don't get ratings the same way radio stations get ratings. We can only judge by reaction from the phone calls we have.

One programme is a pet show which has been on for more than 18 months at this point. A fellow brings a pet or a fish or whatever and talks about it at some length. It is mainly a children's show and there is a great deal of interest. The last 15 minutes are devoted to incoming phone calls, enquiries about the programme and the animal and what-all. That 15 minutes is predominantly full. There is a flood of phone calls.

There are many instances of that kind. This is the only way we can judge true reaction. Of course we get four or five hundred letters a week but basically they are phone responses of this kind and it is very obvious when it is being well followed.

I could cite special instances, such as Christmas time and this sort of thing, where phone calls are made and we have hours of phone calls coming in from children.

Senator McElman: One last question on this area. During the period that you have been doing original broadcasting, have your rates increased at all?

Mr. Chaston: No.

The Chairman: It was not necessary in consequence of that?

Mr. Boucher: May I answer the Senator, which is also in the same vein?

The Chairman: Senator McElman or myself?

Mr. Boucher: You, Senator Davey. With regards to the question as to what can we do as a group to accelerate this. This is the way I understood it.

At our next convention, which is about three or four weeks from today, a great deal of time is being spent and we have solicited aid and are encouraged by the help that we are going to receive from professional people.

We have scheduled seminars and panels to explain how to go about finding this type of programming, to educate us in the art of research and many of the questions you suggest we should be looking into.

The Chairman: Mr. Boucher, perhaps a study undertaken by this Committee might be of interest to you and you might wish to comment on it.

We decided as a Committee we should attempt to determine the degree of interest in broadcasting among special interest or minority groups. That being so, we decided to contact some of the special interest groups as well as contact a number of cable operators.

We were interested in determining how interested cablecasters would be in this kind of programming and what groups specifically might be interested in availing themselves of such an opportunity.

We wrote 150 organizations, and as this has happened very recently, I can only give you an indication. In the first group of replies, we heard from eight organizations. The eight organizations without exception all would like to develop material for programmes and assist in their production. Most would like them to be televised programs. We received replies from The Canadian Association of Real Estate Boards, the Czechoslovak National Association of Canada, the Unitarian Service Committee of Canada, Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the London Symphony Orchestra, The Farmers' Union of Alberta, the Canadian Combined Training Association Inc. and the Canadian Bar Association.

As I say that was the very initial response we have had and every one of those organizations expressed the keenest possible interest in this kind of programming.

Let me say by the same token that the cable operators we contacted, and we contacted 115 of them and we have heard back from 11. With the exception of the very small operators, people in some cases with under 250 subscribers who have indicated they didn't think it would be financially sensible, everyone above that size again indicated considerable interest.

I think it is a question of marrying the two and you might have something very worthwhile.

Mr. Boucher: I think it is a matter of time in compiling a list. Of course this must be launched at the community level rather than approaching national groups.

The Chairman: Why?

Mr. Boucher: Community levels—how many people are interested locally? If they all produce—my gosh, it will be fantastic.

The Chairman: It would be good.

Mr. Boucher: We haven't had a refusal yet to start preliminary discussions. I speak for myself, where we have approached people they have said "Yes, this sounds like a good idea." We haven't had any negative reaction at all.

The next stage is, once the facilities are available on a grander scale across Canada, will these people produce? My indications are many will.

The Chairman: Many people talk glibly about interests in this special interest programming. Many witnesses came before the Committee and said there was great interest in it. We thought: "Let's really find out."

I am satisfied from the very initial response and the beginning of the returns, that there is an enormous interest.

Mr. Boucher: We have to agree with you. That is why we are enthusiastic.

The Chairman: All right. Couldn't you be doing more? I take your point that you are going to be doing more.

Mr. Boucher: I just spent the last two weeks in Ottawa!

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, in answer to your question, what is the incentive?

The Chairman: I think the incentives is to provide a service to the people of Canada.

Mr. Allard: Other than being a good citizen?

The Chairman: I think being a good citizen is part of being a good communicator.

Mr. Allard: We are in the business. We are profit-motivated. We are. We are entrepreneurs.

Mr. Fortier: So are the CTV people.

Mr. Allard: Has anybody asked the CTV to be free of sponsorship?

Mr. Fortier: They provide 60 per cent Canadian content...

The Chairman: Perhaps I could ask you, Mr. Allard, I see the point you are making but what other function do you have besides making a profit? Are you not interested in providing a service? I am sure you are.

Mr. Allard: Oh, yes.

The Chairman: What do you use that service as?

Senator Prowse: Making a profit!

The Chairman: What do you see that service as?

Mr. Allard: providing the best service possible to the community we are serving.

The Chairman: What kind of service?

Mr. Allard: The service we are providing today must be appealing to the community since in excess of 70% per cent of the community is subscribing to the service we are providing.

The Chairman: You say in the brief, and it is repeated several places in the brief but I won't find them now, that this is primarily because your subscribers want to receive more American programmes.

Mr. Allard: Not in all areas.

The Chairman: I think it says that is the primary reason. Doesn't it say that in the brief somewhere?

Mr. Boucher: I think additional programming or variety. It works two ways. We do provide additional programmes from Canadian sources in many cable areas. For instance, there are areas where U.S. programmes are not available at all and yet cable television is thriving.

Mr. Allard: There are certain areas in Ontario and Quebec where the greatest demand is for Canadian programmes transmitted by Canadian stations.

The Chairman: Do you think the industry would be as flourishing today if it were not for the demand for American programming?

Mr. Boucher: I agree.

Senator McElman: Page 41 points up, the primary purpose of cable companies is to provide broadcasting by U.S. stations. Is this really the primary purpose?

Mr. Allard: For cable companies across Canada probably it is; but not necessarily so when you look at it on a regional basis.

Mr. Boucher: I think we put it a different way. This is the reason we exist and our customers put us there. One thing I must mention with regard to local programming, it is somewhat discouraging because there are indications that we will only appeal to a very small segment of the audience. At times, this may tend to discourage people who have artistry and certainly want their works to be seen or their efforts to be appreciated.

The Chairman: It is a small segment of the audience. As I understand cable, when Mr. Chaston does his local 35 hours of prime time cablecasting from 6 to 9.30, it is probable the majority of his subscribers are watching other channels.

Mr. Boucher: Yes.

The Chairman: The point is the programming is still available for the minority or the special interest group.

Mr. Fortier: I think Mr. Allard's statement should not go unnoticed or untested. Are you saying that the cable systems should not strive towards the broadcasting policy which the Broadcasting Act has put in black and white two years ago? You should only strive to make a profit, you are entrepreneurs and you should not be required by the CRTC to originate programmes; is that what you are saying?

Mr. Allard: I am not suggesting we should not be required to do so. First of all, I qualified my answer I made before. We are profit-oriented and it is because we are profit oriented that we are very conscious of providing to the community the best of services. Otherwise the profits would vanish.

There is nothing wrong with making a profit either. I think everybody would agree with that.

Senator Prowse: The only thing wrong is not making a profit.

Mr. Allard: Exactly.

Mr. Fortier: You said: "Why should we be asked to originate programmes? After all, what is the incentive?" Did you mean that?

Mr. Allard: No. The assumption is: let us by all means originate programmes; let us provide a further service; let us be the mirror for the community.

I agree with this but why ask us to finance the cost of the programming entirely out of revenue from CATV service per se? The assumption is we are making so much money that we can defer the cost of programming.

Quite actually most operators will place their programme manager in a straight-jacket and say "This is the budget and you are not going to spend a penny more."

Mr. Fortier: You are not disputing the fact you are making money?

Mr. Allard: Of course.

Mr. Fortier: And that you are making good money.

Mr. Allard: We are making a fair return on our investment.

Mr. Fortier: After you have set up the head end antenna, paid the rent of the common carrier, and installed wires into the individual homes, wired up the individual homes, what other costs do you have?

Mr. Allard: The costs of operating and maintaining the system and paying 52 per cent of your money to the Federal authorities.

Mr. Boucher: Are we permitted a supplementary answer on the profits?

The Chairman: You are permitted to say anything you want.

Mr. Boucher: I will ask Mr. Chaston.

Mr. Chaston: I would like to quote the DBS statistics, catalogue 56-205. In table 5 they are reporting on the net operating revenue of CATV systems broken down into groups. The groups they chose referred to the gross annual revenue. Out of 377 stations on which they are reporting as a total across Canada, the group under the 50,000 dollars heading, which amounts to 245 stations, was 65 per cent of the total loss, 209,000 dollars, which is an average of $850 loss each year for the 245 stations.

Mr. Fortier: You and I know the answer to that. The system is still in its inception and you were still shouldering capital costs.

Mr. Chaston: May I reply to what you say that all you do is put up the wire, throw in the amplifier and stand back?

Mr. Fortier: After you have written off the initial capital cost.

Mr. Chaston: In 1952 when the Montreal system went into operation, it started off with the equipment which was available at that time which carried two channels.

Since then, that system has been rebuilt five times and today we are handling 12 channels. Tomorrow we are going to have to handle 20 and when we do, we have to find many millions of dollars to replace the existing amplifiers, replace a lot of cable, and provide subscribers' equipment. This has been going on for 18 years to my knowledge.

When we get to the line with the 20 channel system, there will be 40.

Mr. Fortier: Let's not kid one another. I follow that and grant you your point. Let us take your company, National Cablevision Ltd. in Montreal.

Your principals have been forced to divest themselves of 80 per cent of their holdings because of a pronouncement which was made last year by the Cabinet and you know the sort of price which is being asked by your principals. We are dealing with millions and millions of dollars.

Mr. Chaston: Right.

The Chairman: You might let the Committee know what the price being mentioned is.

Mr. Fortier: I think I would rather Mr. Chaston tell us what the asking price is.

Mr. Chaston: I am not privy to that information.

Mr. Fortier: I have that information, Mr. Chairman, not in my capacity as counsel to the Committee. I don't think I would like to get into it.

The Chairman: After the meeting I will ask you, not in my capacity as Chairman?

Mr. Fortier: Cable systems which have been installed and which are for sale now are for sale at a very substantial asking price. Correct?

Mr. Chaston: I presume it is a realistic asking price, else they would not be purchased.

Mr. Fortier: This is all getting back to Mr. Allard's point—what is the incentive? Why should we produce programmes? We have difficulty making ends meet... no pun intended.

Mr. Allard: I didn't mean to convey this impression at all.

Mr. Fortier: I am afraid you did to me.

The Chairman: You did and I think you should have the opportunity of expressing yourself and clarifying any mistaken attitude we have.

Mr. Allard: If we are going to provide programmes in the communities where we are operating and regarded as a very efficient organization—and I believe we are because we are providing a fine service to the community—if we are going to go into the local organization branch of our operation and produce programmes for the community, I believe we should produce programmes which will have an appeal to the community and therefore it is going to be very costly indeed.

Why produce programmes at all? If we are only going to be encouraged to produce programmes, we are going to very much limit our budget for programmes.

Mr. Fortier: Let me ask you the obvious question. Are you in agreement with the CRTC proposals that you should originate some programmes?

Mr. Allard: I am in agreement with that proposal but I am not in agreement with the proposal we should not be allowed to sponsor the programmes.

Mr. Fortier: A step further, you are saying you should be given the opportunity of soliciting national as well as local sponsors?

Mr. Allard: Not national. There are enumerable merchants in Sherbrooke, for instance, who would dearly love to pay $20 a minute to advertise their wares on our system and we are not giving them the opportunity. They cannot afford to advertise their wares on the local station because it costs $200 a minute, or whatever it is.

I am suggesting we should give the merchant that opportunity and use that revenue to defray the costs of programming and improve the quality of programming as a result of deriving revenue from that source.

Senator McElman: Is it not implicit in the whole CRTC approach that if you present a type of local programming which is of good quality and has high local interest, that you can come back and ask for an increase in your subscriber rates rather than turning to sponsorship?

Mr. Boucher: As in so many cases, the CRTC wants complete flexibility and they are trying to keep the door open. What they have said is they would be willing to listen to any proposals. There has been little opportunity because this came after the original sweep of licence applications. Now they have yet to hit renewals. The CRTC want breathing time as much as we do.

Of course remember that the Association, while it is representing a majority of these views, within that majority there are various opinions which can be expressed and it could not be generally summarized. At license renewal time I am sure some interesting proposals would be made by many cable operators.

I suggest not only is cable in a position to supply non-competitive programming with today's broadcasters but it is also in a position to tap a non-competitive advertising source that do exist that don't advertise in newspapers, radio or television.

The Chairman: You have been talking about the CRTC cable regulations and so on. What is your opinion of the proposed regulations on Canadian content which the CRTC is talking about presently to the conventional broadcasters?

Mr. Boucher: Well, I think I share the view that many have expressed to the CRTC in the last couple of weeks; that quantity does not necessarily assure you quality. Quality is what is required in Canadian broadcasting.

It is a major problem. I think the CRTC are delving into it in great detail because this is a problem. How do you increase the quality and at the same time demand more quantity.

The Chairman: Do you think increased Canadian content on the part of conventional broadcasters is in the public interest?

Mr. Boucher: Well, again we are back to the viewer. If we can supply the Canadian public with more of what he wants to see, regardless of source—I am saying this can be Canadian as well as European or any other source—I think it behooves us and if we have the technical advantage to supply this need or contribute in this sense to the enrichment, I think we should. This applies to broadcasters as well as us.

I think what is happening today, there is such a change that is being experienced in the arts and broadcasting. Public appreciation is changing so rapidly I think we are all trying to catch up with it and this is good.

We recognize that Canadian programming, I think, can play a very important part in that. I think it is being amply demonstrated that there is a great amount of talent in Canada. It has to be developed. This cannot be done, as we said early in our presentation, and it doesn't appear to be the opinion either that it should be done, at the detriment of other forms of programming.

The Chairman: It says in your brief, and this is the quote we referred to earlier:

"The reality is that the primary motivation for the great majority of Canadians to subscribe to cable television is to obtain clear reception of U.S. channels."

I assume from that, the primary motivation of your organization has been to inundate Canada with American signals. Is that a fair statement? Perhaps "inundate" is wrong.

Mr. Boucher: "Inundate" is not fair.

The Chairman: I was going to say "swamp" and that would have been worse.

Mr. Boucher: We have stepped in to meet a public demand for this type of programming obviously, or else we couldn't exist.

Of course as the airways become more cluttered, there has to be a refinement in transportation between the transmitter and the receiving set. This is becoming increasingly important. I think this is where we fill the gap, so to speak. This is our business primarily, or was our business primarily.

The Chairman: As a Canadian does it concern you that there is this apparent demand for American television signals?

Mr. Boucher: I think it is winning by default, Senator. The fact that Canadian audiences or Canadian viewers are increasingly watching Canadian stations, for instance, is very encouraging.

By the CRTC's own statistics, for instance, there are only two centres where this type of increase has not been prevalent. In a market survey that the BBM did, only in two centres did this not take place and both are not served by cable.

The Chairman: They may be watching Canadian stations but they are watching American programming on those stations.

Mr. Boucher: When we keep looking at statistics there is a danger of not going far enough or going too far.

The Chairman: Either one. Right.

Mr. Boucher: In our case I think when you start dissecting how come people with antennas watch fewer American programmes and there is an increase of viewers watching American programmes with their own cable—what statistics don't indicate is why they are on cable in the first place.

Assuming they would have no cable in that community and they are all receiving their programmes on rooftop antennas, you would find that the people who subscribe to cable first are those who were watching more American programmes in the first place.

When you make a small sampling and go to a home and find why they bought cable in the first place, you might find it was because their antenna got rusty—but they were still watching American programmes.

Of course in reply to your original question whether I am concerned or not—I am concerned. I would be very concerned if we were detrimental to the identity of Canada but I do not think this is happening.

By my statement earlier I feel the opposite way. We are Canadians, we have the opportunity to compare. We have had the opportunity to choose more freely a way of life here and I think in that sense if we have gotten to appreciate why we are Canadians or Canada more quickly as a result of being exposed to the States I think it is doing a marvellous job.

The Chairman: I am not sure I follow that statement.

Senator Prowse: It is really easy.

The Chairman: It may be. I am not sure I understand it.

Mr. Chaston: I think it would be wrong to conclude from the statement which you read from our brief that it is the intention of this industry to inundate Canada with American signals.

What this says is that Canadians have subscribed to cable in order to "receive clearly the signals of U.S. stations." Most of them subscribing to our systems could already get them before. All we have done is provide them with a cleaner signal, a clearer signal, and one they could have provided themselves had they put up higher antennas or more sophisticated equipment.

Mr. Allard: This is pointed out at page 36 of our brief.

Senator McElman: Mr. Chairman, perhaps in the time left to us we could move beyond actual programming to the technical prospects for the future.

We have had the Bushnell group and Mr. Griffiths has expressed his views on what the future holds.

You have referred at page 56 of your brief to what you believe to be a possibility that some television broadcasters may choose to close down their transmitters and feed their signals directly to the cable system.

As a matter of fact Mr. Loader is quoted as saying that cable will replace the broadcast stations in heavily populated areas as a means of distributing electronic news information and entertainment.

Then at page 62 you envisage CATV hooking the public into computers, libraries and so on.

At page 63 you give what you suggest is an alternative where like the telephone you will simply dial the channel or type of programming you want.

Could you elaborate in this general area and paint for us a picture of what you actually do see as the immediate or near future and the far future of cable?

Mr. Boucher: Well, Senator, I am glad you said the "near future" and the "far future" because I would also add the "visions" as Stu Griffiths amply pointed out. If you want a vision that is it.

Senator McElman: Let us look at the near practical approaches.

Mr. Boucher: First of all immediately there are limitations to development.

Firstly any change or any departure from the present concept, such as offering many more channels and especially the switch concept where you dial a programme—we are talking about millions if not billions of dollars, to institute the hardware that is necessary.

Again we are dependant on the public acceptance and their ability to afford it to make this practical. For the very reason I was mentioning earlier about spiralling of receipts, the fact is that if the service becomes too expensive, so that people cannot afford it, then of course, you have a downward spiral. This is a major obstacle. I think this is one that must be overcome first.

For the next years I think most of us agree that while there will be the same amount of technical improvements and probably this introduction of local programming, along those lines I think cable will continue to develop; but once we reach the point where the hardware concept must be changed, it requires a tremendous amount of investment.

That problem will be very realistic and may well dictate a major national decision at that time but it is very premature to speculate what it might be as far as the futuristic pie-in-the-sky attitude by some people or very practical ideas. So again we are back to economics. The present limitations on computers, for instance, the concept of a cable system as such—I don't think it offers the same reliability which is required for data transmission. This is not the type of hardware we have in cable systems today but it is more than adequate and can do even a better job with the research developments that are presently being instigated; the quality of television can probably be improved.

I think the next step would probably be the additional carriage of channels but limited to the spectrum of cable as we know it today. When we talk about 20 channels, in practice it doesn't appear that we can carry more than 16 or 17, if that many.

I look at Mr. Switzer back there and I think he could answer much better than I can.

The fact we will have these limitations and that they can only be overcome by tremendous expenditure, I think, is what we are hung up with right now.

From the point of view of visions I could speak all day but I don't think it is nearly that practical to explore definite areas. I think our views as an association, of course, are in the brief in the sense that if we could have developed a technical aspect or practicability of such things even more, we probably would have.

The Chairman: I think Mr. Allard wanted to add something.

Senator McElman: Before he does could we look at the next 5 to 10 years. Do you see the real possibility of what Mr. Loader suggests of broadcast stations, as we now know them, actually being replaced. You say somewhere in your brief some broadcasters will choose—one would probably add that they are compelled to choose—to close down their transmitters and go on to cable. How soon do you see that happening?

Mr. Boucher: Within the next five years, I doubt that broadcasters will be compelled to choose. Within the next five years I am sure you will see some form of applications from someone who wants to start a broadcast service using cable facilities. I think this is a very great probability.

Senator McElman: Then this would seem to bear out the very real concern that the CRTC expressed that as this conversion period takes place, considering service other than in the metro areas, there is a very real need for strong regulation.

Mr. Boucher: I think what would prompt a real threat is when you have a system where you dial a programme. Then you have relatively an unlimited channel capacity.

As you know the broadcast industry is really studying itself as to what the public really wants. I think there seems to be an earnest effort generally at finding out what their future role can be.

The only difference, for instance, in a broadcaster operating on a cable system, providing he is reaching the same audience, is really the fact that he is not using the airways but he is going directly to the home.

All we have done is replace air with a piece of copper. That is providing we have the same audience reach. That is the problem. We don't have that audience reach today.

One thing which is very important is to appreciate that cable owes its existence to the TV set. It is connected to the TV set. It is financed by the person behind the TV set. Whereas broadcasting is coming from a totally different direction. It is financed from the person who sponsors the programme.

There is certainly no dove-tailing as yet. I am not sure this is not possible but I would like to term that as a vision in the future. I am sure as we learn more about ourselves, learn more about our problems, being broadcasters or cable operators, that natural evolution will take place. Whether it will be along those lines or not I don't know but our Association certainly states very clearly that—to use my own words—we are guilty until we can now prove ourselves innocent.

While we can contribute to the Canadian television system, and it is not an insignificant contribution, we do not, I contend, have the same financial effect as people seem to think we would have. I think it follows naturally we will get together somewhere along the line but who knows what the future will bring. It is a very interesting area.

Senator Prowse: The camel's nose is already in the tent.

The Chairman: Do any of the Senators have any other questions? We have other witnesses.

Mr. Fortier: I would like to know what members of the Association are going to do during the blackout periods that CRTC is recommending.

Mr. Boucher: It is merely a recommendation. I am glad you said that. Certainly the CRTC indicated to us they are quite prepared to sit down and discuss the possibilities.

Mr. Fortier: What are you going to tell them when you sit down with Mr. Juneau and Mr. Boyle?

Mr. Boucher: I think we haven't said very much yet but I think it is being said for us—that people will revert back to antennas. This is our first opinion, of course, and if we were the only voice and the first one to say it it would be different but it is a general opinion.

Mr. Chaston: I would like to throw in a supplementary answer to Senator McElman's last point.

The CRTC concern, of course, and the broadcasters' concern is not so much with the transmitter per se. That is just a piece of electronic equipment. It is the broadcasting, the programmes they prepare and the advertising they put in it.

The CATV is no threat to that programming, which is their business. Really a transmitter in the broadcasting sense is almost a necessary evil.

The broadcaster has studios and film equipment and telecine equipment and vast resources for producing programmes. It all comes funnelling through one odd bit of equipment which is different from anything else they use, electronically different in every way.

It is very simple because it is the only way they can get all the work and advertising in the programmes out to the viewer.

Now replacing the transmitter with a piece of copper wire, the CATV or whatever the system, is a different way of transmitting the signal. The CATV industry may replace some transmitters but it certainly would not replace what is behind those transmitters, that is the broadcasting industry.

Senator McElman: I appreciate that fully as long as we are talking about the urban audience.

Mr. Chaston: I think Mr. Boucher qualified his answer that possible replacement of the transmitter itself only could take place provided the copper wire was reaching the same audience, and that is another matter which would have to be looked at at that time.

Senator McElman: Of course CRTC is looking at the non-urban audience in its considerations here.

Mr. Chaston: Sure.

Senator McElman: What you say is totally valid if we are looking only at the urban audiences.

Mr. Chaston: All I have said is transmitters might be replaced but certainly it would not be a threat to the broadcast industry if transmitters were replaced.

Senator McElman: And if you could provide the same audiences.

Mr. Chaston: Yes.

The Chairman: Are there any remaining questions that anyone has.

Mr. Fortier: I realize this is covered in the brief but, Mr. Boucher, could you tell us succinctly what the members of the Association have to say against the common carriers, or for them, for that matter.

The Chairman: This is dealt with at some length in the brief.

Mr. Boucher: That is a very broad area and we could speak for hours on that. I think the remarks we have made pretty well sum up what the general membership thinks and I think I should leave it at that.

The Chairman: Do you want to sum them up for the Committee?

Mr. Boucher: I have one supplementary answer and that is another limitation which arises when we are talking about the future. It is a very real illustration of one of the stumbling blocks. It is the fact of the huge investment that has been made by the Canadian public in television receivers which can only pick up 12 channels; and this is a huge investment in black and white sets and is today, what is restricting growth in colour TV sales.

Mr. Fortier: I was going to restrict my question and say: supposing the CRTC assumes jurisdiction over the common carriers and the rates which they charge CATV operators, would that go a long way towards meeting your criticism?

Mr. Boucher: You mean the CRTC?

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Boucher: I think this would probably fall into a different category because DOC are conducting expensive telecommunications study which deals in the hardware. To answer the question properly we would have to separate our type of business which falls into two categories. One is hardware for broadcasting and the other one is software, the product that the programme produces.

In our case it is the variety to the antenna for the programme and the extension of the antenna. In that context the hardware will go to the DOC because they are doing research and regulations on that aspect now.

Mr. Fortier: The Department of Communications?

Mr. Boucher: Yes, the Department of Communications.

The Chairman: I have one last question: does the industry suffer from bad public relations?

Mr. Boucher: Mr. Chaston says they are never good enough.

The Chairman: Let me explain that this was not a question I intended to ask but in listening to your oral statement, a copy of which I have here, you say:

"...some press reports on these proposed guidelines have been based upon premature and, in our view, inaccurate conclusions formed by interpreting the CRTC's announcement in the worst possible light. The financial community has also reacted adversely."

And at page 2 you say: "... the CRTC has been persuaded that the Canadian broadcasting industry was in danger of extinction..."

Why have all these things happened?

Mr. Boucher: I think we have been sitting back doing our own thing and we have been amply busy keeping up with technical developments and we have been telling people right along that we had a service to offer but I am afraid we didn't really tell the world what it was we were doing and we are only recently examining ourselves and now defining a role.

You are quite right. I think the public relations could be better. Of course, any public relations could be.

The Chairman: Mr. Chaston says they could always be better.

Senator McElman: On the matter of rates, Mr. Boucher, I understand that in some of the urban communities now, as new apartment buildings are constructed, they are wired for cable and it is part of the rental agreement that you pay for that service whether you use it or not. Are you familiar with this arrangement?

Mr. Boucher: Well, that sounds a bit familiar to a presentation made to the CRTC. To my knowledge I don't think this is general practice.

Could you comment on that?

Mr. Chaston: This would be out of our control. Some landlords, we understand, are doing that.

Senator Prowse: Right in Ottawa.

Senator McElman: You have no arrangement with any of these apartment organizations for such installations?

Mr. Chaston: Not to force it, no. If they want the installation we come to a contractual agreement with the landlord to provide the service on a bulk basis to him for provision to his tenants.

We obviously make such an arrangement but whether he charges for it and how much he charges for it, is a matter for his own concern. It is between him and his tenant.

The Chairman: Gentlemen, in expressing the appreciation of the Committee may I repeat what I said in my opening comments. Yours is a new industry, it is an exciting industry, it has great potential for its owners and its operators and hopefully for the people. This is why we have been particularly grateful to have you here. Thank you so much.

If you stay around for the next day or two and hear the discussions and have anything to add to your brief; or if you would like to make any comments on what you have said today, we would be grateful to receive it. Thank you very much.

May I say to the Senators that we will reconvene at 4.35 in eight minutes, to receive a brief from Maclean-Hunter Cable TV Limited. Thank you.

—Upon resuming at 4.35 p.m. April 22nd, 1970.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call the session back to order. The other brief we are receiving this afternoon is from Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited.

Seated on my immediate right is the Chairman of the Board of Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited, Mr. Donald G. Campbell. Seated on Mr. Campbell's right is Mr. A. Ross MacGregor, the General Manager of Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited.

On my immediate left is Mr. Fred Metcalf who is the President of Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited and on his immediate left at the end of the table is Mr. Israel Switzer who is the Chief Engineer for Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited.

Mr. Campbell is also of course an Vice-President of Maclean-Hunter Limited and some Senators and others will recognize Mr. Campbell from his earlier visits to the Committee.

I think, Mr. Campbell, you are sufficiently familiar with our procedure that I don't need to outline that procedure beyond saying that perhaps now you could proceed now with your oral statement. Then following that oral statement, we would like to question you on your oral statement, on your written brief, and on some other matters which are of interest and concern to us. Thank you for coming back.

Mr. Donald G. Campbell, Chairman of the Board, Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited: Mr. Chairman and Senators, with your approval I thought that I would like to take about two minutes to tell you the relationship between the parent company Maclean-Hunter Limited and the Cable Company, Fred Metcalf will then speak for two to three minutes on the background of the industry; Ross MacGregor will deal with programming; and then Mr. Switzer will deal with the technical and research side of the business—just more or less to introduce ourselves—if that is all right with you.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Campbell: One thing just before getting into this very brief presentation—Mr. Boucher was kind enough to indicate in his preliminary remarks or during the session that there were some operators within the Cable Association that didn't necessarily agree with some of the comments in the presentation of the brief.

I think we would like to go on record as saying there are numerous things, particularly some of the philosophies, that we do not agree with.

Having said that I will now go into my remarks. The parent company of Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited is Maclean-Hunter Limited. Maclean-Hunter Limited entered broadcasting in 1960 in the field of radio and television but its first venture into cable was not until 1967. Our company policy is to stick to the communication field and cable is undoubtedly a communications medium.

The cable company financed its original growth and expansion through loans and grants from MH Limited.

As major acquisitions took place in such cities as Hamilton, London and Peterborough, it was financially necessary to take in a new partner and after much searching a Canadian chartered bank was selected.

However, when the required approvals came through from the CRTC, they were conditional upon the bank not being our partner.

At that stage it was essential that re-financing take place and the public company route was followed in early 1970. A public issue was placed and we now have 2,200 Canadian common shareholders, 1000 preferred shareholders and 1,200 debenture shareholders.

The issue was successful and held up quite well in spite of general market conditions until the recent cable guidelines announcement came out on April the 10th.

We feel very strongly that cable companies have a role to play in community broadcasting and eventually in regional and national broadcasting as well as providing improved signals, variety and educational channels.

We also feel, however, that if we are to carry out our responsibilities as we certainly must, and we look forward to them, then the investment community must have a confidence in the regulation of the industry.

We believe in the Canadian Broadcasting system and hopefully we will play a major part in its future development. I will now ask Mr. Metcalf to deal a little bit with some of the history of this industry.

The Chairman: Mr. Metcalf?

Mr. Frederick T. Metcalf, President, Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited: Mr. Chairman, Honourable Senators, our brief doesn't deal at any length with the history of our company and the beginning of cable television and because of that, I would like to quickly make four points.

Firstly, the weakest link in the broadcasting cycle has always been the antenna, the connection between the broadcast station and the television viewer's set. Because a real problem existed and still exists, cable television was born and has flourished.

When we started in Guelph in 1952 we brought television to the city. Few people had even seen it before we showed it to them, and we showed it to the at that time with only two stations available—CBLT Toronto which had just gone on the air and WBEN-TV Buffalo.

Secondly, some communities had peculiar problems which were solved by cable television. For instance in 1956, I was asked by a group of citizens of Huntsville to do a study of the feasibility of the cost of a cable system in the town. It was an urgent matter because for several months prior an enterprising young television set dealer had been receiving Channel 3, Barrie on a high hill south of town, and rebroadcasting it illegally and using this to sell television sets.

Suddenly the RCMP was at his door and the illegal repeater was shut down. To cut this story short we did the survey, a local group found it too expensive but the town council asked my company to proceed. Though we had considerable difficulty financing it, we eventually succeeded.

Thirdly, in all our northern systems we brought in the second Canadian service as soon as it was available and in every case this is still the only way they receive that service.

Fourthly, there is a much quoted myth that cable TV systems do not go broke. I suggest that they review history, as I know it, in my personal experience. I bought the system in Orillia because it was bankrupt. I bought the system in Midland because it was in deep trouble, financially and technically.

A few years ago when I was President of Rediffusion Incorporated we purchased the subscribers of the second system in Victoria-ville because it was going broke.

In the mid 1950's Famous Players of England established a system in Kitchener, Ontario and had several hundred subscribers. It finally went bankrupt and the P.U.C. had to cut the cable down from the poles. These are from personal knowledge, four instances with which I was involved.

There are plenty of others across the country, I am sure. The point that is, in each of these instances, failure was due to a faulty service, poor reception. The people would not buy the service so it went broke. Cable television, whatever else it is or it may become, is primarily a reception service and it depends on reception for its economic base.

In 1966, though my companies were doing pretty well, it became obvious to me that the future of cable television lay in the direction of the larger companies. Indeed, this was pointed up by the fact that the American capital, which had come in in the form of Famous Players and CBS, had become the largest companies in the business.

I looked around and I joined Maclean-Hunter Limited, because it was 100 per cent Canadian company and because of their record over the years. I was going to become very closely associated with them and I wanted somebody I could live with.

I chose Maclean-Hunter, and I chose it because of the ability to finance the large expenditures which were going to be obviously needed to be with it, and where we could hire competent management and technical skills and to get the required equipment and so on.

I think now we will ask Mr. MacGregor to talk to us about the other areas.

The Chairman: Mr. MacGregor.

Mr. A. Ross MacGregor, General Manager, Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited: Mr. Chairman, and Honourable Senators. As has been pointed out several times earlier today, it was May 13th of last year that Pierre Juneau, the Chairman of the Canadian Radio and Television Commission, issued a public statement encouraging cable television systems to assist in the development of a community identity through locally produced programmes.

Such locally produced programmes, the Commissioner said, did complement rather than compete with programming already available to the community through television and commercial movie houses.

This new challenge was accepted by Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited and our first community programme was produced and shown to our subscribers in Ajax, Ontario in June of 1969, less than 20 days after the CRTC announcement.

Since that time, we have established origination facilities in all of our 16 cable television systems. We have invested from $250,000 in programme origination equipment and we have allocated $200,000 as our programme operating budget for the current year.

Our total programming expenditures for this year will represent almost 10 per cent of our total projected revenue for the year. This budget will enable us to provide regularly scheduled programmes on all of our systems, while we are still in the process of building up our programme schedules. We produced, just as a matter of interest, 87 hours of programming in our systems last week and we expect that that figure will continue to increase.

The great majority of our programming, to date, has been designed to open a window in the community. Our facilities are available to all non-commercial groups within the communities to convey their message to their neighbours. We have produced programmes for such minority interest groups as the YMCA in Midland, the Art Gallery of Owen Sound, the Chamber of Commerce of Peterborough, the Boy Scouts Association in Guelph to name just a few.

We have also done extensive programming in foreign languages for minority ethnic population groups.

In Guelph for example, we have a regular daily Italian newscast because they have a substantial Italian population. We also have Dutch and German language community programmes operating in that system.

When we begin service in the Parkdale area of Toronto, which is presently under construction, as that area has a particularly high number of ethnic groups, we expect to programme individually to those groups as much as possible.

We are just in the process now, Mr. Chairman, of preparing our reply to your questionnaire of minority interest programming and I think you will find when you receive this, that we have already gone a long way in doing that.

We do believe however that cable television can perform an even greater public service by producing and distributing programmes of regional and national interest. To that end, we have formed a new company called Programmes Cable—Canada Limited/Limitée.

This company will produce programmes and programme series; it will commission the production of programme series by individual cable television systems and by other production houses; and it will provide distribution facilities to cable television systems across Canada.

We have invited two of the other major Canadian cable television companies to participate equally with us in the ownership and operation of this company.

We are confident that this trilevel approach to programme production and distribution, that is community programming, regional programming and national interest programming, will enable the Canadian television industry to make a significant contribution to the unity and the cultural strength of Canada.

We at Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited are prepared to offer active leadership towards that goal.

I would now like to ask Mr. Israel Switzer our chief engineer to comment briefly on the technical side of cable television operations.

The Chairman: Mr. Switzer.

Mr. Israel Switzer, Chief Engineer, Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited: Senator Davey, Honourable Senators. My personal experience in cable television goes back to 1954. That year I got together with some friends in Western Canada and started a cable television system on the Prairies and in 1955 we built the first cable television system on the Prairies at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan.

Subsequently we built cable systems in Estevan and Weyburn in Saskatchewan and in Medicine Hat and Lethbridge in Alberta. My own professional skills and experience developed over the years and I soon found that I had personally outgrown the smaller systems and the smaller opportunities of that time on the Canadian Prairies.

The regulations at that time did not permit the development of cable television in major prairie cities. I began to do cable television and engineering consulting work for larger systems in Eastern Canada and the United States. Maclean-Hunter's decision in 1967 to enter the cable television field gave me the opportunity to join a company, where a professional approach to cable television engineering was appreciated and desired, and was supposed to operate on a scale that would permit the full exercise and development of a professional approach for cable television engineering problems.

Looking after the technical problems of Maclean-Hunter's 16 systems and nearly 100,000 subscribers requires local technical staff numbering almost 100 backed up by a head office technical staff of eight people.

In addition we employ four technical and university students on a technical internship basis. We have a total $200,000 worth of test and maintenance equipment; and our Toronto head office lab is one of the best equipped of any cable television companies in North America.

The support of the company in terms of personnel and equipment has enabled us to train and maintain our own staff of cable TV technicians at every level. Our company has been responsible for some significant technical innovations and developments in the cable television field. These include the development of aerial photography techniques for the design and mapping of cable television systems, the use of field X-ray equipment for inspection of cables and fittings and detailed studies of the problem of hum in cable TV systems.

I have been personally active in technical training for cable television. The company has made it possible for me to give night school lectures in cable television technology at the George Brown College in Toronto and more recently to lecture in special cable television seminars at the Pennsylvania State University.

Our company is also making extensive use of our recently installed program production facilities to produce technical training video tapes for upgrading the skills and knowledge of our field technical staff.

The facilities, staff and opportunities of this kind can only be provided by cable television operations on a significantly large scale. Small individually operated cable TV systems cannot provide the resources to develop and practice the cable television technology which is demanded by the public today.

The technical side of cable television is often taken for granted by regulatory authorities. This company knows from experience that technical performance cannot so be taken for granted. It spends a significant part of its resources and time on the development and practice of the cable television engineering act.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

Mr. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, that finishes our brief presentation.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Campbell. It was a brief presentation but it covered I think quite a lot of ground and we are grateful to you for it. I think the questioning this afternoon will commence with Mr. Fortier.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Campbell, you raised the issue of confidence from within the investment community.

Mr. Campbell: Yes, sir.

Mr. Fortier: Far be it from me to set myself up as an expert in investment counselling, but I think a point should be made. First of all the whole market is excessively weak at the moment, is it not?

Mr. Campbell: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: The second point which I offer in the form of a question is this. Standard Broadcasting is a company listed on the stock exchange. It is in the communications field, and at the moment as you know, it is one of the weakest spots on the market and yet it operates the Canadian Talent Library?

Mr. Campbell: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Which should have enjoyed a boom as a result of the CRTC's proposals. So I suggest to you that your reference to the reaction within the investment community to the Maclean-Hunter issue following the CRTC announcement of April 10th, may have been a little bit over-emphasized.

Mr. Campbell: I don't believe so, Mr. Fortier, and I think Standard Broadcast with CFRB is a different situation. Canadian Talent Library is a non-profit operation so I don't see why investors would be...

Mr. Fortier: No, but CFRB and CJAD, which are the main stations in the Standard group, as they told us last week, will have no trouble at all meeting the minimum Canadian content requirements.

Mr. Campbell: I understand that is what they said but perhaps the investment community doesn't perhaps believe that this may be a problem. That is the only way I can interpret it.

Mr. Fortier: Well, can you tell us...

Mr. Campbell: I do know from talking to major investment houses associated with the broadcasting community, they are spending a great deal of time in the broadcasting industry. They have analysts now who do nothing but, and we see a great deal of this. But first of all there is a natural reluctance for any investment in a regulated industry, but I think there is more so now, because of the uncertainty of the proposed regulations in our particular industry.

Mr. Fortier: Yes. I certainly cannot disagree with that statement that any regulated industry has a little bit more difficulty getting going on the street...

Mr. Campbell: Right.

Mr. Fortier: But I am sure that this is a problem that you were prepared to live with when you decided to go public with a cable company.

Mr. Campbell: I think I indicated in my presentation that we didn't have too much choice about going public. Not that we regret having gone public, but we had no alternative.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Campbell, do any distinct and tangible advantages flow to the cable company due to the fact that Maclean-Hunter is involved so widely in the communications field—magazines, newspapers, radio and television?

Mr. Campbell: I think I might refer to Mr. Metcalf to give an unbiased answer on that question, Mr. Fortier.

The Chairman: Mr. Metcalf?

Mr. Metcalf: Well I can say very definitely that there certainly are some advantages, and one of them is that Don Campbell is chairman of the Board. I mean he is a pretty levelheaded guy and he is a Scotchman so he keeps a very close eye on the expenses.

The Chairman: Were you expecting that question, Mr. Campbell?

Mr. Campbell: No, I wasn't and I am an Irishman anyway!

The Chairman: Would you like to rephrase the question, Mr. Fortier?

Senator Prowse: You mean you are a Scotchman from Ireland?

Mr. Campbell: Yes, sir.

Senator Prowse: My mother would love you!

Mr. Fortier: Aside from the advantages of having Mr. Campbell—advantages which I am sure are numerous and justified—what other advantages would Maclean-Hunter Cable...

Mr. Campbell: Well, basically let me say this. We operate in a very basic way, so that it is only when they are asked that they supply assistance to us. But as we noted in our brief, we do from time to time ask for assistance and advice on such matters as sales and advertising programmes, art work, research, personnel recruiting, printing et cetera.

Mr. Fortier: Could you, given your extensive background in cable television, Mr. Metcalf, and given the choice which you made freely as you put it, going to bed with Maclean-Hunter, would you or do you suggest that any fledgling cable company, which has ambitions, should seek as a partner one who is already involved in the media?

Mr. Metcalf: Well, let me put it this way. When we started in cable television, you couldn't interest anyone in putting up a buck, believe me. For many years, it was the same way and this is how come people like Sruki Switzer and myself, in many instances, started companies and ended up on the small end of the ownership—because you had to get the money from some other person or company whom you could interest in it. Hence the very large position of Famous Players and CBS.

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Metcalf: Now, in the last few years, the banks have begun to realize that brick and mortar are not the only things which make a going concern, and so it has become easier to get a certain amount of money. But to get the kind of money which I was looking for in order to build the kind of company which I felt we needed, which was going to be 100 per cent Canadian, I had to look for somebody and I had to look for somebody with foresight and someone who was interested. Maclean-Hunter was interested in the communications field; so they were the logical choice.

Mr. Fortier: Could it be also that the CATV industry has moved from an era where the technicians ruled supreme to one where the technicians and the broadcasters now work hand in hand?

Mr. Metcalf: Well, I could answer that I think by saying that Sruki Switzer and I have never seen eye to eye on this thing. We quite often disagree on many things; and one of them is that Sruki has always said that the product isn't good enough and I said "It is selling, isn't it, then it is good enough."

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Metcalf: But this constant battle doesn't do us any harm.

Mr. Switzer: We have arguments over the budget.

Mr. Metcalf: But we don't agree that the technicians rule supreme, at least I wouldn't think that Sruki would agree.

Mr. Fortier: But there used to be a time when he did you know as far back as 1952...

Mr. Metcalf: Well, I am a salesman, I am not a technician.

Mr. Fortier: Well, maybe Mr. Switzer would care to comment on it. You have done it and you were a technician as you have described yourself albeit an excellent one. Did you have any experience in broadcasting prior to...

Mr. Switzer: Well, prior to 1968, when the current broadcasting Act brought cable TV under the jurisdiction of the CRTC, cable television was concerned with a strictly technical function. It was an economic alternative to owing your own antenna.

Mr. Fortier: Right.

Mr. Switzer: And up to that time, it was considered that cable TV perhaps fulfilled the same position in the whole television industry as a manufacturer of television sets might or a manufacturer of roof top antennas; it was on a purely business and a technical basis.

Mr. Fortier: And, of course, since 1968 because of the Broadcasting Act, it has evolved; hence the association you have made with a group versed in communications generally and broadcasting in particular?

Mr. Campbell: I would like to answer that because we would be misleading you if we said yes. The fact of the matter was that it had been evident for many years that we could fulfill a role in community affairs but we didn't, and in many instances because we were afraid of stepping on the toes of the broadcasters and we felt that our area was as a passive reception alternative to the roof top aerial.

Mr. Fortier: But you were prepared prior to 1968, prior to the most recent CRTC guidelines or proposals, to originate programming from within your system?

Mr. Campbell: Well, we discussed it many times and decided against it.

Mr. Fortier: Because you feared the BBG?

Mr. Campbell: Well, because the way they were going to finance it, we could put advertising on and consequently we would obviously have been operating on a local level. With a local radio station there, we would be treading on the toes of the local broadcaster.

Mr. Fortier: Well, a question that comes to mind is who could have prevented you from doing it then?

Mr. Campbell: Well, we were doing quite well as we were, and we were afraid that we would create something that we would be quite happy not to have. So we just let sleeping dogs lie.

The Chairman: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Fortier, a very short one. I am just wondering what Mr. Switzer did in 1955 in Prince Albert. You sold cable to the citizens of Prince Albert as an alternative to an aerial, is that correct?

Mr. Switzer: We started in 1955 in Prince Albert before the local station was built.

The Chairman: Well, I was going to ask you that. What on earth did you do?

Mr. Switzer: Well, if you know the geography of Prince Albert, most of the city of Prince Albert is built in the valley of the North Saskatchewan River. Senator Prowse, you are familiar with Edmonton and it is exactly similar as though a city had been built on the river bottom...

Senator Prowse: Down at the bottom.

Mr. Switzer: Yes.

The Chairman: Well, I am familiar with Prince Albert as well, but I would like to know what you did?

Mr. Switzer: There was a television station in Saskatoon and Prince Albert really isn't all that far from Saskatoon, and reception on the top of the hill was quite good and all it took was a 60 foot tower on the top of the hill and everybody that lived on the top of the hill, on the south hill in Prince Albert, got good reception.

We built a cable television system in the river valley and it is in the order of 100 to 125 feet in that valley, but is was enough particularly for a high band station like Saskatoon which operated on Channel 8 to throw a substantial shadow over that river valley.

We put up a 60 foot tower on the top of the hill and we ran a cable down into the valley, we built a cable network for the people who lived in the valley and we rented them the use of our antenna of the top of the hill.

The Chairman: How many subscribers did you have?

Mr. Switzer: This is going back—we left Prince Albert about '55 or '56, but I believe we had as many as 4,000 subscribers.

The Chairman: If you don't mind me asking, what did you charge them?

Mr. Switzer: We charged at that time I think $4.50 a month for one channel service and one channel was typical for a cable TV system in those years.

The Chairman: One channel that wasn't on much of the time either I guess, was it?

Mr. Switzer: Well, in those years Channel 8 had a fairly comprehensive service, as I recall, but then when the local television station was built, the local radio station decided to go into the TV business. Incidentally that local radio was owned and is still owned by Ed Rawlinson, a partner with us in that cable TV system. When they built the local television station, they sold their interest in it, but that is another example which can be added to Mr. Metcalf's, examples of cable TV systems which substantially went broke. That cable TV system went rapidly downhill within months of the opening of the television station.

The Chairman: Rapidly downhill with no pun intended!

Mr. Switzer: And that system is essentially more abundant today.

Mr. Campbell: Senator Davey, may I add to the answer by Fred Metcalf?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Campbell: I would like to tell Mr. Fortier that we joined forces, Fred Metcalf and Maclean-Hunter, in 1967 and the Broadcasting Act of course didn't come into being until 1968—I think that is very important.

Mr. Fortier: I don't think I should direct this question to Mr. Campbell because we have already heard his answer but I will try it on Mr. Metcalf. Are you concerned about the crossmedia ownership which now finds itself under the wings of the Maclean-Hunter group of companies?

Mr. Metcalf: Not at all, no. I think that the interest of Maclean-Hunter Limited and the interest of Maclean-Hunter Cable Television Limited are sufficiently widespread that there is no problem involved in too much control of media in any given community, let's say. I don't see any problem there at all.

Mr. Fortier: Your brief makes clear that Maclean-Hunter is still expanding the cable...

Mr. Campbell: Hopefully.

Mr. Fortier: What are you aiming at ultimately, Mr. Campbell?

Mr. Campbell: Well, it has been announced that we have an application in for a system currently owned by Famous Players, which we have acquired subject to the approval of the CRTC in Hamilton. The reason we are doing that is that we already have a small system in Hamilton. This one is adjacent to it and we could put two ends into one, provide a superior service, do a reasonable programming job, whereas with 6,000 subscribers there, we don't feel we really can. You would have to either get in or get out. But that is one area which we are trying to develop.

We are talking about some other systems in the Province of Quebec which we have not concluded any agreements on, and we have an application in for Burlington on the record. We haven't plotted really as to where we feel we should stop. We certainly haven't come to that crossroad yet.

Mr. Fortier: Are you aiming at a national network?

Mr. Campbell: No, I don't think so. But I think we would like to be part of a national network and that of course if the idea of Programmes Cable-Canada Limited, where we, along with some associates would be providing the kind of service that would be acceptable across the country.

The Chairman: I was going to ask you who your associates are. If that is not something you don't wish to announce...

Mr. Campbell: Well, we haven't entered into any formal agreement. We have just has preliminary discussions and had their preliminary consent that they are interested in such a company.

The Chairman: Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: Now that the CRTC's recent announcement has opened the door to the creation of a cable network, do you foresee that it will become a reality in the near future?

Mr. Campbell: Not in the near future, but I do in the future, definitely. I think we will start off probably as television started off. We will start to bicycle, and once we have sufficient customers on the system that you can afford to do more than bicycle, we will get into microwave, perhaps or something of that order.

Mr. Fortier: You spoke of the philosophy of the Canadian Cable Television Association—some of its philosophies which you could not accept. One of the ones—I don't have the reference here in the brief—but it is where they say the existing television stations, as we know them today, will throw in the towel in the near future and just feed their programs into the cable network. Is this one of the philosophies with which you do not agree with?

Mr. Campbell: That is true. We do not agree with that one and will not agree with it for many years to come. We still have 25 per cent of the population in Canada living in rural districts. I don't know how you are going to get cable out to them for many, many years to come; but they must be serviced and therefore the broadcasters are going to fulfill this role.

Mr. Fortier: I suppose that some people said the same thing about electricity and the telephone not so long ago.

Mr. Campbell: Well, we don't say that it won't ever happen. But you did ask us specifically, and I think the question was, could it happen in five years? Well, I certainly don't think it will and I don't think really any of us see it happening in the next 10 years. There are so many other ramifications tied up in the broadcasting system that we have today that I just can't see that happening. I can't make it any more definite than that. I just don't believe that this is going to happen.

The Chairman: Mr. MacGregor?

Mr. MacGregor: I was just going to add that I think it will lead to a great deal more co-operation between broadcasters and cable operators. I think we will find ways where we can serve a margin by getting together and making a joint presentation.

Mr. Fortier: I would be very interested in hearing you expand further on this co-operation between the broadcasters of today and the cable operators of tomorrow.

Mr. MacGregor: Yes, sir.

The Chairman: Yes, you go ahead and we will come back to Senator Prowse.

Mr. MacGregor: In the past few years we have noticed a marked change in the attitude of broadcasters towards cable operators. Now the broadcasters have accepted cable as another medium. I think that with that trend toward more co-operation, we will be able to approach service situations in which we may be able to co-operate with the broadcasters perhaps in the extension of second service in certain areas. In other areas, where they just may be able to provide a rural distribution of the second service, we could contribute to the cost of getting the service to the community.

I think there are many areas where we could co-operate with the broadcasters and I think this is quite evident from the fact that large numbers of broadcasters have already taken positions in the cable industry.

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

The Chairman: Is there co-operation now between conventional broadcasters controlled by Maclean-Hunter and cable operators controlled by Maclean-Hunter?

Mr. MacGregor: Not specifically.

Mr. Campbell: I might just point out, Senator, that the television company in Calgary, which we own, is part of an application for Calgary cable along with the other television broadcasting outlets. In other words, Channel 2 and Channel 4 have gotten together and put in an application whereby we would each own 23 per cent of the stock. Hopefully we will finance the rest through a public issue.

Again I come back to the understanding of the market by the investment community.

The Chairman: How about with your radio stations? I am thinking of announcers for example.

Mr. Campbell: Well, we are not in any of the markets there...

The Chairman: There are no comparable markets?

Mr. Campbell: Well, there is no city or town in which we have a radio station and which there is a cable system, among Maclean-Hunter's associated...

The Chairman: I was thinking of...

Mr. MacGregor: Other than Toronto.

The Chairman: Well, I wasn't thinking of Toronto but that is a good example. I was thinking of Orillia.

Mr. Campbell: Well, we really have nothing to do with the Orillia situation.

The Chairman: Well, you own half its cable and radio?

Mr. Campbell: It is a pure investment in the radio which we are attempting to divest ourselves of or dispose of.

Mr. Switzer: Senator, there is a kind of technical field in which Cable TV in general, and the broadcast industry in general will cooperate to the general public benefit and that is in the field of UHF Broadcasting. UHF had traditionally been looked on by broadcasters as a kind of second-rate broadcasting service. It has never been considered that the use of UHF channels were attractive to broadcasters. But where cable television has got any kind of reasonable saturation or coverage—as far as the subscriber is concerned it is all the same to him whether he gets UHF or VHF—in many situations the presence of a healthy cable system is going to make the use of UHF television channel economically viable; whereas if there were not cable, it would probably delay considerably the use of UHF spectrum in Canada.

Mr. Fortier: Which may be used to reach the rural communities whereof you spoke?

Mr. Switzer: The presence of a cable system in a dense urban area makes the use of the UHF channel economically practical and the side benefit is that you are covered to rural areas.

Senator Prowse: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: There is one supplementary question from Senator Prowse and is yours a supplementary question, Senator Bourque, or is it a new question?

Senator Bourque: It is a new subject.

The Chairman: Well, then, Senator Prowse.

Senator Prowse: Mr. Switzer, I know the UHF comes after Channel 13 on the dial. When you are down in the States, you have to play around with the dial—would you mind explaining to me what the difference is between UHF and VHF?

Mr. Switzer: It is comparable, Senator, to the difference between standard broadcast waves and short waves.

The UHF channels have a higher frequency and much shorter wave lengths. They, in a technical nature, behave much similar to microwaves—they don't propagate as far, they don't go past the horizon nearly as easily. The main difference really is not a shortcoming in the waves themselves because they are not so drastically different from the VHF.

I would take the personal technical view that the principal disability in the use of UHF is not really the fault of the UHF waves themselves but the shortcomings in the ordinary home receiver.

All of the receivers sold in Canada up until about a year ago had no facilities to receive them without a converter.

Senator Prowse: Yes.

Mr. Switzer: Where a receiver is provided that has a good quality UHF facility in it, which both works well technically and is very easy to use, the FCC in the United States in their tests—large scale tests in New York City—showed fairly conclusively that UHF television stations can achieve satisfactory coverage.

In a strictly technical sense it is a minor shortcoming but the major shortcoming is in the television set in the home.

Senator Prowse: Let me put it in a way that maybe we could all understand. Do you have to have a little bit more direct reception to get UHF than the other?

Mr. Switzer: Well, I am trying to recall the details of this FFC report which has been fairly generally circulated. Where large amounts of power are available rabbit ears will work.

For example, I have seen rabbit ear reception in Windsor on UHF television receivers from UHF stations in Detroit. Generally speaking, however, taking receivers as a whole, I believe that UHF receivers require a little better antenna than does a VHF one. But the main shortcoming is that the receivers were just not built for UHF capability and the UHF capability that has been provided has been done only in a halfhearted way to meet the requirements of both the U.S. and Canadian laws. As you have said, it is an extremely difficult tuner to use. It is not well understood; it is an inconvenient thing to use.

Senator Smith: You almost get the feeling you are lucky when you get the station?

Mr. Switzer: And you really don't know what station you have tuned to.

Senator Prowse: No.

Mr. Switzer: I should point out in elaborating the role of cable television, for example, on cable T.V. systems in Southern Ontario, we receive UHF Channel 17 from Buffalo. That appears on the receivers of our cable subscribers as a VHF Channel Station. For example, in Toronto, that is Channel 10. Our subscribers in Toronto when they wish to tune to Channel 17, which is the UHF Channel, tune to Channel 10. They don't have to fool around or anything like that.

Senator Prowse: Just go to Channel 10 and that's it.

Mr. Switzer: And there it is.

Senator Prowse: They receive the station you have picked up for them?

Mr. Switzer: Yes.

Senator Prowse: On the services that you provide now, how many channels are you providing?

Mr. Switzer: Well, even in Toronto...

Senator Prowse: Even if the sets had the capability. Let me put it this way. Suppose our sets had an unlimited capacity. How many channels can you carry for programs you can carry at the same time?

Mr. Switzer: Generally speaking, 12. This is in practice reduced, in Toronto for example, to 10 because of the technical problems of their being two high powered television stations on the air in Toronto which cuts us back from 12 to 10.

We don't find it technically feasible to distribute at UHF frequencies—we have to convert them. We feel restrained at the present time from using channels which are not normally assigned to television service. This is for fear of either causing interference to other radio services or being interfered with by other radio services. We feel, at this moment, constrained to the use of the 12 normal UHF channels and due to local circumstances this is sometimes reduced to 10.

In Montreal for example, where there are four powerful transmitters its number is reduced even further.

Senator Prowse: In other words, the situation is that your limitation at the moment is created by the receiving sets in Canada?

Mr. Switzer: Yes.

Senator Prowse: Which has what...

Mr. Switzer: 12 channels.

Senator Prowse: And then out of those you have to deduct those channels where, even with the rabbit ears taken off, you could still have a shadow coming in from another station?

Mr. Switzer: A direct pickup from the local powerful transmitter.

Senator Prowse: So that it cuts you down to about 10?

Mr. Switzer: Yes.

Senator Prowse: We have had information put in front of us, I think chiefly through our researchers, that you can run up to eventually 1,000 channels or thereabouts. With the cable you have today, suppose we had sets that had the capability of picking up a great many more channels than they have now. Let's leave it in a general way like that. What would be involved in providing let's say a 40 channel capacity instead of the eight channel capacity?

Mr. Switzer: A principle consideration, Senator, is the electronic equipment and what we call the passive things—the dividers that take one line and branch into two. In practical terms the only part of our plant that we could reuse is probably the cable itself—the main line cable. We would have to replace all the electronic equipment.

We would have to replace what we call our passes, we would have to replace the devices which tap our lines to go into the homes and we would probably have to replace all of the service drops themselves. (the service drops being the piece of small cable from the pole to the house to the TV set). The only part we would salvage so to speak are the major cables themselves.

Senator Prowse: Those major cables themselves have a practically unlimited capability?

Mr. Switzer: Well, may I just say...

The Chairman: Before you answer, may I ask a supplementary question which I think is almost the same question.

When you were fiddling around if I can use that verb in Prince Albert—that was 15 years ago...

Mr. Switzer: And we were fiddling around.

The Chairman: Where is it going to be at 15 years from now?

Senator Prowse: Well, you are running away ahead of us now.

The Chairman: Well, I am running away ahead of you mainly on account of time.

Mr. Switzer: I am the person in this organization who actually has to go and do these things that other people dream of and speculate on.

The Chairman: Well, tell us about it.

Mr. Switzer: I am a pessimist in this, sir, in practical terms. The industry which we are in is basically consumer oriented and consumer oriented electronics lags far behind the electronic field in general.

Electronics can get men to the moon and back but that doesn't mean that we are all going to journey to the moon within the next 10 or 15 years.

Electronics can do all kinds of wonderful communications things. All of the techniques of instant information retrieval, of instant access to the computers, to libraries back and forth—all of these electronic communications marvels, which probably have been described to your committee by various witnesses, are all technically feasible but they are all not technically economic for the public at large.

The house I live in today in 1970 and the way that I live as a person, as a Canadian, as a North American, is not really drastically different from the house that I had in 1960 and my life style in 1960, despite the fact that in that decade men did go to the moon and come back substantially on electronic technology.

Coloured television was available in 1960—there really isn't anything in my life style in 1970 which is, technically, substantially different from my life style in 1960. And I have no great reason to expect my practical life style in 1980—if you will permit me to restrict it to 10 years because I am kind of shortsighted as a pragmatic engineer—will be substantially different due to electronic technology than it is now.

I will tell you the things that I do expect in a practical way, sir, in the next 10 years and that is the substantial introduction of home video tape equipment of some kind. I believe that things like the CBS EVR system and the comparable NBC system, the Sony tape cassette system—that is what I might call the television equivalent of the long play records—will be the significant factor in private homes.

I think that one of the things is that the major electronic manufacturers feel that they have possibly saturated the national and international market for t.v. sets. The next thing that the RCA's and the CBS's and the General Electric's will turn their attention to—and the major Japanese manufacturers will be a significant factor...

Senator Prowse: Don't forget them.

Mr. Switzer: Well, they buy wheat and coal!

Senator Prowse: That's right.

The Chairman: You are at the wrong committee!

Mr. Switzer: That these economic forces will turn their attention to the technical development in the intensive marketing of home video tape systems. I believe that, sir, to be inevitable. It has been amply demonstrated, just in the last few months, in all the trade shows and the likes. These things have been demonstrated and there are firm marketing plans for them. So I believe the homes of 1970 will have easy access to video taping equipment to tape things off the air.

The other people in our company have said—Mr. Campbell and Mr. Metcalf—that we don't believe we will see the disappearance of the broadcast transmitter in this decade; but I do believe we will see the enlargement of cable TV service as a substantial aid to the coverage of television stations and particularly in the development of UHF broadcasting.

I do not see the large scale implementations of many of the technical developments of which cable TV is possible, things like 20 channel systems and switch systems which use cable for access to computers.

I could have a computer terminal in my home right now. I could just call up General Electric—they have a time-sharing among other users there—the Bell has a line into my house and I could run a computer right from my house from my telephone line right now. But I don't feel the need for a computer in my home, I frankly don't, and I think the marketability of many of these services has been drastically over-rated. There is availability of service, but this doesn't mean that we will see these things generally in the Canadian homes in the next decade.

One of the problems, sir, is the limitation of the home receiver. The cable TV industry acts, for the time being, as a medium between the broadcast transmitter and the home receiver.

In fulfilling our role as broadcaster, as originator of programmes, we fill a similar role. Our cable system, the technical part of it, provides a link between our own broadcasting system and the home receiver.

As long as we are stuck with the home receiver with a 12 channel capability, with very many of them in great state of disrepair—this is something over which we have no control—we are not going to be able to provide many of the extra services that we want to provide.

Also there is an even more serious problem which is a uniformity of approach to these extra services. Mr. Chaston has told the Committee that the system with which he is associated in Montreal has changed their equipment five times in 18 years and that is extremely expensive.

Now, I have been asked by the Board of Directors of this company, now that it looks like we are going to have to go 20 channel, how am I going to do it and how much is it going to cost exactly. Truthfully, I have dodged that responsibility because I have given you an idea in the back of the brief the size of Maclean-Hunter Cable Television

Limited; it has assets in the order of $17 million; it is a sizable cable television operation, but it is still not big enough—I do not have the technical resources; I don't have the personal know-how and if you will permit an immodesty, sir, I am one of the leading cable TV engineers on the continent.

Mr. Metcalf: It sounds like a budget speech!

Mr. Switzer: There is nobody in the cable TV industry, I believe, in a position to make a decision on how to go 20 channels. If I make a wrong technical decision I could break the company or we could saddle one of our communities with a less than optimum system—we might decide, for example, in Guelph, to put in a 20 channel system and although we tried our best to make the right decision next year at the next technical show somebody could come up with a better 20 channel system. This happens every year. We would then have saddled the people of Guelph with a less than optimum system.

The Chairman: How are you going to solve the problem?

Mr. Switzer: If we were the Bell Telephone Company—Bell can afford to make a decision, they made a decision on picture phone and they said this is the type of picture phone, this is the machine and this is how it works. They have set picture phone standards for the whole telephone industry and for the whole world because the Bell is an organization of such a size and prestige that they can do that.

The Chairman: They have even more money than Maclean-Hunter?

Mr. Switzer: Even more money than Maclean-Hunter. At least twice as much money. The Bell can afford to make these decisions and if they put in an experimental system (and they often do) and it doesn't work, they swallow it. They eat it and it is a minor financial pimple on a...

Senator Prowse: As a matter of fact what they do is come back and ask for a raise in rates, don't they?

Mr. Switzer: We can experiment, sir, but we are asking that either an all industry committee or the government or someone takes a very close look at how cable TV will make this jump from the present 12 channel system to the cable system of the future. Otherwise, there is going to be some serious and expensive mistakes made.

Mr. Fortier: Do you think that this committee should recommend some standards?

Mr. Switzer: With due respect, sir, it is not a technical committee and the problem is a technical one.

Mr. Fortier: We have access to technical advisers.

Mr. Switzer: Well, I believe the Committee might recognize the problem and perhaps recommend that it be studied.

The Chairman: How could you, Mr. Switzer, summarize the problem?

Mr. Switzer: I would summarize it this way, sir. The cable television industry or the companies in it are not big enough. The piece that I read at the beginning was a personal plea for a larger scale operation in cable television. I have been a personal entrepreneur in cable television. Mr. Metcalf got started a few years ahead of myself and Ross MacGregor got into the field a few years later. I have been through the small company route and because of my personal concern with the technical problems of cable TV, (and they are still with us) I have gone through the route of associating myself with as large and friendly a corporation as I could and I feel we still have some shortcomings of scale that way.

There are many technical problems in cable TV that can only be solved by further increases in scale.

Senator Prowse: The thing I have been concerned about—I have been listening to the presentation that was made by the Association this afternoon in this room and particularly as to this question of when you start to be faced with the responsibility for originating programmes, even within the limitation of the channels that will be available, it is going to cost you money, even if you keep them completely local. I believe Mr. Boucher said this afternoon that you act as a mirror of the community. Where does this money come from to pay for those programmes?

Mr. Metcalf: Well at the moment by direction from the CRTC, it comes out of the revenue which we have to operate the system.

Senator Prowse: In other words they have apparently assumed, and I don't ask you to comment on whether their assumption is correct or not, that you have some extra money that you could be using in that area? Is that correct?

Mr. Metcalf: I think they have, if you take a look at it, on the basis of the fact that the CRTC has asked cable operators to start community programming.

Senator Prowse: Yes.

Mr. Metcalf: And I think it would be safe to say, that when they announced this decision last May at least most of the larger operators felt that this was not unreasonable. It cleared away this concern that I told you we had discussed many years ago, and each time thought—well, we could do something in this area but perhaps we had better leave well enough alone.

However, the CRTC made it clear that they would welcome this. They didn't say at that time "You must" but they indicated that they were going to be quite sympathetic to those people who had done so when their licence renewals come up for renewal a couple of years from now.

Senator Prowse: They put the camel's nose into the tent!

Mr. Metcalf: Yes, I would say that they did this. I don't think there is any doubt in most of the minds of the other cable operators that there is an area here which cable can still do things because of the basic difference between cable television and ordinary broadcast television. We can cater to the minority not at the expense of the majority but along with it. It is a very nice arrangement to have.

Now, we as cable operators are delighted to be cable operators and to have this challenge but we think and this has been discussed with the CRTC. We think that in the fullness of time, it won't be possible to do all the things that they want us to do and indeed that we want to do to take care of all these people.

It will not be possible to do it with our current revenue and we will have three courses.

One, will be to add news services; two, will be to add advertising; and three, to raise the rate to the homeowner. But the third one is wrought with danger because, how much will the homeowner pay? And do the majority really want that minority programming? There is a real question there.

Senator Prowse: The point I am getting at is this. It seems to me, that when the direction came down asking you to do original programming, they pushed you first into the area. Then if your original programming gets an audience, you are going to have people clamouring for a chance to use that audience—you are going to have offers of advertising revenue.

Mr. Campbell: We already have had offers and we have communicated this to the CRTC. And let me say this, Senator, that the CRTC have not said they are not sympathetic. They are studying it, to the best of my knowledge; I had hoped when they handed out these guidelines the other day that one of the things that they would cover would be the local radio station and the local cable system. The local radio station, who has the sales capability and a programming capability and a billing capability, might indeed sell a programme on the cable along with a certain program on the radio station and this is not farfetched.

I am a local broadcaster in radio, I have been for over 20 years, and this is something that I have talked to the CRTC about and we have had other radio operators talking to us where we have these systems in the community.

Senator Prowse: Now, there is one other thing. The question comes that if all of the distributions were to be made by cable at the present time we are going to leave 20 per cent—I believe this is Senator McElman's figure—the rural people; they aren't going to be on cable for awhile.

Mr. Campbell: We don't think that is going to happen.

Senator Prowse: Well, this was the question that I had in mind. Supposing you became the originator or suppose you became the actual broadcaster. In the broadcasting station—can you tell me this, what actually is the cost of a transmitter? My guess is that one of the smaller costs in broadcasting is the actual operation of the transmitter. It is the matter of the programming and all of the things that are associated with the station that are costly. I think this would be useful to know; it certainly would be to me and I believe to everybody else.

Mr. Campbell: The programming and the people, Senator, take up about 80 per cent of the total operating costs. There is no question about that.

Senator Prowse: So that if you start to initiate programmes and distribute them by cables in the urban centres, there would be no great expense involved in providing a transmitter to shoot the thing out to the people that didn't have the cable?

Mr. Campbell: Just a straight repeater. Broadcasters are doing that every day with their repeater channels out from the mother stations.

Senator Prowse: It wouldn't be very expensive, so that we don't need to worry about the growth of cable depriving our rural population of television.

Mr. Campbell: I don't think that follows from your statement.

Senator Prowse: No, but what I was trying to get at is this. We are getting our programmes presently now from the broadcasting stations, who have production and all other kinds of costs. They say, now, we have to watch cable because if cable comes in and becomes in effect a competitor to the broadcast station, then there is going to be no broadcasting station to send the signal out to the poor people who live in the country.

Mr. MacGregor: We don't look upon ourselves, Senators, as competitors to the broadcasting system as we know it today. We are to compliment them. When we talk about programmes—I have had half a dozen people come in to me and say "Let us produce 10 hours of programming for you for half a million dollars". Well, we are not talking about that sort of thing at all.

We are talking in many instances of giving the cameras and the equipment to the people and letting them put on their own show so long as you know it is in good taste. Let them talk to each other. We are not out after mass audiences. So, therefore, I think we definitely do complement each other.

I don't see this is a problem as long as it is done under certain guidelines.

The Chairman: Senator Bourque?

Senator Bourque: I have read this brief very, very carefully and there is no question that Maclean-Hunter Cable T.V. Limited ND Maclean-Hunter Limited are very closely associated and if it hadn't been a joint venture, it wouldn't have been possible to have an issue of $13 million on the market. It would have been very difficult to launch the company, as you said before.

Now, I have no doubt that it is a good company but I have been puzzled at things in the brief. My first question is on page 5 under "Relations with Parent Company".

"Relations with Maclean-Hunter Limited are excellent. The officers and highly specialized staff of the parent company are always available to the Cable TV company for assistance and advice on such matters as sales and advertising programs, art work, research, personnel recruiting, printing, etc."

So they are very, very closely associated and they need one another's services in order to get the job done.

Now, on page 16 you say:

"We believe that the normal forces of the marketplace should determine which services should be provided by the telephone system and which by the Cable TV operator. Unnatural restriction of this element of competition should not be permitted."

It is our belief that the needs of Canadians will best be served if two independent communications services to the home are permitted to develop. Certain services can best be provided by the switched communications system of the telephone companies which permits the direct two-way exchange of information between any two points on the system. Other services can best be provided by the broadband distribution system provided by Cable TV. We do not feel that telephone companies should operate both systems."

Now, what is the difference between Maclean-Hunter operating many systems and the Bell Telephone operating two systems. Why should you people object to the Bell Telephone system having two systems and you people do the same thing.

Mr. Campbell: I am going to let Mr. Metcalf answer that one.

The Chairman: Mr. Metcalf?

Mr. Metcalf: When you say systems, Senator, I don't quite understand what you mean. The Bell Telephone—when we are talking of two systems we are talking of a system as a pretty basic term here.

Senator Bourque: Well, they operate cables too, don't they?

Senator Prowse: When you are talking of systems you mean a form of communications I think.

Senator Bourque: You see, I really don't know just what you mean—that is why I am asking you now. You say: "We do not feel that telephone companies should operate both systems."

Mr. Metcalf: Well, what we are talking about here is in the general terminology. Telephone companies go into the home with a communication system and it is pretty widespread to most Canadian homes. Cable is becoming a second service fairly widespread and eventually, hopefully into most Canadian homes.

Cable can do some things which the current telephone system can't do. The telephone system can do some things that the cable system currently cannot do. You can call out from the home but the cable television system only puts in, but the cable we have is capable of carrying something like 600 times as much as the telephone lines, 600 times as much information. There is a study going on at the moment under the DOC—Mr. Switzer is a representative on it—and it is studying the implication of a single wire going into the home as opposed to the dual wires, or one cable and one wire. We are saying that we think it is more in the public interest that the telephone company continue as a telephone company and we continue as a cable company and that we compete for whatever service we can both do best. We shouldn't be restricted by regulations from competing with that telephone wire in your home with our cable, and conversely, they should be able to compete using their telephone wire with our cable.

That is what we are really saying in those paragraphs.

The Chairman: Mr. Campbell, I am aware that you have to catch an airplane, and I have a taxi waiting for me in a few minutes, so we will adjourn very quickly. But I have a couple of questions which are very quick and to the point.

Referring to the CRTC guidelines on cable you said and I quote "It is a disaster for the cable companies," and yet Ted Rogers who is one of your associates in the Toronto area and one of your competitors, I suppose, in the Toronto area says and I quote "The birth of a new era of opportunity for cable companies". Are you both right?

Mr. Campbell: May I indicate first of all that the gentleman that wrote that article never spoke to me at all. He was using a quote from a misquote and I have spoken to him about it.

The Chairman: Well, when you say it is a quote from a misquote, I have that misquote in several other articles.

Mr. Campbell: Well, it was just picked up right across the board. I talked to the Toronto Star the day that the regulations came out and I said first of all that these are proposed regulations. Secondly, they are subject to a great deal of interpretation and I don't know whether I am interpreting them right or not, but if you took the blackest point of view and my interpretation could be correct, then this could be possibly a disaster for the cable companies.

Now, all the preamble got left out and it just said that "it would be a disaster". Another story was written around it completely differently...

The Chairman: Well, that is a good explanation.

Mr. Campbell: As to Ted Rogers, I think he was hit, possibly by a phone call at home, and my understanding is that he may have some second feelings on that.

The Chairman: Well, he is here tomorrow morning so I am sure we will find out what his feelings are.

Mr. Campbell: Good.

The Chairman: At page 11 in the brief you say:

"The preservation of the Canadian identity must remain paramount. We must ensure however that our zeal to maintain the Canadian identity does not lead us into an atmosphere of isolationism."

What do you mean by that?

Mr. Campbell: Here we are getting at the idea that now, many people have access from rooftop antennas to American signals. We think it would be a mistake not only because of our company but also because of many people in the country if, in fact, all signals were blanked out coming across from the United States.

We don't think this is the right approach to take.

Mr. Fortier: Why should some signals be blanked out?

Mr. MacGregor: Why should any be blanked out? Why not just add more?

Mr. Fortier: Again, it is a matter of interpretation because again, the service is available and the signals are available on either the CBC or the CTV network.

Mr. Campbell: What we would like to do, Mr. Fortier, is not lop off any U.S. but perhaps not bring any more U.S. in. Also we should start building up the Canadian channels. You know, our own local broadcasting will have more UHF and as of September first, we will be the means of distributing the Ontario Educational System basically in Southern Ontario. The cable companies will be.

The Chairman: You have anticipated my next question but perhaps I will put it anyway and you can comment on it. When Maclean-Hunter was before the Committee, we heard a great deal about the company's desire to foster a spirit of Canadian identity. Indeed, Maclean's Magazine specifically if you recall,—I am not sure whether you were here that day or not but I am sure you were when we asked Peter Gzowski—said magazines were becoming more and more specialized. We said "What is Maclean's area of specialization?" He said, "Senator, Canadianism", and I know you share that viewpoint.

Mr. Campbell: Very much.

The Chairman: I know you do. This will be my final question, but how can the cable industry in Canada be expanded in such a way as to be consistent with those pro-Canadian objectives?

Mr. Campbell: Well I think it can be and I think the educational field is one in which we are ideally equipped to carry out that process and provide assistance for the educational authorities. Also I think by community programming. This is something that cable companies can do and no broadcasters can really do. There are many, many areas in which we can build up the so-called Canadian identity or whatever you want to call it. But it really is the people in the community having access to some broadcast facilities to say what they think. I think this is important.

The Chairman: Well, there are a lot of other questions and I am sorry the time has run out on us.

As I said at the outset of the session this afternoon, cable is a new and powerful medium. Its early days were confused and confusing and I think usually there was more heat than light. But obviously any study of the full media spectrum has to include a study of cable and really before you can study cable, this Committee at least, before we can really understand what cable's position is in the full media picture, we have to understand what cable's position is all by itself. I think we are all trying to learn and we are grateful to you for helping particularly in bringing such a knowledgeable group of people.

I am only sorry, gentlemen, that as members of the Committee we do not have more time.

For the benefit of the Senators may I outline the schedule for the balance of the week.

There is one change. Tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, Rogers Broadcasting Limited will be here; at 11.30 tomorrow morning, Jarman Cable Systems Limited. Then please note that the first session in the afternoon has been cancelled. We have received a written brief and unfortunately it is impossible for the people to be here tomorrow.

At four o'clock we have a brief from ACTRA, the Association of Canadian and Television and Radio Artists.

We have attempted to move the ACTRA brief up to 2.30, but it was impossible because they had airplane commitments and so on.

Friday morning we have a session at 10 o'clock with the Honourable Gérard Pelletier.

Thank you very much; the meeting is adjourned.

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON MASS MEDIA

EVIDENCE

Ottawa, Ontario,

Thursday, April 23, 1970.

The Special Senate Committee on Mass Media met this day at 10.00 a.m.

Senator Keith Davey (Chairman): In the Chair.

Honourable Senators, if I may call this session to order, please. Perhaps I can begin in the interests of the Senators by confirming the schedule for the balance of the hearings.

Our final hearing is tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock with the Honourable Gérard Pelletier.

This morning we are receiving, as you know, two briefs. The first I will introduce in a moment. The second brief, from Jarmain Cable Systems Limited, will be received at approximately 11.30 and then we have only one brief this afternoon from the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists at 4.00 p.m. We have been unable to move the time back to 2.30 so when we adjourn at the noonhour we will have to reconvene at four o'clock to receive the brief from ACTRA. I am sorry we could not move them forward but apparently given commitments of the witnesses and so on, it has not been possible.

The first brief we are going to receive this morning is from Rogers Broadcasting Limited. I think that perhaps I can introduce two people only and I will allow these people to introduce the balance of the team.

On my right is the President, Mr. Ted Rogers. On my immediate left is Mr. John Graham, who is the solicitor for Rogers Broadcasting Limited.

Mr. Rogers is an old friend of mine and it is very formal—calling him Mr. Rogers. As I have said to many of the broadcasters who have come before us, we are anxious to have you see this Committee in its context. We are examining the entire media spectrum, not specifically broadcasting and indeed not specifically the role of broadcasters.

We want to have the view of a representative group of broadcasters who could contribute views of some significance to the Committee. We are certainly delighted you have come.

We did not receive a brief from Rogers Broadcasting Limited and therefore we really have, as a Committee, nothing to study. However, we have done a little bit of background work on your company. We will have some questions which we would like to put to you certainly about cable and about other conventional systems and indeed perhaps with other media matters.

The procedure we follow is to now offer you 10, 12 or 15 minutes for an opening statement. It is my understanding you may wish to show us something rather than to put in a formal opening statement but following the screening or following your opening statement we will question you on quite a number of matters. I should make it clear at the outset, if you wish to refer any of the questions to any of your colleagues, by all means please do so.

Perhaps it might be a useful beginning to introduce the team who are here. Mr. Graham, would you like to do that?

Mr. John W. Graham, Q.C., Chairman of the Board, Rogers Broadcasting Limited: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Honourable Senators, as your Chairman has said my name is John Graham. I am a practising lawyer in Toronto and I act for the Rogers companies and I am a Director and an Officer.

There are several companies involved and so that it may be totally in context, I think it might be useful for me to recount the situation very briefly.

Rogers Broadcasting Limited is a private Ontario company, which is the licensee for stations CHFI, which is an AM station in Toronto and for CHFI-FM, which is a FM station in Toronto.

It is also the licensee for station CHAM in Hamilton, the assets of which station are currently under an agreement of sale and it is anticipated that the application for permission to do so will be heard at the May or at the latest June meeting of the Canadian Radio Television Commission.

The purchaser is a man who is currently the manager, Mr. Dancy who is a broadcaster of some considerable experience.

Rogers Broadcasting Limited has certain interests in other companies. To state firstly on the radio side, it owns 83 per cent of a company called Sun Parlour Broadcasters, which is the licensee of the station in Leamington, Ontario.

That company, in turn, has a wholly owned subsidiary, Essex Cable TV Limited, which operates a CATV system in Leamington and Kingsville, which is a small system in the southern part of Essex County.

Now, on the other side, on the cable side, Rogers Broadcasting Limited is the owner and beneficial owner of all the shares of Rogers Cable TV Limited, which is a CATV company, operating in Metropolitan Toronto and through it 90 per cent interest in a company called Coaxial Colourview Cable TV, which also operates in the Scarborough area and in the Rexdale areas of Metropolitan Toronto, and a wholly owned subsidiary, Bramalea Telecable Limited, which operates in the Bramalea area. It is one of the four, I think it is fair to say, substantial CATV operators in the Greater Toronto area.

Mr. Rogers is president of all of those companies and the two prime ones, of course, are Rogers Broadcasting Limited and Rogers Cable.

Senator Everett: What is the total number of subscribers they have?

Mr. Graham: The current number of subscribers in the Toronto area is...

Senator Everett: Including Bramalea?

Mr. Graham: Yes, and Coaxial, just under 40,000, about 37,000 at the present time, I think, actual on-stream, paying subscribers.

Therefore during the course of our appearance this morning, Mr. Chairman, we will be prepared to answer questions relating to radio or cable. Mr. Rogers was involved in television—no longer is—and I therefore would introduce to you those that are associated with us.

On my immediate left is Mr. Vaughn Bjerre, who is the vice-president of Rogers Broadcasting, is the manager of the radio station in Toronto and a broadcaster of some 27 years experience.

To his left is Mr. Philip Lind, who is Director of Public Affairs and Programming. To his left is Mr. Barry Ross, who is Vice-President of the cable company, owns a beneficial interest in the Coaxial portion of it and is a very experienced member of CATV operations background, having been in that type of work for many, many years.

Now, going around the table, next to the reporter is Mr. Ray Erickson, who is the News Director of the Rogers Radio News Network. To his right is Mr. Frank Verkaik, who is Director of Engineering for the cable operations and next Mr. Ted Rogers, who is President of both companies.

We will do our best to answer any questions that you care to put to us.

Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Thank you very much.

Mr. Edward S. Rogers, President, Rogers Broadcasting Limited: With your permission, just before introducing the program, I would like to take perhaps three minutes and just give you a brief background of our history.

It all started really with an FM only station in Toronto in 1958, CHFI-FM. It was the nation's pioneer FM station. It started when Toronto only had three per cent of the homes with FM receivers.

The early days of FM were somewhat similar to the early days of cable. There is a great parallel. In those early days, of course, it was very difficult for an FM station. Other AM stations started to commence with FM transmitters in separate stations on their own.

We applied for an AM frequency in 1961 and we were delayed, but we were finally granted a licence and started on a dawn to dusk basis at 1540 on the dial which one of the BBG members at that time described as "that dog of a frequency." But, it saved our lives and meant that we could popularize FM programming on the AM band and we did so for a number of years.

I felt that if we were to compete in the Toronto market, that we had to have a full-time frequency. It was very difficult to go off at a quarter to five and not come on until a quarter to eight in the morning.

One of the great compelling needs of our time for our people in my view are more frequencies for Canadian use, more positive action by government and broadcasters alike to conserve the remaining frequency space and to take positive action with the Americans to try and wheel and deal, if we will, to get more back for Canadian use.

We have fought for perhaps 10 or 12 years in Toronto to develop this frequency at 680 and the cost is measured literally in the millions just to secure one positive frequency for Canadian use.

We finally succeeded in developing this 24-hour frequency, 680, and came on in 1966. The price we had to pay was to go from 50,000 watts down to 1,000 watts. We felt it was right and proper to do for the constant service.

There were those that said in those days that they would not hear it the other side of Yonge Street, if it worked at all, because it was one of the largest and most complex in North America but it did work and we went up to 2,500 watts and after working in conjunction with another Canadian licensee, and he moving to another frequency, we are now licensed for 10,000 watts.

We have been negotiating with a station in Rochester to cooperate with him to improve the facilities of both stations. That has been before the governments for, I guess, two years and if we are successful here, he will be able to improve his coverage and we will again in Toronto be able to improve it; so it has been this kind of building that is seen today to build a frequency.

Frankly, the problems of cable have been nothing compared to those problems of finding a home for CHFI.

Now, the reason I got into cable was because CHFI-FM, which is our heart, was on a number of cable systems and I travelled around the country to try and persuade the cable companies to put it on more of the cable systems. This would be in the early sixties, and I became attracted to the industry. I felt that it had great, great potential for community service. Television per se was fast and huge in its coverage and in its economic requirements but cable television could provide local service; and as we are all human and some of the cable companies perhaps were not as cooperative as I would have liked for CHFI-FM, I decided we should go into business for ourselves.

So, that is how we started in cable. It has been a very exciting field. The wild West days of cable have characterized the last couple of years. The Commission, if it has done anything, if it has succeeded in anything in the last two years has succeeded in Canadianizing the ownership of cable in this country and I, for one, feel that they are to be commended for this, that it represents an entirely new thrust and in the next 10 or 20 years it will have a profound effect.

The idea of the Montreal Star and the Toronto Daily Star and other Canadian organizations getting involved in cable, I think, has tremendous significance. For those who come out with scare headlines and say that cable is dead, they are just about as right as the people who say "God is dead".

They say a picture is worth a thousand words and we wanted to show you excerpts of the local community programming we are doing and this is sort of an original Henry Ford. It is starting from scratch and we thought if you saw this that it would perhaps be of use to you and assistance. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, we would like to now show just a five minute film which was prepared really for the CRTC in February.

(FILM)

The Chairman: Mr. Rogers and Mr. Graham have informed me that that is the film presentation and that they are now prepared to receive our questions.

I think the questioning will begin this morning with Senator McElman.

Senator McElman: Mr. Rogers, going back to 1966 when the White Paper on Broadcasting was brought down and following from that the report on that White Paper by the Commons Committee on Broadcasting, and later the Broadcasting Act, it was directly indicated to broadcasters that they should play a significant role in the development of Canadian unity, culture and identity of Canadians.

It is a double-barrelled question I have for you. How do you see cable? What is its role within this context and how have broadcasters generally met this challenge to date?

Mr. Rogers: That is a very good question, sir. I perhaps would like to start to answer it and perhaps Vaughn Bjerre would care to add to it from his experience.

Perhaps to answer the latter part of the question first, what have broadcasters done in this country to contribute to Canadian unity? As you all know certain aspects of the press, newspapers—the traditional broadcasters' claim that newspapers make mischief headlines over radio and television broadcasting matters and I think, speaking seriously, the past few weeks have been another example of that.

We have seen the press take the sincere desire of the Commission to probe and get broadcasters to comment on regulations and we have seen misinterpretations in the press. We have seen the Canadian Association of Broadcasters maligned and so on and I, for one, regret that.

I think broadcasting has a very proud history in this country of ours. First of all I think we must accept the fact that we have very few frequencies. You can drive from Toronto to Ottawa at night and you cannot listen to Canadian stations on one frequency. It is just a scatter of static and in the United States they have many clear frequencies and we have very few.

One of the reasons for this is that the Americans, to protect their own stations, always locate to the south of one of their cities and shoot their signal northward so that it comes over their city, say Buffalo, and then into Canada and this, of course, makes the use of that frequency or often an adjacent frequency impossible in our country, so I give this as a background.

Secondly I think that in our history we have aided in transportation east and west across this country. There have been freight rate differentials and so on but broadcasting has been given no such assistance and we need it.

We are in the new networking business and over half of the stations in this country cannot afford even the line costs with nothing contributed towards the Canadian news network and we wonder why we have the spread of American culture when, of course, line costs coming from the south are so much cheaper.

If there is one thing you can do to help in this, it is to come up with some recommendation whereby there could be some assistance to the broadcasting companies particularly the three or four that are trying to set an initiative in developing an east-west flow of news and public information. I think our people know the name and about the Mayor of Chicago and New York and other American centres more than Winnipeg, Calgary and Edmonton and so forth.

Broadcasting in radio is primarily local. Now, in the past four or five years you have seen several broadcasting companies start Canadian news networking, east-west flows. Standard Radio was the first to pioneer in this area and for that I think they deserve the credit of all of us.

The Rogers group have a network of which we are very proud. We have been doing it in radio. We have about seven or eight subscribers. We are moving into the area of cable where we are interviewing Members of Parliament and offering that to the other cable systems in the same way we are doing interviews on radio and trying to spread the costs across the different systems in the country.

So to be specific, Standard Radio, Rogers, CHUM Limited is the sponsor of the Contemporary News System and there is a CBS Stephenson news system sometimes called News Radio.

All of these have an affiliation with an American news network. In our case it is ABC and in Standard's case it is NBC. In the early days Canadian broadcasters felt, I think, that they needed the NBC and ABC and so forth. But now you would find in examining the flow to the stations, that this has become a subsidiary part and that the Ottawa News Bureau and the flow of phone reports from the different subscriber stations and from the different people. We pay a newsman in any station of the country $5 per news report that is phoned in to us.

If you listen now to Canadian stations you are beginning to hear news of what is going on in Halifax and Victoria and what is going on in these other places and you are hearing the sound of the news, which is so important. So I think that is what broadcasters are starting to do and trying to do but we need help, specifically in the area of line costs.

Now, you are used, I guess, to private broadcasters always attacking the CBC. I guess, perhaps because I am younger and so on, I just find we are a small country and I suspect we all have more in common than separates us but I do feel it is time to reassess. Surely out of the taxpayer's contribution a greater percentage can be spent on programming, just as a basic rule. We all want Canadian programming. Surely this programming can be distributed to others than just the CBC stations because you can use the same program in different context and they program, as you know, in a way to sort of appeal to all different segments of the communities at a different time. If this same programming can be shown on other stations or heard on other stations at different times, I think it may be very helpful.

I do not know if I have answered specifically your question. In our case apart from the news network and the cable network we are putting together, cable supplying. It is distributing rather than a network. Network is too glamorous a term. We have had football broadcasts which are of course old hat and you are used to. We have recorded the members of the Toronto Symphony in the summer and distributed these free to 12 stations that played it.

Again you have a problem. I do not want to take too much time but the CBC have contracts with most of the cultural groups and the rates that are set are very high and it is not possible for private broadcasters to compete, if you will, and in my opinion it is damned nonsense to try and compete.

I think that these programs that the taxpayers pay for should be made available to all the broadcasting stations.

The Chairman: I wonder if I may ask a supplementary question. You were talking about your news policy. I was interested in your comment about reliance on or use of ABC. Did you mean the reliance on as well as the use of ABC material is being reduced?

Mr. Rogers: Yes, I think so. I think there is a growing consciousness and competitiveness to get news in our own country.

The Chairman: The comments you have made this morning about Canadian news content and so on, I think are very refreshing, and speaking, not for the Committee, but only as one person, I agree with you. I am curious to know why you carry on your programming schedule such an avowed right-wing American political commentator as Paul Harvey. I have listened to that program. I believe he is still on. I have listened to him within the last week or two. I cannot ever recall hearing a Canadian news item on there.

Mr. Vaughn Bjerre, Vice-President and Manager of Rogers Broadcasting Limited): May I answer that question.

The Chairman: Certainly.

Mr. Bjerre: May I say first of all I do not think there is a broadcast news network in the country that to some extent does not rely on a foreign affiliation for coverage of international news and that includes the CBC.

We just do not have the resources to cover all of the international news centres without making some sort of affiliation with an American or other network.

The Chairman: Agreed.

Mr. Bjerre: We try to get around this a bit. We have an arrangement with the Toronto Telegram where we use their 10 or 12 international correspondents. This means that we can often get a Canadian story from overseas that is normally not covered by an American network.

Sometimes we can get a Canadian slant on a story that we would not get from the American network.

Now, I see nothing wrong...

The Chairman: Before you go any further, you say you have an arrangement with the Toronto Telegram. What do they get out of the arrangement?

Mr. Bjerre: We pay them.

The Chairman: Oh fine.

Mr. Bjerre: We pay them a yearly fixed cash sum and they guarantee us a minimum of 400 or 500 reports a year.

As far as Paul Harvey is concerned, I do not think a broadcasting organization should get to the point where we try to become so Canadianized there is no room for any expression that is not Canadian.

Paul Harvey is the one and only American commentator on our station but we have several Canadian commentators and it is a matter of time. Of the many hours a day that we devote to news and news commentary, Paul Harvey gets six or seven minutes so there certainly is not an imbalance there, I do not think.

The Chairman: Do you think Paul Harvey is a good news commentator?

Mr. Bjerre: I do not think it matters so much whether I think he is a good news commentator or not. There are listeners who think he is a good news commentator and there is a segment of the audience who likes to hear Paul Harvey.

We always preface our introduction by saying "This is an American news commentator on international events, commentating from Chicago". We position him and say "This is an American, talking about world affairs."

Mr. Rogers: I would just like to add though that when there is an American convention, we send either Gilmour or Flemming to cover them because I think it is important that we get the Canadian viewpoint of the foreign affairs, whenever it is possible.

We obviously cannot send reporters everywhere but that is the significance of the Telegram arrangement with their 10 or 11 correspondents in London, Paris, Hong Kong and so forth; to actually have a Canadian over there who would say "What does this mean to the people in Canada"?

I hope that this sort of thing continues in the future and I hope also perhaps that the four or five competing news radio services might jointly sponsor one or two Canadian news gathering facilities abroad.

The Chairman: I should make clear to Mr. Bjerre that I quite appreciate the reasons for the arrangement with the ABC. It is just that Paul Harvey, I am afraid, being just slightly to the right of Barry Goldwater, I find annoying.

Mr. Bjerre: I might say we have continual room for expressions by people who are considerably to the left of Barry Goldwater, but might I just say...

The Chairman: Not on a regular daily basis, I am sure.

Mr. Bjerre: Might I just say our two principal news commentators are Bill Gilmour and Jim Flemming. They are on the air four times a day. They have been with the station a number of years and have a very good background in broadcasting and journalism.

Over the last three or four years we have sent these commentators to Vietnam, to Moscow, to the Middle East—one went to Israel and the other one went to Egypt and other Arab countries. We have sent them to the Republican Convention in Miami, the Democratic Convention in Chicago.

They went to the Washington riots and the Detroit riots. Here in Canada we have sent them to Montreal on several occasions when there have been news stories there and other parts of the country; so we do take our own people and within our resources we send them out and I think perhaps we do more of this...

The Chairman: Yes, I should say to the Senators who are not from Toronto that I think in fairness to CHFI perhaps more than most private stations, you do give a Canadian viewpoint on American affairs.

I just wondered why you insist on ruining it all with my friend?

Mr. Rogers: I think I should put on the record that when the affiliation was with CHUM, they played Paul Harvey.

The Chairman: Oh, I am aware of that.

Mr. Rogers: ...and when it was with CKFH I believe they played Paul Harvey. I think CFCF played Paul Harvey.

The Chairman: I would suggest if you are interested, if anybody wants to pursue this, there is an excellent article on Paul Harvey in the current issue of Esquire I think it says it all very well.

Do you have a supplementary question, Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: I have a supplementary question but it is not on Paul Harvey.

The Chairman: Thank heavens.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Rogers, do you foresee use being made in the future by your news and public affairs division of the cable system of CHFI news commentaries.

Mr. Rogers: Yes, I would most certainly hope so.

Mr. Fortier: What do you envisage as tangible evidence of this direction?

Mr. Rogers: Well, I think that the thrust of cable is to create more Canadian programming and in our particular case the news bureau that we have in Ottawa will be used for producing cable news programming as well as radio new programming.

Now, the cable news, again because of distribution problems would not be day to day, such items as go out on the radio which can be transmitted by wire. They would be more weekly background type reports, introduced with a Member of Parliament and so forth.

Gilmour and Flemming, of course, would do the same sort of thing. Now, I want to make it very clear. We are in the experimental period. I would like Mr. Lind to comment on this. We have not pat answers or no set policies but we do hope to use all our people and give them greater exposure.

Mr. Fortier: As a radio broadcaster and also as the principal shareholder of a cable system, do you see any advantages flowing to either one of the media because of the multi-media interest?

Mr. Rogers: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Would you expand on what they might be in either direction.

Mr. Rogers: Well, I think that being a broadcaster has given me an enormous advantage in cable, just in thought and in the thrust of what you are doing. There is no doubt in my mind.

Mr. Fortier: Even in your role as a cable-caster?

Mr. Rogers: I have never considered that role. To me when I entered cable it was as a broadcaster and it perhaps permitted our company to look ahead or jump certain steps that others were not doing and perhaps even today our view of cable is different from others because of my own background and that of Mr. Bjerre and the rest of us as broadcasters.

We think of cable in the programming part as another television station, of course, different from Channel 9 or Channel 6 but only perhaps as FM is different from AM. They are both radio stations but it is a good parallel because a cable television station is a television station.

FM concentrates its programming on music not because of regulations but to take advantage of the technical advantages it has on AM for music but does not have for voice.

I think a cable television system will tend to concentrate on local programming, not because of regulations but because of the physical fact that it is physically around in that one local area and it does not have a range of 100 miles.

The Chairman: Do you want Mr. Lind to comment on this?

Mr. Rogers: Yes.

Mr. Philip Lind, Director of Public Affairs and Programming: Yes, Mr. Fortier.

The Chairman: May I just put this question to you while you are there.

Mr. Rogers said it was experimental. It did not look very experimental in this ad in Marketing which I saw on the 6th of April. It says:

"Rogers Cable TV announces programming available for Canadian cable systems."

It did not look very experimental.

Mr. Rogers: There is an old adage which says nothing happens until there is a sale.

Mr. Lind: I will comment on that too, sir.

I think that as Mr. Rogers pointed out, there have been significant benefits to us in the cable field because of our association with CHFI particularly in the Rogers network.

There are, of course, benefits to the listener-watchers too because they have the availability of our programming content.

What it is basically and I think this is CHFI's philosophy is that we are primarily an information dispersal agent. That is primarily where our programming effort lies right now.

Now, in fact that is not necessarily exploring the great issues, although we do that, it may be in the antique or Canadiana history line as much as anything else.

Let me just indicate one or two of the things that we do in our information programming. We have the "Contemporary Issues" series which today is concentrated rather heavily on two subjects. Quebec, with the "Exchange Quebec" series going on in the St. Lawrence Centre (we are the cable company that programs out of there) and the Americanization issue, the Americanization of Canada and the Americanization of Canadian Universities.

We are very fortunate in this instance because we have two very fine academic institutions in Toronto and five or six Canadian colleges which are first class. We find probably that the best programming inputs are derived directly from student planned programs and I can get into the student participation in cable too at some later date.

We also have the "People and Ideas" series in which we have Mr. Stanfield, Mr. Trudeau, Mr. Rasminsky, people of major importance in Canada who are in Toronto expounding on some very significant topic. This is a real backgrounder, of course, because CBC and CTV can interpret that and show perhaps a 35 second clip, whereas we show the entire text of the message. In many instances this is very important to really understand what the man said.

Continuing with our Public Affairs programming, we offer access to political groups, institutionalized political groups as well as recently formed citizens groups and we have provided a set formula in which they can participate on a weekly basis. This, of course, ties in with our Ottawa Cable News which is really three services.

The first service is M.P.'s reporting directly to their constituents. We were in fact doing our filming yesterday in the press building whereby Members of Parliament came in and talked on an informal basis for 10 or 15 minutes about issues directly related to their own constituents. This, of course, they cannot get especially in the Metro areas or the urban areas in Canada. They cannot get this message across except by that news letter.

Mr. Fortier: Do you only offer this to those M.P.'s who ridings are within your system?

Mr. Lind: At this stage, Mr. Fortier, but this is part of our Ottawa Cable News and any cable system that wants this and informs their Member of Parliament, we get in touch with them and these tapes are made available to them, so that will go right on.

Mr. Fortier: Do you sell the tapes to cable systems?

Mr. Lind: Yes, very cheaply.

The second instance in the Ottawa thing is the Ottawa Cable News Parliamentary report, which is much like a backgrounder as well because we cannot make it as contemporary as TV or radio. Our correspondents here will background the news. The report yesterday dealt with Arctic sovereignty and the historical background.

The third thing—we have not quite finished negotiations on this—but we feel these backgrounder press conferences that are held in the press building that are reported, again with the 35 or 40 second clip, we intend to tape in whole and again offer it as part of the service.

You know, we are not there yet and we are certainly open to more ideas, but we are really trying to make a start on things.

I can go into our other programming aspects. I am sorry I have taken so long.

The Chairman: That is all right. Mr. Graham?

Mr. Graham: Mr. Chairman, I think there has been so much talk on local programming on cable that some things should be kept in context. It is less than 12 months since permission really was granted to cable companies in Canada to programme and what you saw in the presentation earlier is an example of our first steps.

Everyone, if they are honest, is crawling before they are walking and walking before they are running. It is an evolving matter and the cable companies are certainly not in competition with commercial television. They are providing, as earlier has been said—Mr. Rogers made the comment—local programming.

In Toronto, we can programme, for example, for the Borough of Scarborough or for the Borough of Etobicoke and we can air or make available for viewers on our system things which could never get on a commercial television station or commercial radio station for that matter.

Mr. Fortier: How do you seek to finance this increased service to your viewers?

Mr. Rogers: Well, right now through this experimental period it is being done out of general subscription revenues.

Mr. Fortier: Have they increased at all in the last year?

Mr. Rogers: The per charge has not increased. The number of subscribers has. Now, when we financed the system at the beginning there was no budget for local programming so obviously there is a problem, but we hope, in the year that has just passed, and what we are going through now, to be able to justify it in our own minds by attracting new subscribers so it will be, if you will, sales promotion expenses.

Now, to play a meaningful role $100,000 a year is just nothing. That is what we feel we can afford. We are very hopeful that advertising revenues will allow us to spend say $1 million a year, of which we may recover, say, $900,000. We would still finance it to the tune of $100,000 a year or whatever a cable operator can afford, but it is much better to multiply what you can afford by getting advertisers who cannot otherwise be heard in their community because they are not large enough to be on a television station and let them finance this.

The Chairman: These would be local advertisers?

Mr. Rogers: These would be local advertisers. Local, local advertisers. There may be some bigger advertisers who would want it but it is only to attract these people so I desperately hope they permit advertising. They permit it on FM.

The Chairman: Should they permit national advertising on cable?

Mr. Rogers: I hope they put a minimum of restrictions and if we do something wrong then they could put restrictions.

I must emphasize: I am not against restrictions because I am a relatively young man and we must have them. We must have rules or else we will be run over crossing the street.

I think we must remember that this is a small country and we have built cable to where it is today out of the ingenuity of individual Canadians and so on. All in all it has been a plus.

I would just like to emphasize, while I think of it, that in Toronto there is no single household that can receive a good picture of both local television stations. People do not buy cable to watch 6 and 9. They do not think of it in their minds but they get a much better picture on 6 and 9 when they have cable, and I am sure that statistics will show that the viewing of 6 and 9 in cable homes is higher than in non-cable homes.

The Chairman: Perhaps at this point I should apologize to Senator McElman who is our lead questioner and who has asked exactly one question.

I have Senator Everett and Senator Prowse both indicating that they have supplementary questions.

Senator Everett: I will pass, thank you.

The Chairman: I was not saying that you should. Senator Prowse, will you pass?

Senator Prowse: No. I would like to ask a question now. I will never get back.

The first thing is: as I understand it, am I correct in assuming that when you are talking of your own programming, you are talking about what would be free channels on your cable?

Mr. Rogers: Yes.

Senator Prowse: In other words, some of them are not used and this is where you are able to give this extended type of coverage, because you do not have the limitations imposed by ordinary programming? This is something extra that you are able to offer. Is that correct?

Mr. Rogers: Yes. We are removing a television station to make room for a local programming channel we are now programming.

Senator Prowse: Within the limits of your own distribution system?

Mr. Rogers: That is correct, sir. We are now doing it part time on the channel.

Senator Prowse: These questions are very simple, Mr. Chairman, they are just for clarification.

Did I understand you to say that because the CBC is very heavily subsidized that the programmes which they produce ought to be made available to all broadcasters who want them?

Mr. Rogers: I think so, yes.

Senator Prowse: That was one question and the other one was the suggestion that there should be some form of subsidy to cover line costs of making available special types of broadcasts from one part of the country to the other.

Mr. Rogers: Very definitely. This is our greatest need.

Senator Prowse: You would suggest a direct subsidy to whom? How would you work the subsidy out? Have you given any thought to that?

Mr. Rogers: I will have to ask Mr. Graham.

Mr. Graham: Mr. Chairman, Senator Prowse, the subsidy in other fields is to the carrier and if we have the concept of a common carrier in telephone microwave or what you will, I should think the easiest and most direct and effective way of implementing it would be through the common carrier.

Senator Prowse: In other words, to tell them "All right, you set a reasonable rate here and then the subsidy would make up the difference"; like we cover the loss on the railways between Winnipeg and Sault Ste. Marie or something like that.

Mr. Graham: It is precisely the same idea.

Senator Prowse: The same principle.

Mr. Graham: Yes.

Senator McElman: Mr. Rogers, you have suggested that there should be no restriction on the type of commercial advertising between local, national and so on.

An integral part of licensing in this country, quite different from the United States, has been that before licenses are granted the economic viability of an existing licensee in the market area concerned is taken into account as well as the prospective viability of the new licensee.

With that as our background, in Canada do you believe that it would be fair competition that cable be permitted in its own cable casting to have national advertising in addition to the local and in addition to making available time for those who now cannot afford it?

Mr. Rogers: Well, yes, I do.

Senator McElman: You do?

Mr. Rogers: Yes. If this imposes a hardship then, of course, regulations can be set, but if we are to be responsible for producing quality local programming and we will have technical requirements imposed upon us the same as Channel 9 or Channel 6 in our market—we will presume we have to pay the same wage scales and so forth—then I see no reason to limit that by any limitation upon advertising revenues because if you do, fair enough, it will obviously restrict the activity of the cable television station. This is a judgment for you and the authorities to make really.

Mr. Graham: Mr. Chairman, if I could enlarge a little on Senator McElman's question.

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Graham: We subscribe to the practice that has been followed for many, many years in Canada that licenses are not issued indiscriminately in broadcasting and that you must be reasonably assured that with good management the existing licensee and the new licensee will all be viable economically. I think that is one of the great strengths of our broadcasting system in Canada.

Having said that with respect to advertising and CATV, and I speak primarily of the metropolitan centre—in Toronto there are only two, or if you include Channel 11, which designates itself as Hamilton-Toronto—three television stations. They cannot handle the local advertising that is offered to them and I cannot see that they should have any conceivable objection on economic grounds to CATV systems being permitted to carry advertising.

There may well be an effect on radio but this is another matter and not one to which you refer.

Then you get into really a question of philosophy. It is my belief that we should always start with the minimal regulatory proscriptions and only as and when abuses and problems are found, do we then inhibit the freedom of choice of the individual; but from a philosophical standpoint I would much prefer that we do not start off with limitations.

The licensing process in this country is now on a bi-annual basis. I do not know how long administratively they are going to be able to continue to shoulder that load but certainly it would mean at least every two years, if there is an abuse or something which is proving harmful to others, it could be quickly corrected.

Mr. Rogers: By a condition of license for a particular area. I suspect it would be a particular area where you would have a problem rather than an across-the-board rule.

Mr. Graham: Yes, and just on that point, one of our greatest problems with the regulations that are proposed, and the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is encountering this now, is the great difficulty in having a uniform regulation which applies in Toronto, Cape Breton, Vancouver Island and the Yukon Territory.

So far they have tried very hard to have uniform regulations. They are now getting into separate, special conditions of individual licenses. I think this is a highly desirable move because it gives greater flexibility to the whole broadcasting system.

Senator McElman: I share with you an antipathy towards over-regulation, but consider the experience of the CRTC and its predecessors, where they went into this whole picture of broadcasting with not over-regulation at the outset, and with the expressed intent of the Canadian people through Parliament to all broadcasters, that they should contribute to the Canadian identity in a specific fashion. The content should be Canadian to a large degree and yet there is a strong body of opinion, at least, that those broadcasters fell down very sadly in meeting the intent of the Canadian people through Parliament for the privilege they were given of having an economically viable unit, a license to broadcast. They did not return to the Canadian people in balance what they were given in protection.

With that background, would you think it unreasonable for a regulatory body to perhaps want at this stage to take the opposite tact from what you now suggest and say "Broadcasters have shown that they will not follow the intent of the Canadian Parliament and the Canadian people" and perhaps set pretty stringent regulations at the outset of a relatively new mode of communication?

The Chairman: Mr. Graham or Mr. Rogers.

Mr. Rogers: I will start by saying I find it really hard to restrain myself because it is basically like saying there is a substantial body of opinion that feels you have been beating your wife what would you like to do to stop beating your wife as much?

Now, I absolutely deny the substantial body of opinion. I think these statements are not accurate, that broadcasters have done in this country a tremendous job and I, for one, resent very much the mostly newspaper propaganda that suggests to the contrary. We can do a better job, of course, so can anybody, but we do need some assistance and some help.

To suggest that it is all broadcasting or that individual broadcasters have not done substantially a first-class effort is, in my view, grossly inaccurate and it is just not true.

We have done this. We have been able over the past 20 years to win back Canadians to listening to their own stations. Surely...

The Chairman: To radio.

Mr. Rogers: To radio, that is right, and to a great extent, television, and surely, surely this fact is so overwhelming as to swallow up and drown the other views completely.

Senator McElman: May I interrupt at that point, Mr. Rogers, and make another suggestion which I think comes from a fairly substantial body of opinion: that you got back the Canadian audience for radio by duplicating what they had on American stations rather than developing Canadian talent and Canadian content.

Mr. Rogers: Well, I would just say this. I was fortunate enough to be in the Senate Chamber before coming in here and I was given a description of it and part of the limestone, I believe, came from the United States.

I just must say to you that all in all I think Canadian broadcasters have done a first-class effort at producing Canadian programming and of course, there has been some American content in private broadcasts the same as there is American content in this Senate Chamber, and there is no reason to denounce either one.

The Chairman: We are going to have a look at that limestone, I will tell you.

Senator McElman: Mr. Chairman, I think American content does not come into the dialogue as much in the Senate Chamber, perhaps.

Mr. Graham: I would just like to speak now and confine my comments to radio broadcasting for the moment.

Those of us who were adult before the War will recall, certainly in the Toronto area, that most of the listening was to American stations. That certainly was the case, also to my own knowledge, in Winnipeg and a number of other Canadian centres, that pre-War, one listened largely to American radio stations.

Listening now to American stations is minimal, it is insignificant, which means that you have Canadian voices, the Canadian approach to news, to comment on radio. The whole character of radio, of course, has changed. Mr. Bjerre can speak, he having programmed for pre-television radio as well as more contemporary radio. Most of us will remember the days of "Amos and Andy" and the big shows that used to be on radio, which was a very different thing to what you now hear.

Radio has become much more local. It is of high standard. Certainly we try to maintain our station at the highest possible standard, which means you go to the market of the world for your product and what you are displaying; and the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is presently investigating the possibly of imposing quantitative requirements in the use of Canadian music.

This is excellent except that most categories of music, chamber music, classical music, the type of music that in many metropolitan stations is played in the evening, are just not produced in Canada.

Therefore, unless you are going to have total sameness throughout, you have to have resort to the market of the world, but this does not mean...

Senator McElman: You say this is not produced. Can it be produced in Canada?

Mr. Graham: It possibly could be but not before the 1st of October.

Senator McElman: Right.

Mr. Graham: Be that as it may, Mr. Bjerre will speak on this—I do think that radio has been Canadianized to quite an unbelievable extent in the last 30 or 35 years, and I hope that whatever may come from regulation or quota will not reverse that trend because the Canadian listeners and viewers are very discriminatory.

They have been accustomed to the best in the Western world and they will tune in to whatever channel or to whatever frequency they wish in order to get what it is they want to listen to or see. Therefore, to get back now to your original question, if from the philosophical standpoint, we start off by putting Canadian broadcasting or cablecasters in a straightjacket, you may well find that the baby is going to be stillborn and the public just will not watch. They will look to other places, wherever it is available to them to look.

The Chairman: Perhaps, Mr. Graham, part of the answer to that though is that the public has not had the opportunity. You may be right, but let us give them the opportunity.

Mr. Graham: But is the opportunity—I do not want to exaggerate or overstate...

The Chairman: Nor do I.

Mr. Graham: But is the opportunity best served by inhibiting the Canadian operator so that he cannot compete on what I would refer to as an equal basis?

Mr. Rogers: I would just like to add in our market, CFRB in the last 10 or 15 years used to play, as you remember, many syndicated U.S. programmes or whole broadcasts emanating from the States. They no longer do this, not by regulation, but just as Canadian programming has developed.

The Chairman: I think Mr. Bjerre was going to say something.

Mr. Bjerre: I see there being two basic and perhaps regrettable problems. The one thing is that we are really, to some large extent, swimming up-stream. The world is drawing closer together because of satellites, jet travel and various forms of transport of communication.

It is very, very common for the conductor of the Toronto Symphony to conduct in Toronto one week and Prague the next week and Rio de Janeiro the third week, and so on.

Even in pop music it is possible for Tom Jones or the Beatles to be as popular in North America as they are in England and vice versa.

This is the direction, so whatever Canadians want and do is really part of this Western culture. The origins were in Western culture. Our cultural beginnings are European and if we drew away from other parts of the Western world, we are not getting back into it again and there is a sort of sameness developing in all countries of the Western world.

This situation is compounded and made more difficult when you narrow it down to the English parts of the Western world, so I think, if we are to say we are going to reject that and pretend it does not exist and do our own thing, we are swimming upstream because the populace is not going that way.

So, I think what we should be doing is saying "Okay then. We are part of this Western world and the culture of it. Let us see that Canadians play a bigger role in this culture, whether it be entertainment or anything else."

The idea of creating something that is distinctively Canadian is very, very difficult. I think we are hard-pressed to find things that are distinctively Canadian. We are primarily North American and then we are in the Western world, so perhaps we should be doing both.

If it is possible to create something distinctively Canadian, fine, I am all for that.

The Chairman: You said the conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra played in Prague one night and in Rio de Janeiro the next night. If he is that good, why do we have to listen to the Berlin Philharmonic and the New York Symphony and the London Symphony only? Why can we not hear the Toronto Symphony?

Mr. Bjerre: I will tell you why we cannot. We do hear the Toronto Symphony but building a major symphony orchestra of international standards is difficult and expensive. It calls for quite a lot of scarce talent and a lot of money.

In this country we have been able to develop perhaps two or three major symphony orchestras. Montreal, Toronto and possibly Vancouver could be included. I do not think any of the others could.

Senator Smith: Halifax.

Mr. Bjerre: I have not heard it recently so I do not know...

Senator Smith: You must listen some time. I am serious about that.

Mr. Bjerre: ...to make a recording, say, which is the best way to distribute symphonic music or any kind of music for exposure to the general public, is terribly, terribly expensive.

We are talking about $25,000 or $30,000 just to make a master. This is a lot of money for a Canadian record company to invest when there is a very, very long-term payout. First of all there is a limited exposure for promotion and publicity. There is a limited market for the purchase of the LP's, and it does have one quality. It will probably last for years as opposed to the ephemeral nature of pop music, but there is no quick return.

You cannot make a master as you can for a local group for $1,000 or $2,000 or $3,000 and you get a lot of exposure and you can get your money back very quickly.

So, these are two basic reasons why we have to listen to the Berlin Philharmonic and really Canada is not behind in this way, because there are many countries which are no larger than us and which do not have any more than 2 or 3 major symphony orchestras.

Senator Prowse: Mozart and Beethoven were pretty good, too.

Senator McElman: Would you agree that perhaps we are somewhat behind, taking into account that so much of the programming of broadcasting media in the United States and film making and writing is based upon the history of the United States?

Do you not think that we are rather behind in the visual and broadcasting media in Canada in paying some attention to developing programming based upon the history of this nation? Is this not something on which the industry could have gone much further?

Mr. Bjerre: We have a major problem. What we are trying to do is to take the broadcast industry and isolate it and say "This is an island and it has nothing to do with anything else", and that is not true, because we allow American magazines and literature from other countries, motion pictures and all kinds of material which are part of the entertainment cultural industry, to flow back and forth across the borders of the countries.

Senator McElman: All right. We have lost ourselves on magazines, apparently. Should we do the same thing in the broadcasting area?

Mr. Bjerre: What I am saying is that magazines—take Frank Sinatra, for example. One of the reasons he is popular is the fact that you can see a movie with him in it and you can read a magazine article about him.

Unless we could erect some sort of an electronic barrier around our country where we said "There is no alternative", then perhaps we could develop some...

The Chairman: This is where French Canada has a distinct advantage over English Canada. Would you agree with that?

Mr. Bjerre: Yes. There is a language difference.

The Chairman: And they have been able to build their recording artists.

Mr. Fortier, you have a supplementary question?

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Senator McElman: I am still on that point.

Mr. Rogers: Could I just comment?

The Chairman: I do not disagree.

Senator McElman: Before you do, sir, is it not a defeatist attitude you are taking?

Mr. Bjerre: No, it is not.

Senator McElman: You say that we are trying to create an island here. Because we did not create an island in anything else, we were swamped. And again I say to you is Canadian background history not something that can be moved into without creating an island, simply requiring some dollars and some development (and I suggest to you the broadcasting industry balance sheet shows they have some dollars) and developing some Canadian talent, not only in performers and artists but in writers and using the writing that is already available from Canadian sources. Without new production that is available to you as broadcasters right now? Is this talking about an island? Surely it is not.

Mr. Bjerre: First of all, I do not think it is a defeatist's attitude. I think if there is a problem, one has to recognize the facts as they are before you can start to solve the problem. This is a fact of life that does exist, that we do have this influence and that broadcasting is not an island.

Now, I am not suggesting we just leave it at that and use that as an excuse and not try to do anything. Yesterday when we appeared before the CRTC, we said we did not object to the necessity of some kind of regulation but I think the important thing is to tackle the problem in a sensible manner. To say it is one thing. To do it is something else.

Sure, I think we should develop more Canadian talent and I think we can. We have to be very, very careful though, to do it well, to make sure it comes up to the international standard, to introduce it in the context of our normal programming and not isolate it and set it up and say "This is something special."

If we pressure this too much and set too high percentages on what is required and so on, what is going to happen is two things. First of all programming will be detrimentally altered in some cases because we need 30 per cent of classical music and it is not available. The result is to have endless repetition. We will probably come to the conclusion we should eliminate that programme because no one is going to be listening to it.

If we record a lot of talent that is second-rate, we will be doing a great injustice, not only to ourselves but to Canadian talent because the Canadian people will come to the conclusion that everything they hear that is Canadian is really not very good because there are alternatives for them. So I think it has to be done well and gradually.

Senator McElman: There has been a complaint by broadcasters that the period of time involved is all too short, it should be extended. This, I think, could be said to be the prime recommendation they make for amendment.

Mr. Bjerre: Yes.

Senator McElman: ...to the proposals. I say to you: was four years too short? That is when the intent was given to you and the intent was again given to you four years ago by Parliament.

Mr. Bjerre: I agree with you, Senator.

Senator McElman: And what has happened in the interim that requires now the CRTC to come down hard and say "It is time we laid down regulation since it has not been done."

Mr. Bjerre: That was Mr. Rogers' point. If we do not do it, we accept the regulation.

The Chairman: Mr. Rogers?

Mr. Rogers: I really find this discussion different because in the broadcasting business or in cable and politics, I am known as a nationalist. I therefore am with you 100 per cent of the way. But I think that to bring it into realism, first of all, I absolutely deny that the broadcasters have not in the last four years or last 40 made a continuing, positive contribution in this area. I mean, those statements are just not correct, sir.

Now, the way the question is posed, it is as if we have done nothing and it took the CRTC to get some action going and the only amendment suggested is "Please delay it." That is not correct.

Senator McElman: I was not suggesting that, if you are putting that to me.

Mr. Rogers: The problem with any quantitative rule is this. I do not want to defend the status quo. That is not my role, but if they impose a regulation on music, that 30 per cent be Canadian—we are broadcasters. We do not record orchestras and so on. We buy our records and we will be able to buy records that the record companies supply, and the record companies would tend to produce records that are low budget, rock and roll records, country and western and so on.

Those stations that are trying to provide music a cut above the average, classical is a good example. "Candlelight and Wine" music is another example where there is a 40-piece orchestra, but to simply equate recording 40-piece orchestra music with a rock group is—one is one-tenth of the cost of the other, so I think if we go about it in a quantitative way that there will be a giving up of the above-average types of programming.

There will be a tendency—not by what we do but because of what we are supplied—in music towards sameness of sound.

We have the same problem in music record production as the car manufacturers do. I do not know why broadcasters have to start speaking for the recording industry or defending the recording industry because we do not speak for it; but there are obviously the economic problems for the large kind of orchestras. I suspect that the final answer in music production will be the same as in cars, that for recording an artist, we should get our share in North America.

Now, in the field of bringing up our children to feel just a little bit Canadian, I think there is a great need. The only quarrel that we have is that there seems to be a body of opinion that blames the broadcasters for the lack of our children being brought up as Canadian.

I think that it is about time that somebody in broadcasting said to those in politics "We agree with you. Let us get the rest of the other industries to catch up to what private broadcasting has done, and we will continue to move forward ourselves."

The Chairman: You mean other media industries or just industries generally?

Mr. Rogers: Well, let me give you an example. We are in one of the most dangerous times, I think, for educating young people, with the CBS-EVR invention where there is to be, as I understand it, no production facilities in Canada. For anything to be produced, you have got to send it down to the States to process and you have got to have a minimum run, to look at their rate card, of 150.

Now, obviously the school systems and libraries are going to tend to buy these EVR units, very low cost reproducing machines for television. Our libraries and schools will be full of them and the great tendency will be to buy the New York Times Service or the many university services that you have no doubt read about, and our own universities and so on will be swamped because we just cannot produce 150 copies.

We are not structured in this country, in part because the people in public life have certain constitutional problems, and as a result you will find that the educational material for our children will be coming more and more from the United States and this will now start to be coming off the television screen; and at the very moment that private broadcasters are being urged to do more, and we should do more and there is no quarrel about that. Our only quarrel is that you are not pushing the other people, who have at least as great if not a greater influence on our young people, to do anything.

Nobody likes to feel that no matter what we do, it really will not work.

The Chairman: Do you have a comment on that, Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: I was only going to say that we are not investigating General Motors but the media here. I think from our standpoint, at least, we should stick to the media.

The question I would ask is: in view of the many representations that we have had that the Government should step in and help develop Canadian talent, and that Government must subsidize in this area or that area, in the United States, which has the preponderance of production, was it developed by Government subsidy or by the private sector? Were broadcasters not largely instrumental in developing a strong recording industry and the production of programming facilities for television and so on?

Mr. Rogers: That is a good question.

Senator McElman: Well, shake it down. Did the Government of the United States develop all of the ancillary necessities for broadcasters or did the private sector?

Mr. Rogers: The private sector, sir, did. I think in the promotion of entertainment personalities that the entertainment companies have used radio and television and any vehicle they could to popularize their personalities.

I do not think that broadcasting has been able to control that or has caused it. I think they have been used as a tool and television programmes today are used in the same way for selling records and so forth.

Senator McElman: I have only one other question on this line and that is: in view of the fact that Canadian talent has not progressed, I am sure as much as you would like to see it, Mr. Rogers, what is the prospect of cable contributing to the development of Canadian talent?

Let me say in the type of cable-casting that you are now doing and what you propose, I see little opportunity of a strong contribution. Do you, looking to the future, see original cablecasting providing a strong contribution to the development of Canadian talent?

Mr. Rogers: Yes, I do. I still must repeat the comment that I made earlier that no matter what we do, I am concerned that it will not work, this feeling of Canadianizing our young people because I feel we have to go beyond. The people are watching the screen now, this medium, in a lot of different ways. And I, for one, feel we have to go and tackle the problem with the schools and with the libraries. But I think cable can make a contribution in this area of producing programming that perhaps can be produced on the CBS unit or other mediums and that it can be distributed to libraries and universities as well as shown on the cable system itself.

I think cable will do as much to develop a community feeling within an area as much as nationalistic feelings. I think that it will give the people in Brampton, Bramalea for example, their own television station, their own feeling of identity. Now, of course that will contribute to a feeling of Canadianism. I frankly feel cable will build a community feeling.

I think one of the great problems in our areas are the low income areas. How are we going to get cable into the ghetto areas. That word is appropriate in the United States. I do not feel it is appropriate in Canada but I will use it to illustrate the point. These people cannot afford cable. Should we donate the cable service to them? Should we, with the Government, somehow work it out so that there is some contribution for this? I think much of our meaningful programming can assist people in these areas.

There are in our market New Canadians living in whole communities of certain racial backgrounds. Perhaps Mr. Lind may or may not wish to comment on this. We feel a great need somehow to communicate with these people and most of them will not buy the cable service.

The Chairman: I would like to point out to the Committee that we have another witness and we must adjourn presently. Therefore, I am proposing to put several questions to you, Mr. Rogers, and I would ask you, if possible, for you to answer them perhaps not at the length that I would like and which you would like, but as I say, we do have another witness.

There are certain questions that I would like to put on the record from this hearing. First of all: what is the difference between "elevator music" and "Candlelight and Wine music"?

Mr. Rogers: I thought our wire had settled that.

The Chairman: I think in fairness that I should read your wire. I received the following wire the other day. I made a reference to "elevator music" in one of our hearings and I received this wire from Mr. Rogers.

He said:

"On behalf of the Nation's pioneer good music station, CFHI, Toronto, I would inform you that with the trend towards high rise and research indicating more elevators per capita in Toronto than anywhere else in Canada, Candlelight and Wine a great success. 70,000 Candlelight and Wine L.P.'s sold to date. More than 500,000 people listening to Candlelight and Wine, despite lack of record players and radios in elevators. Elevator riders good citizens, good liberals and not substantially different from those outside elevators. N.B. It is rumoured that the Prime Minister sometimes uses elevators."

Signed, Ted Rogers.

Thank you. What is the difference between "elevator music" and "Candlelight and Wine music." Well, we do not need to pursue that.

I would like to ask you, however, with your format, which you describe as "Candlelight and Wine," presumably you will like to be the most listened-to station in Toronto.

I put the question to Allan Waters when he was here with his group from CHUM the other day: he thinks that his programming format would eventually allow his station to overtake CFRB for the first place in radio.

I would like to put the same question to you. I put it to you, mindful of the campaign which you recently ran and of which I should inform the Senators. CHFI ran a very extensive advertising campaign throughout Metropolitan Toronto in newspapers, billboards and so on, "Look what CFRB listeners are missing", and of course what CFRB listeners are missing are features which are on CHFI.

As I said I put the question to Allan Waters. Let me say in fairness he said he could. Do you think you can overtake CFRB with this programming format?

Mr. Rogers: Well, I think a radio station reflects the personality of those that are involved with it and whether we are ever one day number one or number five, the station is successful and it fulfils a role in the community.

We wanted to serve a certain segment of the community, the adults, people whom we say value their time intelligence. Always you want to be number one, but I must confess to you we would not give up our objectives of serving people that we have served for 10 years and our desire to continue to serve, for the simple answer of becoming number one.

I think that people's taste is changing. I hesitate to use the word "improving" because in our market we have excellent radio stations. If anybody ever does beat CFRB with the tremendous programming and management that that station has always had, then they will deserve to be congratulated by all concerned.

The Chairman: Was the "Look what CFRB listeners are missing" campaign a success?

Mr. Rogers: Yes, it was. I would recommend to the Senators a book called "Up the Organization."

The Chairman: I have read it. Why did you buy a radio station in Hamilton and why did you sell it?

Mr. Rogers: Oh, boy. Quickly...

The Chairman: I am sorry time is short.

Mr. Rogers: ...I am an enthusiast. We did not frankly recognize—I did not recognize how extensive cable would be so we had an opportunity of going in to Hamilton and we took it.

I found that I was so involved in cable and we did not want to dilute our activities at CHFI, we felt it was better to sell it. It was not successful. We found we were doing too many things at the same time.

The Chairman: Was the Hamilton station programming like CHFI with "Candlelight and Wine music"?

Mr. Rogers: It was at the beginning. We thought we were so clever we could just impose what we were doing in one market on another. We found we were not so clever.

The Chairman: Did I understand from something you said in your opening remarks, Mr. Graham, that Mr. Rogers is no longer involved in CFTO or is that a personal involvement?

Mr. Graham: Mr. Rogers was, if I may so describe it, a chartered shareholder in CFTO and has been a director of Baton Broadcasting since its inception.

As a result of the ruling of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission that the Baton interest should withdraw from cable, it was mutually decided that there would be, what I might call, a mutual divorce in that Mr. Rogers withdrew from the television interest as the Baton-Bassett interests withdrew from cable and there is a complete severance.

The Chairman: I only have a couple more questions. You have been rather critical today of the newspapers and the coverage they have given the CRTC hearings, and you made a particular reference to CAB.

It is a fact, however, that both CFTO and the Bushnell interests have, as I understand it, withdrawn their membership from CAB.

Surely that is a legitimate news story?

Mr. Rogers: Yes.

The Chairman: Do you share the concern of Mr. Bassett that CAB's approach to the CRTC was not in CAB's best interests?

Mr. Rogers: I think I share the concern of all broadcasters. I must quickly say this—and I am not spokesman for the CAB—but the CAB is like a political organization. It overly represents the smaller areas, the rural areas, the small stations and so forth.

The Chairman: About which political organization are you speaking now when you make that comparison?

Mr. Rogers: And it speaks for the small broadcasters and small broadcasters today in small markets are greatly frightened and there is no other word for it.

They see regulations that would increase their cost. They see regulations that would reduce their income. They see tax proposals to treat them on the full rate of tax for the first $35,000 of earnings.

The small broadcasters in this country are, in my view, frightened people, and the CAB presentation to the CRTC may not have been sophisticated and it may not have said the right things but I think it did honestly reflect the membership representation of small stations, of which I am not one and Mr. Bassett is not one. You can resign, if you will, but it is important to understand what the problem is. These people are frightened.

The Chairman: My last question should properly be put to Mr. Lind. However, I will put it to you and I would like you to answer it because of your own background in politics. There is a great deal of discussion and interest about the possibility of television cameras entering the House of Commons and/or the Senate, committees like this, and so on.

With your experience in broadcasting municipal councils in and around Metro, do the politicians perform differently because they are aware of the presence of the camera?

Mr. Rogers: The first couple of days probably the honest answer is "Yes".

The Chairman: Then they learn to live with it.

Mr. Rogers: Then they learn to live with it and cable is broadcast in black and white and we do not need the lighting. Therefore, we are pretty inconspicuous. We have smaller cameras than the big networks so would have no effect at all.

For a meeting such as this we frankly should be here if we are doing our duty, if you would permit us.

Mr. Lind: May I make a comment, Senator?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Lind: We are playing with a format now, we hope to start perhaps by September, with one Council group meeting in Bramalea. That is, that we will telecast the Council meeting live and then they will tape phone-in questions right after the meeting is over.

In other words, this is a real instant response mechanism. Each individual member will be questioned on why he voted that way and why he said that kind of thing. I think this will be pretty exciting political television.

The Chairman: Maybe fewer candidates for election.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Rogers, in a talk to the Progress Club of Canada in January, you were quoted as saying—and this is a question supplementary to many of the things which have been said in the last half an hour:

"Cable television is Canada's most powerful means of communication and"—I underline the next few words—"of national unity and it is being given away to Americans."

This is in January, 1970, long after the government edict on foreign control of broadcasting and cable companies.

(a) What did you mean when you said that cable television was Canada's most powerful means of national unity and (b) how in January could you have referred to the systems being given away to Americans?

Mr. Rogers: Well, when you give a long speech, that was about 40 minutes on the microwave issue and many other points, they narrow it down and so forth.

I would like to comment on that. It was not quite in context. As a nationalist, a nationalist in this country has to be not really anti-American as pro-Canadian. Surely in cable it is a perfect example of our own temerity and lack of courage to involve ourselves in this new industry. The industry was given away or taken by the Americans and at the time of the speech, and, I think, as of right this moment, the ownership is still with American interests. It is in the process of transferring by forced regulations with which I agree, but I hope that Canadians could be given some incentive in the future, to not have to pass regulations to take back what we should have had the courage to develop in the first place.

Mr. Fortier: So you are really speaking of past experience and hoping it will not repeat itself in the future.

In what way are the cable systems or CATV systems, yours more particularly, contributing to the development of national unity as a part of the Canadian broadcasting system?

Mr. Rogers: I think in a word or two our role is more in-depth reporting and background issues, the covering of the full news conference in the news building rather than a forty-second clip; the distributing of it to all the cable systems across the country. We cover one million homes now and the other commercial television stations, the off-air television stations simply do not have the time to do this, so I think you are going to see offered to the Canadian public a much greater volume of good Canadian programming of interest.

Now, this will be political. I think it will be sports. I think it will be musical. I think it is going to be pretty exciting. Now, whether they will watch it or not depends upon our ability but I think they will and we will be able to offer the whole picture rather than just clips.

That is why I think we will make a contribution to national unity.

Mr. Fortier: You have done many exciting things in the short 12 months you have been authorized to do it but what have you done during that period, for example, to bring home to your viewers who are wired into your system and increased awareness of what is happening in the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Rogers: We have started reflecting and mirroring the community itself. That is a straight answer.

Mr. Fortier: The Quebec community?

Mr. Rogers: ...with an interchange of programs with Mr. Jarman and others in different markets will, I think, be the next phase.

There are not too many cable systems yet producing local programming. Mr. Lind may comment.

Mr. Lind: Vis-à-vis Quebec, I really feel, as far as I can tell anyway, the finest presentation of Quebec contemporary thought is offered by the St. Lawrence Centre in Toronto under a grant from the Canada Council, and we do all that "Exchange Quebec" series and offer it to our other cable systems as well.

The Chairman: Thank you. I feel I should apologize to the Senators and also to the witnesses that in the last few minutes we have been forced to ask you for shorter answers. Yet in a sense that is always a good sign because it indicates there has been considerable interest in your presentation. I think that has been self-evident this morning.

I am sorry we did not schedule our programming to allow ourselves more time with you, but we have not. We have another witness that we are looking forward to hearing. We must now turn our attention to that presentation.

I would simply repeat the remarks that I made at the outset; that Rogers Broadcasting Limited and all of its ramifications are naturally of great interest to this Committee. The broadcast industry sometimes, as you have pointed out, seems to live in fear and trembling. They should not live in fear and trembling of this Committee. We feel it is a positive factor for broadcasters to be represented at this hearing and to demonstrate the real role they play in the overall media picture, so Mr. Graham, thank you. Thank you, Ted, and through you, could I thank you colleagues?

Senator McElman: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that since there are so many areas on which the Rogers group could give us useful thought and since we do not have a brief from them, would it be too much to ask perhaps that they go into some of the areas we have not been able to cover this morning, or indeed go further into more of the areas we have attempted to cover and put this information to us in the form of a brief?

Mr. Rogers: Absolutely, sir.

The Chairman: We would be grateful if you could do that. That is a good suggestion, Senator McElman. Thank you.

Mr. Rogers: I would like to just thank you, Senator, and the Committee for the opportunity to be here. This has been a tremendous catalyst to the broadcasting industry. I am a younger member of it, and what you have done, I think, has excited the industry. It has given us a chance to participate and discuss and feel part of the whole regulatory process and I think it is winning a tremendous amount of favourable comment in the industry.

Probably nobody ever tells you this, and I would just like to express their appreciation.

The Chairman: Thank you very much. May I suggest to the Senators, that we adjourn for only two or three minutes. Thank you.

Short recess.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call the session back in order. May I remind you while I am getting my notes in order here that the meeting this afternoon is at four o'clock rather than 2.30, also it is upstairs in Room 356S.

The brief we are going to receive this morning is from Jarmain Cable Systems Limited. In a sense the introduction is easy and in a sense it is one of the most difficult I have had. It is easy because everybody is Jarmin. It is difficult because one is Ed, one is Ted, and one is Eric. I will attempt to sort them out for you.

The Chief Spokesman, on my immediate right, is Mr. Ted Jarmain, President of Jarmain Cable Systems Limited.

On my immediate left is the Chairman of the Board, Ed Jarmain, and seated to the left of Mr. Edwin Jarmain is Eric Jarmain, who is a director of Jarmain Cable Systems Limited. The chief spokesman is Mr. Ted Jarmain, seated on my right.

Mr. Jarmain, the presentation you were kind enough to send along in compliance with the guidelines has been studied by the senators. We would like to ask you questions on it and also to ask you questions on your oral presentation which I know you now intend to make. Welcome. Thank you for coming. Why don't you proceed?

Mr. Ted Jarmain President of Jarmain Cable systems Limited: Mr. Chairman, Honourable Senators, I would like to touch just briefly on the highlights of my brief and then spend a few moments discussing some issues that are raised by the developments in Canadian broadcasting during the past several weeks.

As you know, Jarmain Cable Systems Limited is a new company formed to consolidate the Jarmain group of cable systems in Southern Ontario and to bring these cable systems into compliance with the Canadian ownership requirements under the Broadcasting Act. While the CRTC's proposed new guidelines for cable television systems have not exactly facilitated matters, Jarmain Cable Systems plans to acquire the individual operating companies in the Jarmain Group with a concurrent offering of shares to the Canadian public.

In my brief I have placed particular emphasis on the new programming role of cable systems. We and others in our industry are leading the way in participatory broadcasting, in giving the public genuine access to the means of communication. We are spending considerable energy to motivate individuals, groups, institutions, and public authorities to communicate with the community through the medium of cablecasting. And I am pleased to report that our efforts are meeting with some success. As an example of what is being done I outlined in my brief our London system's programming for one week in early March; a copy of this weeks programming schedule is attached to the printed text of my remarks here this morning.

I believe that cable systems should be permitted to carry advertising to help offset the costs of cablecasting. Cable systems would, I suggest, generally complement rather than compete with other broadcast advertising media. In some cases they would serve the requirements of the local retailer who neither needs nor is able to afford the broad coverage of a television broadcasting station. In other cases they would offer local businesses a broadcast advertising medium where no radio or TV station presently exists. We want more and better Canadian programming and yet our resources are limited. We simply cannot afford to ignore any potential means of support for the additional Canadian programming we desire.

Still on the subject of cablecasting, there is a problem to which I would hope this committee might direct its attention. There is a growing feeling in Canada that participatory broadcasting should be encouraged, that the public should be given access to the means of mass communication, that the mass media should provide a place where diverse opinions can be freely expressed. I am proud that cable systems are taking some real initiative in this area. However, on the other side, we have a Broadcasting Act that says broadcasters are responsible for the programs they broadcast. We also have libel and slander laws that may place onerous liabilities on us. We have a new hate bill. And so on. It seems to me that the two notions are inconsistent.

How can I give you free access to the means of communication and the opportunity of free expression if I am going to be held responsible in one way or another for what you say? The pressure on us as cablecasters to be in control of what is said makes it more difficult to achieve the goal of genuine public participation. I am not a lawyer but I would hope that legislation could be developed to give the cable caster reasonable protection.

In my brief I went on to anticipate some of the developments that are likely to occur in cable television in the 1970's, such as:

- ability to carry 27 or more channels
- optional services on a channel-by-channel basis
- rental of cable channels to others on either a part-time or full-time basis
- cable advertising
- programming networks for cable television
- point-to-point and limited network services
- facsimile information services for the home including newspapers, magazines, possibly delivery of mail, access to library books, shopping information, and so on.

The future possibilities for cable are exciting indeed.

Let me turn to some of the issues raised by the developments of the past several weeks. I would like to begin by referring to the Broadcasting Act which places certain responsibilities and constraints on cable systems, on broadcasters and, for that matter, on the CRTC.

It says that broadcasting undertakings in Canada including cable "constitute a single system". While it gives some priority to the national broadcasting service—that is, the CBC—it otherwise treats cable systems and broadcasting transmitting undertakings with equal importance.

It says that "the right of persons to receive programs, subject only to generally applicable statutes and regulations, is unquestioned". I believe that this is especially pertinent to cable television.

It says that the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system including cable should be "varied and comprehensive". This, of course, is why cable television exists.

It says that broadcasting transmitting undertakings—that is radio or TV stations—should provide programming that uses "predominantly Canadian creative and other resources". It does not place a similar requirement on cable systems nor should it in my opinion. I would, however, expect that cable systems would in their local programming use Canadian resources as a matter of course.

It singles out the national broadcasting service—that is, the CBC—and says that it should contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity. It does not place a similar requirement on cable systems although cable systems are making a worthy contribution—through their local programming and their showing of National Film Board films, for instance.

As we look to the future I would also anticipate development of Canadian networks that would again facilitate this Canadian flow of information.

It is in relation to this Act that, for the time being at least, we must view the role of cable television. My personal feelings—and I don't think they are inconsistent with the Act—are as follows:

Cable television's most basic and most valuable role lies in providing a "varied and comprehensive" selection of television viewing choices, in fulfilling "the right of persons to receive programs". This role is fully supported by the Act.

At the same time, I would agree that we may, in certain cases, have to allow for a trade-off between objectives. For example, where cable television might seriously injure an existing service the benefits of each would have to be weighed. Here, however, I believe that the onus of proof should be on the objector. I am afraid that some broadcasters have been using cable as a "red herring".

I will just digress at this point and give you an example of the kind of thing I mean. There was a report carried in the Globe and Mail on Tuesday April 21st in Blaik Kirby's television column, reporting on the CRTC hearings and CTV's presentation to those hearings and it said in this report:

"The spread of cable tv has already begun to weaken Canadian stations hold on the audience both in Toronto and Vancouver. According to CTV it has slipped since 1968 from 69 per cent to 59 per cent in Toronto and from 57 per cent to 51 per cent in Vancouver."

I decided to try to do a little checking on the statistics. They agree with statistics that were presented to this committee, I understand, a couple of days ago. Let me put it this way: to put it nicely I think the numbers are misleading. It depends on which particular month you pick. If you had picked another pair of months we would have found the increase almost just as large in the other direction. If you take an average, which I think is what you have to do in this kind of thing, the change between 1968 and 1970 in the Toronto market just has not been significant.

To the best of my knowledge, none of the broadcasters in the regions where we operate are suffering as a result of cable.

Not only does cable contribute directly to the accomplishment of the objectives of the Broadcasting Act, it can, as I will shortly explain, also help Canadian broadcasting stations to achieve their potential. It seems to me that if we try we can surely find ways in which Canadian broadcasters and Canadian cable systems can work together for the common good. Broadcasters have perhaps been preoccupied with the problem of audience fragmentation. But increasing fragmentation is really just the other side of increasing viewer choice—which, in my opinion, is both desirable and inevitable. I believe that a challenge and opportunity for Canadian broadcasters lies in increasing audience by providing increased viewer choice—both in the stations home market and in markets some distance away. And in this as well as other respects cable can help a great deal.

Let me list some examples:

—Cable systems could make time on a cable channel available to Canadian broadcasters on some reasonable basis. Broadcasters would program at this time with new and/or repeat material and derive advertising revenue therefrom.

—Cable systems could carry more distant Canadian stations—relayed by microwave, if necessary. While there would be no purpose in this to the extent that the stations were network duplicates, the availability of greater potential audiences might lead to a greater variety of Canadian programming in the aggregate.

—Cable systems could pick up and distribute selected programs from distant

Canadian broadcasting stations. Microwave could be used, if necessary. Thus, even a small station might undertake the production of a few fairly ambitious programs in the expectation of having a large audience during a particular time period.

—When local advertising of one market is received in another market there is a considerable economic waste. The broadcaster in the local market could make arrangements to substitute local commercials for the local commercials of out-of-town stations being carried on the cable. The cable company could perform this substitution or provide the broadcaster with an appropriate input point for making the substitution.

—Some cable systems carry two stations affiliated with the same Canadian network. If one of those stations could delay its network broadcasts (other than time-perishable programs) such as the news, then the audience of both stations would be increased. Even if the off-air broadcasts were simultaneous the cable distribution of one station might be delayed.

—A cable system could carry those portions of the CBC network feed not being carried by the local affiliate station, thereby decreasing the need for the establishment of an additional station to give the CBC full exposure.

—Where several channels are carrying the same program simultaneously cable systems (or at least larger ones) could put the signal from the local station on all of these channels. This would give the local station multiple exposure and enable it to derive maximum advertising revenue. Or where different programming was available—repeats of earlier Canadian broadcasts or cable originations, for example—then the channels normally used for the temporarily redundant out-of-town stations could be used for this purpose.

These are just some of the opportunities for cooperation between broadcasters and cable systems for the overall benefit of the Canadian broadcasting system. I hope that others may be persuaded to think constructively along these lines.

The Chairman: Thank you very much, Mr. Jarman. I think the questioning this morning is to commence with Senator Prowse.

Senator Prowse: Do you mind giving a quick rundown? I know you have it here. How many areas do you cover at the present time?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Our group of companies serves 9 Ontario communities, that involves five separate cable systems. The principle communities are London, Brantford, Newmarket, Oshawa and Chatham.

Senator Prowse: And what is it, about 39,000 households that you have?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: That would be the number of households in London. The total number of households in the entire group of systems would be 66 to 67,000.

Senator Prowse: What percentage of the TV sets, the TV receiving sets in your general area are now covered by cable ?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Overall average for all of the system?

Senator Prowse: Overall is good enough. If you want to give specific figures that might be better.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: It varies widely, of course, depending on the market, the age of the system, and so on. The average for the entire group of systems at November 30th, 1969 was 62 per cent. That ranged at that date from a high in London of over 80 per cent to a low in Chatham of 35 per cent.

Senator Prowse: Do you see the situation developing where all of the TV will be carried by cable rather than by antenna?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: No. I think that some people tend to become confused here. A broadcasting station is much more than a transmitter. I suppose in the early days of broadcasting a transmitter was it but of all the things that go to making up a television station today a transmitter is obviously only a small part of it.

I think transmitters are and will for the foreseeable future continue to be an efficient way of distributing signals to outlying areas. Already in urban centres, such as London, we find as a practical matter most of the broadcasting is being received over cable but I don't see why we need to get hung up on the technical means of distribution here.

I think we said in our brief that in our opinion the important function that the broadcaster fulfills is providing programming. That need certainly is not going to go away.

Senator Prowse: He provides the programming and really what you provide is the specialized distribution system for the programming.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: That is right.

Senator Everett: Does that make you then just a common carrier in your concepts?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: The words "common carrier" are somewhat loaded. We are a distributor. Traditionally cable systems have been distributors whereas TV stations have been the producers.

Senator Everett: I notice in your verbal evidence you seem terribly concerned with accommodating the broadcasters whom you characterize as programmers and so concerned, I get the impression, that you are interested more in distributing what they program than you are in taking a position yourself, although in your written brief you talk about the position you are taking in programming.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I think it is important to distinguish between a cable system and a cable company. A cable system is a communications network that has absolutely no programming ability whatsoever. It is a network of wires that takes signals from a single location out to many locations and cable systems are today, and as far as I am concerned will indefinitely continue to be, distribution facilities.

Now cable companies, on the other hand, are organizations with people and so on, financial resources, and are capable of creating programming to feed into the distribution system. The cable system proper is and always will be a distribution system, a communication system.

Originally it was established as a community antenna, hence the words "community antenna television" and that is still by far its most important function, providing people with a way, a better way of receiving a variety of signals that are coming through the air.

I think we made it clear in the brief we view cablecasting as an important developing role for cable companies. We in no way see that displacing the distributors' function that is performed by the network.

Senator Everett: Or being overly competitive with the present broadcasting system?

Mr. Ted Jarman: No, I don't see that there is a strong competition there at all. I view cable as the broadcasters' ally and if it is not working that way we ought to find a way of making it work that way.

What cable is doing is providing subscribers with a wide range of choice. Cable subscribers want choice, they want variety, they want good programming and it is the broadcasters' job to make that kind of programming.

In our distribution role we have been in the middle, trying to get good programming from the broadcasters to the people who want to watch it.

Senator Prowse: When salesmen go to sell cable service what point do they emphasize?

Mr. Ted Jarman: Speaking generally now, I think there are three main points and the emphasis would vary depending which market: more channels, better quality reception, no antenna.

Senator Prowse: And "no antenna" saves them an outlaw of money and then the "better quality" means you don't have the ghosts and trouble and you get a good picture no matter which channel you get.

As between the better reception and the more channels, have you found that one of those is more effective than the other or not, in selling service?

Mr. Ted Jarman: I think it depends quite a bit on the market that you are talking about. I have an interesting analysis here in Chatham Ontario. The off-air reception—people with their own antennas could get 18 different channels.

Senator Prowse: Including UHF?

Mr. Ted Jarman: Yes. That includes six in Detroit; five in Cleveland, Windsor, London; three in Toledo and Lansing and Erie, for a total of 18 different channels.

Cable brings them 11. Obviously what we are bringing is better reception.

Senator Prowse: I was going to say, do you get any UHF overlap in those on the ordinary 12 channels?

Mr. Ted Jarman: We bring some of the UHF stations in and put them on the ordinary VHF channels.

Senator Prowse: If I were listening there could I get 18 channels with an antenna of my own in Chatham?

Mr. Ted Jarman: That is what I was saying.

Senator Prowse: There must be some overlap.

Mr. Ed Jarman: Yes.

Senator Prowse: I get two programs, one better than the other on the same channel?

Mr. Ted Jarman: Occasionally—No, I don't think so.

Senator Prowse: You follow what I am getting at?

Mr. Ted Jarman: This includes a fair number of UHF channels. None of the 18 are on the same channels.

Mr. Ed Jarman: All differently assigned channels.

Senator Prowse: When you put those on to cable ordinarily I think you put a different cable on the channel than on the air. Am I correct?

Mr. Ted Jarman: I think other things being equal that we would try to put a station on the same channel on cable as we do on the air. There are a number of factors that sometimes prevent us from doing that. You cannot on the cable use the same channel that the local broadcasting station is on.

That cuts out one. If you have a UHF channel coming off-air obviously you have to convert that. There are somethings that change it around.

Senator Prowse: When you talk about going to 27 channels what period in the future are you talking about?

Mr. Ted Jarman: Since the beginning of last year, all new construction that our company has been doing has been 27 channel construction. We are not yet using that capability in a 27 channel mode but we realize that we are going to have to prepare ourselves for that.

I might just add that I heard Mr. Switzer speak yesterday and I am afraid I cannot agree with his views on the difficulty of the problem of adapting to 27 channels.

I think our industry particularly in Canada has been much more progressive than it has in the United States and has shown amazing ability to adapt. The technological development has been very rapid and I think, in general, they have been able to cope very well. Much of the technical planning in the cable industry was done in Canada; in fact by people like my father—he would not say it but I will.

We are quite confident of our ability to cope with the move to 27 channels. In fact I would make the opposite point. I think when you have a rapidly developing technology, what you cannot afford to have is large companies because they cannot move nearly as quickly as small companies. You see it in a number of fields where you have rapidly developing technology that the small companies are the ones who are most able to adapt. If you have a huge monolithic organization it would take them 15 years to get around to figuring out the right way to do it and by that time we are into an entirely new area of communications.

Senator Prowse: In other words, you would agree the present situation, where you have the country pretty well fragmented in a lot of small cable companies, may serve the public interest better than letting there be a concentration in the same area, for example?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I think it is a matter of degree. As I understood Mr. Switzer he was saying we need companies five, ten times as large as the largest today. I don't agree with that.

On the other hand, I say that the small cable operators in Canada—the small cable systems in Canada is a man and boy kind of operation and it is not going to be able to cope.

Senator Prowse: If it is too small it cannot operate?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Yes.

Senator Prowse: What channels have you available for your own cable casting today? How many channels do you have on an average?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I think in all the systems we have or shortly will have, one channel fully dedicated for cablecasting.

Senator Prowse: And that would be then dedicated to serving the particular area and giving a limited service which is not now available by the larger general broadcasting companies? Am I correct?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Yes, that is correct. Just as an example we attached a program schedule to the copy of the remarks I made here this morning. If you looked at the last page of the those pages you will see that in London this week we will have a total of 45 hours of cablecasting, of which 17 hours is new local origin material; 10 hours 30 minutes is repeat of that; 11 hours is imported material; and seven hours is repeat of the imported material.

Mr. Ed Jarmain: I think the word "imported" is a little unfortunate. They may think it is U.S. or foreign import. We don't mean that. It is imported into London.

Senator Prowse: In other words, you see the possibility of a completely complementary service without it being in competition with the present broadcasters? In other words, what you would do is add something that they are not able to add to the present mix that the public are able to receive.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Yes. That is certainly our intention now. What that is may depend on the market that you are in. I mentioned that we operate a system in Newmarket, Ontario, for example. There is no TV station in Newmarket, Ontario and there is not likely to be one.

I cannot think of any reason why there should be any constraints on what goes over the cable casting channel in Newmarket. If a cable system is able to fill and provide some of the kinds of programming that the broadcaster would provide if he was there why should they not do so?

In a market like London I would hope our programming would be complementary. I am not saying there is not going to be any competition. I don't think that would hurt.

Senator Prowse: What I am particularly interested in is the area in which you state in both your brief and your written material that at some stage you felt you should have access to advertising revenues. We have heard from other people the fact that there are local merchants in a local area who would like to be able to buy this type of time for advertising service but don't want to have to buy the whole metropolitan area for a local service.

Now do you follow what I have in mind and maybe you can explain your position?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I think that point sort of follows along in part from what I just said. It seems to me that the kind of advertising that would be appropriate on the cable in London might be a different kind of advertising than would be appropriate in Newmarket. Frankly if there is a national advertiser willing to advertise on cable in Newmarket where there is no other broadcast media—why shouldn't they?

The Chairman: Mr. Jarmain, you say there is no other broadcasting media but Newmarket surely, if it is not part of Metropolitan Toronto, you know, it is on the fringe of Metropolitan Toronto and I am sure the radio and television homes in Newmarket go into the mix when the radio stations and television stations in Toronto are purchased.

Strictly speaking you are right.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I guess I would have two responses to that. First of all, I think we would all agree that the programming service that might be provided locally in Newmarket would be much more deserving of the advertising than that which would cover the entire Toronto region.

The second point is, speaking of Toronto in particular, I haven't heard the stations were hurting.

The Chairman: That is a very good answer. Do you have a supplementary, Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: Speaking of the London market, have you heard some stations in London were hurting? To name one which comes to mind, CFPL. We heard from them that they love you but they suffered.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Well...

Senator Prowse: It is a costly love affair.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I didn't hear what they said so I can't respond to that. I don't think that they have suffered financially, if that is what is at issue here.

I have here a transcript from the September 1968 hearings of the CRTC in which Mr. Brown said at that time...

The Chairman: When was this?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: September 1968. He said in his testimony:

"In the city of London alone there are two CATV systems in operation. In total they provide nine channel service to 41,000 household units, or slightly better than 70 per cent of potential households. In Southwestern Ontario there are 23 cable systems operating or licensed."

Under examination from the Commission, Mr. Demers, the assistant counsel, said:

"Mr. Demers: How long has there been CATV in your area?

"Mr. Brown: It is about 16 years ago the first system started.

"Mr. Demers: Can you comment on any reference to your revenue position in the face of the CATV?"

"Mr. Brown: We have not suffered financially to this point."

I am prepared to develop this point as far as you would like to develop it.

Mr. Fortier: Let me get it back on course. Mr. Jarmain, you make a point both in your written and your oral submissions that Canadian broadcasters and Canadian cable systems should work together. It seems to me that London is an ideal market where this working together theory could be applied.

What have you done since you have been in London with the CFPL Broadcasting with a view to developing a harmonious complementary relationship?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Well, just going to the first item there are a number of things that I could mention. The first item that occurs to me is that in the list of possible opportunities that I presented I said that a local television station could make use of a channel on the cable and that, frankly, is something that we have had very serious discussions with the CFPL organization about.

It is something that I think we have been prepared to do. I could in fact document this if necessary and perhaps submit some additional and supplementary information, if you wish it?

The Chairman: I think we would be interested.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: We have been prepared to do it and I think you would have to ask them but I think they might be well prepared to do it as well.

I think the kind of thing I am proposing is something relatively new, relatively unusual, and we have been in a somewhat uncertain regulatory climate as of late and might be inclined to pursue it further if we saw more favourable signs.

The Chairman: May I just pursue this for a minute? London is the most heavily wired city in Canada; is that correct?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I would think so.

The Chairman: And the subscribers to your system watch a great deal of television. Would it not be fair to say that prior to your arrival on the scene many of them at least would have watched CFPL?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: It wouldn't be fair. We arrived on the scene before. We arrived on the scene in the same month that television first started anywhere in Canada.

The Chairman: So you were there before CFPL television was?

Senator Prowse: They are shoeing in on you.

Mr. Fortier: Who is the chicken and who is the egg!

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I think that we would be misleading you if we didn't qualify that slightly.

The Chairman: However, we would not be misleading you if I pointed out to you, Mr. Jarmain, we have no brief for CFPL or for the broadcasters generally; just as we have no brief, as I am sure you appreciate, for the cablecasters.

I ask this question particularly having prefaced my remarks about not having a brief for CFPL or any other broadcaster, one way or the other. That is not the purpose of the Committee. Is it not a fact that if advertising were allowed on cable, and you suggest it should be, would that not have a devastating effect on a conventional broadcaster like CFPL-TV?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I really didn't finish my earlier answer and you are coming back to it and I am glad you did. The kind of advertising that would be appropriate on cable I would think would depend on the market that you are in.

I am going back to my earlier answer. I can't think why there should be any constraints on it in a market like Newmarket or Bowmanville, Ontario; if that in fact would support local programming.

There is not very much TV advertising revenue to be had in those places. In a market like London I would think the advertising service performed by cable ought to be one that is quite different than that performed by television broadcasting stations such as CFPL.

In a brief that we presented to the CRTC in February we stated, just as an example, we thought that the advertising might be totally divorced from the programming. As you know, most television advertising now is sport announcements salted in in the programs or in between the programs.

It is a particular kind of advertising, things like chewing gum and deodorant, cigarettes and beer and so on. It is not basically the kind of advertising that is directed toward people who are making planned purchases. We can envision an entirely different kind of advertising that is not generally occurring on broadcast television today; advertising that is highly informative, advertising that people would tune into, a half hour program, to learn about a particular product or a particular group of products, the kind of product someone plans to purchase.

The Chairman: Shopping prices at the Supermarket, for instance?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: That kind of thing is one example. As we said to the CRTC, in fact we have a program on Wednesday night or Thursday night when they carry all the food ads in the newspaper.

The Chairman: A lot of this would be local advertising?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Local retailers but I don't think also that national advertising is precluded either.

The Chairman: May I ask you a supplementary question on local advertising? One of the matters which concerned the Committee has been the overwhelming position of the Blackburn interest in the London market. There is some "minimal"...that was the word I used about the extent of the radio competition; but there are other radio stations in London. Surely the revenue of those other radio stations in London substantially comes from local advertising.

If your system (a) moves into the local advertising business in London; (b) made some kind of programming and/or advertising arrangement with CFPL Television might it not be a real danger that the local radio stations would disappear?

Mr. Ted Jarman: You have asked two fairly difficult questions. The first one is: I have not seen radio stations carrying the kind of programming that I have in mind either. They too carry spot announcements. The kind of programming that I am thinking about is a very serious kind of advertising.

You don't hear about Eaton's and Simpson's advertising in detail the kinds of specials that they are offering. They do that in the newspaper and not on the radio station. I cannot recall hearing of supermarkets presenting their wares on the local radio station either.

Another example of the kind of advertising I am talking about... let us say, for instance, in the wintertime you might have a half hour program going into some detail... let me take the summertime, it is getting closer to that season. People purchase boats and it seems to me that boats are a planned kind of purchase. You don't walk up and buy a boat on impulse. Most people who buy boats buy boat magazines and try to learn about them.

You might have an hour program some week digging into some considerable detail on boats: what are the parts of a boat? What does this make have in terms of those features and what does that make have? Now this would be a special and anybody interested in boats better watch the program on boats.

I can't think of seeing advertising on TV or radio of that variety. It is a kind of advertising that is totally separate from a cablecasting program. If somebody really wanted the information he would tune in on it and if he didn't he would never know it was there.

Senator Prowse: If the Chairman is through with his supplementary...

Mr. Ted Jarman: Maybe that answers the second question. Let me add one point to that. In saying that cable might make channels available, or time available to existing broadcasters, I was in no way intending to limit that to just television.

I don't know whether I did in the brief or not. The same kind of things could apply to radio. You could very well have local radio stations putting on programming on cablecasting channels.

The Chairman: Or local newspapers, weekly newspapers?

Mr. Ted Jarman: Sure. In fact right at this point in time one of our systems is in the process of discussions with a radio station to try and sort of marry cablecasting with the local station in a smaller market.

Senator Everett: Mr. Jarman, both you and Mr. Rogers have indicated if advertising is allowed, national advertising should be included. Do you not think that would tend over a period of time to destroy the local flavour that you are trying to develop in cable television?

Mr. Ted Jarman: Well, I think the trouble with this... I have sensed here in a number of questions that have been raised that we might split it up on national advertising versus local advertising and I agree there may be some sensible way to divide it up but that doesn't ring a bell with me, quite frankly. I go back to my boat example.

Senator Everett: There is a very simple way of dividing it up. Just say there will be no national advertising on cable television.

Mr. Ted Jarman: The logic of that escapes me somewhat. The boat example I gave, that might very well involve national advertisers.

I think the question is in a given market what kind of advertising service would complement rather than directly compete with advertising services now provided by existing broadcast media.

In Newmarket or Bowmanville there is no existing broadcast media in terms of local programming support so I would say no holds barred.

In a market like London you may want the kind of advertising that was complementary.

Senator Everett: How would you suggest that be regulated?

Mr. Ted Jarman: I think that, for example, we suggested in our presentation to the CRTC we envision in a market like London a different kind of advertising, not spot announcements but advertising entirely separate from the programming schedule.

Senator Prowse: On a different channel?

Mr. Ted Jarman: If you didn't have a different channel at least a different time of day, not in between the programs but a separate program or group of programs for advertising.

That kind of break it seems to me would do what you are looking for rather than simply arbitrarily saying local but not national.

I don't think that that concept about keeping advertising separate is necessarily so applicable in a market like Newmarket or Bowmanville.

Maybe it is going to be tough enough getting any advertising revenue there without placing too many difficult constraints on it.

Senator Everett: Let me ask you one more question: on the CRTC requirement that you black out certain programs, they suggest you substitute your own program material in those black-out portions. Do you think advertising should be allowed there?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: That question takes the lid off a lot of questions obviously. I guess my simple answer to that is I don't see that we are going to have blackouts.

Mr. Fortier: You don't see what?

The Chairman: He doesn't see we are going to have blackouts.

Mr. Fortier: Do you think your power of persuasion will be such that the CRTC will not enforce their regulations, not bring them into force?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I have a few thoughts on the guidelines.

Mr. Fortier: Would you care to tell us?

Mr. Ed Jarmain: Before you start, Ted, perhaps Senator Everett either misunderstands the CRTC guideline or I may misunderstand the Senator.

The Chairman: Possibly both.

Mr. Ed Jarmain: The guideline as it now stands does not allow anything in place of the blackout, the guidelines which were announced by the CRTC recently. The idea of substituting something for the blackout program is ours and it is contained in our brief but that is not part of the CRTC policy at this point in time.

Mr. Fortier: There is nothing that prevents it in the guidelines.

Mr. Ed Jarmain: I believe there is.

Mr. Fortier: That is an interpretation. Of course there have been many interpretations since April the 10th but I would suggest to you in sub paragraph 5 on page 3 of the guidelines there is nothing that says during the blackout you cannot substitute for the dark picture, a program produced by your system.

Mr. Ed Jarmain: I guess, sir, it was in the press briefing that Mr. Juneau held in which he said that for the time being there will be nothing in the blackout period. He did not indicate this would necessarily stay this way forever. I frankly think that maybe they had not thought what ought to be done about it.

Senator Prowse: They are going to limit the number of channels you can look at in a particular period.

Mr. Ed Jarmain: That is another aspect of it.

Mr. Fortier: I would be very interested in hearing your reaction to the April 10th proposals?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: The guidelines offer more to cities like Calgary, Edmonton, Sudbury that need to bring signals in by microwave from a distance head end. However it would be at least regrettable if the CRTC attempted to apply the guidelines in their present form in areas where cable systems could pick up signals out of the air with local head end.

I am encouraged that the CRTC is going to consider alternative proposals to these guidelines as they apply to areas where cable systems now operate. My views regarding the revisions that should be made to the guidelines are as follows. It must be recognized that certain provisions, such as blackouts and the deletion of stations, would be intolerable to the Canadian public now receiving cable service and to the cable systems providing it. The public will not stand being deprived of services that it has enjoyed for a long time, in some cases for as long as 18 years.

Mr. Fortier: Excuse me interrupting. What is the service of which the viewing public would be deprived under the guideline?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: The viewing public would be deprived of the service of being able to view Bonanza on Sunday night or whenever—they would be able to view it Friday night but maybe they are bowling on Friday night.

Mr. Fortier: That is what we are talking about?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: You agree the selection of the time insofar as the viewer is concerned is the only matter which is taken without his realm of choice?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Well, the guidelines also make some suggestion about the deletion of stations. CRTC has left itself tremendous discretionary power in the guidelines in terms of the number of stations that might be carried so it is a little hard for me to be too explicit about that. Perhaps if I could go on: It must be recognized, in any case, such provisions simply would not work.

In many areas where cable systems now operate the public could and would revert to rooftop antennas.

It must be recognized that cable is providing a valuable service—a service that, in the minds of the public and in the context of the Act, ranks equal in importance with other parts of private broadcasting. It must be recognized that it would be wrong to pre-judge the issue of economic injury to broadcasters—injury which, I am quite sure, has not generally occurred. According to the guidelines cable services would be drastically curtailed unless the CRTC was persuaded in individual cases that they should not be. Assumption of guilt until proof of innocence would not be just.

It must be recognized that the uncertainty that has been created is presently frustrating the ability of the cable industry to obtain public financing in Canada—an objective that has been supported by the Secretary of State and the CRTC and an objective that must be achieved if we are to meet the Canadian ownership requirements which come into effect September 1st.

And finally, it must be recognized that the guidelines should, insofar as possible, be positive rather than negative. They should motivate the people to be constructive rather than threatened. They should encourage cable to facilitate the development of Canadian broadcasting instead of inhibiting cable viewing. There are plenty of opportunities for cable to complement the activities of Canadian broadcasters. In an effort to be constructive I have already given you a number of examples. I am sure that even better ones could be suggested.

I am certain that the objectives of the Broadcasting Act can be achieved without adversely affecting the valuable service being provided by cable systems. And I am entirely optimistic that the interests of our three to four million cable viewers will continue to be served.

Mr. Fortier: These remarks seem to be directed at more than the guidelines that I have read and which are dated April 10th. Am I wrong? Are you referring also to the earlier...

Mr. Ted Jarmain: No.

Mr. Fortier: Notices issued by the CRTC?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: No, I don't think so.

Mr. Fortier: Well, let us look at the guidelines, shall we?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Can you show me in the guidelines the items which you particularly take issue with insofar as they restrict your viewing public from enjoying a service which he is enjoying today, which you are providing to him today? You have already explained one, that is the selection of the time. I may wish to see Bonanza on an American channel at a time more convenient than when it comes over the CBC station. I grant you that. What other?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I think the other single most important area would be the question of the number of stations that might be carried.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Two and three.

Mr. Fortier: Yes. In three, of course, the door is left open. The commission may authorize the CATV system to carry programs from more than one... This is not a firm proposal such as the item 5, the blackout one.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I think that you are right. The door is left open here. My philosophy, I think, would lead me to think you should not shut doors and then open them this way but if it were necessary in a particular case to restrict the number of channels then that should be the decision that is taken rather than taking the negative approach and saying this may not be done unless you demonstrate it should be done.

Mr. Fortier: Any other?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I could go into finer detail but I don't really think that would serve any useful purpose at this point.

Senator Everett: We are informed that the CRTC does encourage—and we may be wrong in that information—CATV operators to program in the blacked out area. Let us assume for a moment that is correct. Forgetting you are opposed to the blackout, if the blackout happens do you think it is sound to program in that area and if it is sound do you think advertising should be sold by the CATV operator?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I think we have to perhaps distinguish between the kind of "seven-day each-way blackout" that is suggested might be implemented here and another kind of blackout which might be simultaneous blackout. In other words, if two programs appeared simultaneously, say Ed Sullivan on Sunday night, then the local station would be given precedence. In fact in my remarks I said I thought it would be a good idea. I still stand by those remarks.

We are talking about a situation of Bonanza appears one night on one station and another night on another station.

I don't at all believe that allowing a cable company to program in those times and allowing a cable company to solicit advertising for those times solves the problem. I think the basic problem still remains that the general public would be, to say the least, offended by a situation where it was not able to receive on cable what it could easily receive with its rooftop antenna.

Senator Everett: If you are required to blackout then you don't believe that programming should be substituted?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Well, the question is, as I said earlier, I am sure we can convince the CRTC there are other ways to accomplish the objective the CRTC wants to accomplish. I am not prepared to admit to myself or to you at this point that we are going to have blackouts. Obviously if you had blackouts, programming with advertising would be better than no programming with advertising but it doesn't solve the problem in any significant way.

Senator Everett: Could you answer one last question on advertising. If the cable system requires revenue, which it does, is there any priority in your mind between subscriber fees, local advertising, and national advertising?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Could I answer you between subscriber fees and advertising?

Senator Everett: There may be a third area where you talked about the broadcaster rents the channel from you.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: If I could just talk about subscriber fees versus advertising and not try to make a local-national distinction, which I have indicated I don't think is the most sensible way to view it.

My view would be that we ought to develop the advertising route to the extent that it can be successfully developed without simply taking money from one area and diverting it to another.

My view is there is substantial advertising revenue potential available. If you go back to the Firestone report, Dr. Firestone talks about a tremendous growth in the demand for advertising. I think $90 million in 1965 and $300 million in 1975.

He goes on to point out that that potential will not be realized unless sources of advertising service are opened up in the broadcast media. In other words, you cannot simply achieve that increase in revenue for the industry by increasing rates of individual stations that exist because they price themselves out of the market in relation to other media. He pointed out in that study you would clearly have substantial increased availability of advertising, a supply of advertising, in economic terms.

I think if there is a potential there and if there is a means of support for advertising in cable programming we are sure foolish not to take advantage of it, foolish as Canadians. It just doesn't make any sense not to take advantage of that kind of support if it is available.

I also have no particular concern about increasing subscriber fees to support programming, providing that the programming is of the kind that is worth the added cost. I think cable systems should be encouraged to think of programming services that subscribers would willingly pay extra for.

It seems to me almost by definition it is in the public interest, if the public is prepared to take it on that basis.

Senator Prowse: Do you know of any legal reason that would prevent you picking up

American programs at the present moment and blacking out the advertising, which you could do with a gadget sitting on your lap, and then substituting and selling that advertising period?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: That question has been examined by a legal counsel—not our legal counsel—and I understand there are tremendous legal difficulties involved. Frankly I have a great deal of difficulty with it on moral grounds.

The Chairman: In your brief you state:

“I believe that it is neither sensible nor proper to attempt to devise arbitrary rules regarding media ownership.”

Do you mean just what you say there, Mr. Jarmain?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: Yes, I said in the brief, and I will say again, that I think there are examples of organizations that “break the rules” in terms of some theoretical concept of desirable policies of ownership and yet which companies are doing virtually in everyone’s view just a tremendous job.

I think it is downright discriminatory to say “okay all companies that fit this pattern are offside irrespective of the kind of job they are doing.”

I think that we can well afford in Canada to take the trouble to examine each of these situations on its merits.

The Chairman: To examine each situation on its merit there would still need to be some guidelines, would there not?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I went on to suggest in the brief that I thought perhaps the most logical mechanism for this was we ought to strengthen the general statutes in Canada regarding undesirable concentrations of ownership. I cannot think why the media could not come within that.

Mr. Fortier: The guideline of the Combine Investigation Act is public interest.

Mr. Ted Jarmain: There is not too much wrong with that that I can think of. It just seems to me we spend so much time in Canada digging into the fine detail of all sorts of situations and yet seemingly on the ownership there is a propensity to say “We won’t look at the individual cases but devise a general rule.” I think that is unjust. There are lots of examples of people, organizations, that do not fit the theoretical optimum patterns of ownership that in my view are doing a tremendous job and we would simply lose by all odds; we would get inferior service if we changed the situation.

The Chairman: Do you have any thoughts in connection with the guidelines as to how much is too much? Obviously if one person owned all the newspapers in Canada you would think that is an undesirable situation, or would you?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I would say I would have to examine that on the merits. That would not be too hard to do.

Mr. Fortier: Well, if you look at London on the merits do you think there is too much concentration in London?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I don’t believe so. I think my comments may be particularly appropriate to London. In my view the Free Press organization is just doing a first rate job and my judgment would be that if that organization did not exist there, if it were replaced by two or three other organizations drawn at random, so to speak, from the group of probable contenders, as a citizen of London I am pretty sure that I would lose.

I know it because I think they do a first rate job. I think we would very well end up with a mediocre situation rather than one which is recognized by many people as being first class.

The Chairman: You say “logical contenders”. Presumably you mean the big newspaper chains, do you?

Mr. Ted Jarmain: I didn’t have particular people in mind.

Mr. Ed Jarmain: I think, Mr. Chairman, the logical contender might very well be—certainly it’s going to have to be a large organization because if you are talking about the London Free Press that is a large newspaper and it is not going to be bought by a small man. I think you do have to take that for granted.

I would like to add to what Ted has already said about the Free Press organization. I have lived in London more years than Ted has and I feel the same way he does. So first of all I am going to endorse what he has just said.

I think I would like to make another point too. We are perhaps in a rather unique position to judge it because not only are we citizens of London, and therefore viewing it from the standpoint of a citizen, and have done for many, many years, but to some extent you might say that we are a little bit competitive with them. I can only say that no one ever had finer competitors.

We have found them excellent people to work with and never at any time could I ever say that I felt they took advantage of a situation.

The Chairman: You have also been partners with them?

Mr. Ed Jarman: That is more recently and that is correct. I am speaking back in our early days, you know, when we were struggling to make a go of it. We were not partners at that time. I think they have always been very, very fair and I have the utmost respect for them.

Senator Prowse: I have one other question in a different area. You say both in your oral presentation and also at page 14 of your brief:

"They will bring new information services into the home by facsimile—for example, newspapers, magazines, possibly delivery of mail...

This one intrigues us. How do you foresee that being accomplished? I think Mr. Kierans might be interested.

Mr. Ted Jarman: I am sure he might be. This is a plan, an idea, that has been looked at very closely right now in the U.S. The Electronic Industries Association, which represents all the large electronic firms in the United States, last October completed and filed with the SCC a study of what they saw in the future in communications.

Very briefly they envisioned the development of two complementary kinds of network or communications systems. One was the outgrowth of the telephone network the picture phone and so on. One is the logical evolution or development of cable systems that we have today.

Their view was that one of the most important and valuable services that could be provided over cable, in looking ahead to the future, would be the delivery of first class mail.

There was a paper presented at the IEEE Convention in New York. That is the Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers. I haven't received a copy yet. That is a very serious forum and that is not the kind of wild-eyed prediction that you would read in the TV Guide or something. This is something people are presenting serious technical papers about right now.

This would involve an electronic mail box, shall we say, where you took a letter and had it copied by the electronic mail box and it would be transmitted through the system and end up displayed either on a facsimile machine associated with the TV set or maybe stored on video tape.

Senator Prowse: It would take the contents of my letter and somehow deliver that?

Mr. Ted Jarman: Yes.

Senator Prowse: Something like the TWX development?

Mr. Ted Jarman: Except it would be facsimile in the sense it would be an actual picture of your letter. If it were handwritten that is what would go through.

Mr. Ed Jarman: I think, Mr. Chairman, if you have not seen the IEEE brief, if it has not come to your attention, I would recommend you have a look at it.

It is a very thoughtful document and while we don't agree with all the conclusions that it has reached I think it is one of the most searching and thoughtful investigations into the future of broadband cable systems that I have seen and I would recommend it to you. If you wish we could send you a copy.

The Chairman: We would be most grateful. We would be delighted to accept. We appreciate that very much.

Mr. Ed Jarman: With provision we don't necessarily agree with each and every one of the conclusions.

Mr. Ted Jarman: Particularly the policy conclusions.

The Chairman: Are there any other questions? Mr. Fortier, you have one last question? Your question will be the last one.

Mr. Fortier: At the bottom of page 17 you say:

"I believe that the public interest will be much better served if we worry more about poor or mediocre performance and less about the particular form of ownership."

The question which comes to my mind is should we simply worry in Canada about poor performance or should we do something about it? Do you think programs should be regulated?

Mr. Ted Jarman: Do I think programs...

Mr. Fortier: Programming should be regulated?

Mr. Ted Jarman: If you are asking the question: should the details of program matter be regulated? I would think not. Is that the question you asked? I don't know how you could regulate that. It is like "Should the playwright be regulated?" "Thou shalt write good plays." I don't know how you can do that.

Mr. Fortier: I am quoting your words. The public interest concept, which you and I agree should be protected, will be much better served if we worry more about poor or mediocre performance.

Should we worry or should we have a regulatory agency such as the CRTC which will regulate programming.

Mr. Ted Jarman: I think the easy answer is we have regulatory agencies and I think the time would be better spent. I don't mean the CRTC, we have all the mechanics now surely all of the things we are talking about. The time of these organizations would, in my view, be better spent if they worried or concerned themselves with the quality of the performance as opposed to the form of the organization or organizational arrangements that created the performance.

Mr. Fortier: This worry should be translated into positive action by the CRTC?

Mr. Ted Jarman: I would think so.

Senator Prowse: A study of programming, which they do now anyway, don't they?

Mr. Fortier: Is this what you are saying?

Mr. Ted Jarman: Yes.

Senator Prowse: Some radio stations have been told if they don't upgrade their performance by such-and-such a date they won't be renewed. They do that now, don't they?

Mr. Ed Jarman: This is right. Actually there is a case in the Maritimes recently where the licence was suspended.

Mr. Ted Jarman: I suppose we all have a tendency to attack the problems easiest to attack. It is a lot easier surely to attack the problem of structure. You can draw that on a paper and say I like that or I don't. It is a lot easier to attack a problem of structure than it is to attack a problem of performance.

Mr. Fortier: Wouldn't you be scared? I would be actually scared, I would be petrified of an agency such as the CRTC censoring the programs I may like but which you as a viewer looking at the same program may dislike. I would rather let you make your own judgment and let me make my own judgment than have the CRTC say "That was a mediocre performance. We shall not have it again."

Mr. Ted Jarman: I think I would agree with you. I think I began a long answer with that statement. I don't think you have to get into the details of programming in order to be concerned about performance.

Mr. Fortier: Thank you.

Mr. Ed Jarman: I think it is more the public interest that is being talked about here than the actual nuts and bolts of the program.

Mr. Fortier: You have to relate it to something.

Mr. Ed Jarman: What did they relate it to when they cancelled the licence in the Maritimes? That was public interest. I think they took the action rightfully without at the same time telling the radio stations how they should program.

Senator Prowse: "We don't like the way you have been programming."

Mr. Ed Jarman: "We don't like the way you have been programming. We don't think it is in the public interest."

The Chairman: Messrs. Jarman, on behalf of the Committee may I say how grateful we are both for your written brief and oral presentation that you gave us this morning. We have studied and read your brief with considerable interest. It has been instrumental in bringing us to a clearer understanding of where cable fits into the broad picture.

Thank you so much.

May I say to the Senators we will adjourn until 4.00 p.m. when we will meet in Room 356-S to receive the brief from Actra.

The Committee adjourned.

Upon resuming at 4.00 p.m.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call the session to order. The brief we are receiving this afternoon is from the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists, sometimes known as ACTRA. Sitting on my right is Mr. Victor Knight, who is the National President of ACTRA, and he is himself an actor, and on my immediate right is Mr. Jack Gray, who is a playwright and writer, and he is more importantly for today a member of the Actra executive. On my immediate left is Mr. Paul Siren, who is the General Secretary of the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists.

Mr. Knight, I will simply say to you that the brief that you were kind enough to prepare in compliance with our guidelines has been received and presumably studied by the Senators. The procedure we follow here is relatively informal. We would like you now to make a formal opening statement if you wish, taking 10, 12 or 15 minutes and following that we would like to question you on the contents of your brief, on your oral remarks and perhaps other matters as well. If any of the questions we put to you, you would like to pass on to Mr. Siren or Mr. Gray, please feel free to do so.

Thank you and welcome.

Mr. Victor Knight, National President of the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists: Is it permitted in the opening remarks to hand some of them over to my colleagues?

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. Knight: Those remarks which are more general, I will handle myself but those which are on copyright and things of that nature and rather more technical I would prefer to turn over.

The Chairman: Well, by all means.

Mr. Knight: Well, first Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might just point out exactly who we are: as you have already mentioned we are the Association of Television and Radio Artists and we are a professional association and a trade union representing writers who work in films, television, radio and for the stage and for actors, singers, dancers, announcers and other performers who work in television, radio and films.

We have about 13,000 members organized in branches in Newfoundland, Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg, Saskatchewan, Calgary, Edmonton and in Vancouver. The main thrust of this brief—if I may use these words, because they have been used a great many times these last few days at the CRTC hearings which have been taking place across the street—deals with programming in Canadian television or the ability or inability of Canadians to be heard and seen on Canadian television and the reasons for that lack of accessibility to television as a means of communication for Canadians.

The creation of original Canadian television programs in Canadian broadcasting is our main problem and more particularly a balance of programming, and perhaps if I may I would like to enlarge on that particular aspect.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Knight: If you make a study of programming on Canadian television today, you will find they will divide fairly evenly between those programs which can be loosely described as being news, public affairs, education and sporting events and the balance being again those things which could be loosely described as being entertainment programming. When you look carefully at the programming, you will find the majority of these formal sub-sections that is 50 per cent of the programming, is Canadian made. News, public affairs, education and sporting events in the main are Canadian, and education again, in the main is Canadian. Entertainment however, is in the main foreign-made.

Looking at a particular week's programming, and bearing in mind also that the CBC's record in this particular area is far better than any other broadcasters in Canada, of all of the programming, 10 per cent of it was Canadian, whereas 43 per cent of it was American or imported entertainment shows. We find this particularly disturbing and significant for these reasons: the main purpose of Canadian programming is said to present Canadians to ourselves, to each other and to people abroad. What we seem to be doing however, is to concentrate on public affairs shows, news shows, and areas where we do a great deal of work in the creation of shows—that is to say in public affairs we tend to deal in Canadian subjects. Public affairs unfortunately, very frequently—in fact, most of the time, tend to be critical of the subject. They tend to study institutions, Canadian mores, Canadian people and they tend, in fact, to be critical of things they study and, in fact, to polarize opinions about these things they study.

The areas where a celebration of life is possible, in song, in dance, in poetry and the dramas, we tend to restrict ourselves to a celebration of those things which are non-Canadian. We find this whole aspect of broadcasting in Canada today to be a very disturbing one. We find that there has been an imbalance in programming which can result in a polarization of opinion about things which are Canadian and a celebration of things which are non-Canadian.

The importation of a large portion of our programming, especially in the entertainment area, has resulted of course, in an almost total displacement of Canadian programming in the entertainment field. As a result of this, many of the writers, the producers, directors and actors have left our country. One of the chief resources for broadcasting is the talented people that contribute to programming and many of these people are unable to find continuing employment to be able to create for themselves a career in broadcasting in Canada and have left the country, reluctantly sometimes, sometimes jubilantly, but left none the less and they have become as a result of this a loss to this country. One of its chief broadcasting resources is being lost, and is continually being lost.

The Canadian Radio and Television Commission has made a recommendation to limit the importation of foreign material in broadcasting—to limit it to 40% in television. We presented a brief and a great many of the cultural communities all over Canada presented their point of view in support of that limitation. The limitation is not intended as a negative thing, although the shutting out a thing that the Canadian people desire often is. But it is a positive affirmation of the need for Canadian material on Canadian television.

One of the chief dangers that has perhaps already happened with this wholesale importation of foreign programming is that it is creating a foreign style in Canadian broadcasting and very frequently, even in the areas where we attempted to create our own programming, we tend to make a judgment upon an Americanization of our own ideas. Very frequently programs are made in Canada with the idea that there is a possibility the can be sold on the international market, and very frequently they are sold on the international market; but for international, most people tend to think in terms of the American market and we have not been very successful in selling materials to the American market. I think the main reason for that lies in the fact that we are attempting to imitate American programming.

Frequently writers are instructed to remove from their scripts references to Canadian events and to place it in symbol as it were, not identifying its origin, the place of origin or the incident or things of this kind in the hope that it can be sold on the international market. Frequently, American codes of acceptability for television are quoted to writers so that they can remove all controversial subjects from these scripts in the hope that it may be sold to foreign markets, principally in mind is the American market.

Our failure in this respect has been signalled almost completely as a failure and the reason is quite plain: when you look at American programming for instance it is always about America, it is always about the United States, the people of the United States and its problems. People but it because they are interested in what is happening in United States in the same way that we made positively Canadian programs they would be interested to learn what we say about ourselves. They want to learn about themselves, but this pale imitation, that has resulted from the creation of a style of broadcasting in Canada that is essentially non-Canadian, results in the fact that we are now almost unable, as if guided by this particular philosophy, to create things which are indeed our own. We must of course attempt to reverse this so that we can positively affirm and acclaim Canadianism in broadcasting and then perhaps the world will become interested in what we have to say about ourselves and about our place in the world.

I suppose having made a statement we must attempt to define in our own minds at least our reason for believing that this has happened. One of the probable reasons is because the very heavy commercial bias that results on television today and we are especially concerned with the commercial requirements that the Parliament of Canada has imposed upon the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. At the moment the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is required by Parliament to attempt to find one dollar in every five of the total budget and in consequence of this, if Mr. Davidson is to be believed, they have come to the conclusion that the only place where they can find the bulk of revenue is in entertainment programming and that the only way they can deliver the number of heads that the commercial agencies require in order that they will place advertising in a given program, is with American programming.

This of course, is only in the absence of any real attempt ever to do Canadian programming of a kind which would be of direct concern to Canadians. We are forever talking about our problems of Canadians on Canadian television; we are forever talking about the problems of the country geographically, historically, economically, politically, and we are continually talking about these problems, but never yet have we attempted to demonstrate those problems in the form of a dramatic series which is showing the problems of a Canadian living in the country of his birth and having to speak another language, other than the language of his birth, in order to earn a living in his own country. Never once in the English network have we attempted to demonstrate the problems of Canadians in this way through a dramatized series, but we simply talk about their problems and never once have we illustrated them through the use of poems, through the use of songs, through the use of the actor and the performer. We prefer to sit and talk about them and expose only foreign entertainment shows on our network. This has resulted in an imbalance in Canadian network programming which is causing a bias towards the type of program that we now want to produce to Canadian audiences; and it has resulted in a bias of Canadian audiences who, when asked which programs they prefer, point to American programming. Because their choice is so limited, there is no real choice for them to make and in consequence, they can only choose those that are being exposed to them.

Mr. Chairman, I think that is a summary of our view points, and if I may I would like to hand over to Mr. Gray so he can follow on from there.

The Chairman: Mr. Gray?

Mr. Jack Gray: There are several other points that we make in the brief and I am just going to touch on them briefly. One is the film industry in Canada, which at the moment, as you know, is a weak industry. It is not that well established and in our analysis of it, we are of the opinion that the time has possibly come to give it more assistance. Now, the form of that assistance is debatable, but there are many ways we can help it. Some may be just encouragement and others may be very practical. We already have the Canadian Film Development Corporation, which is certainly a step in the right direction, but there are other things. The big problem is the distribution. How do you get the Canadian films into the Canadian cinemas, and also how do you get the Canadian film into cinemas around the world? That is a real problem, and I suspect that in the long run this will require parliamentary support.

We are anxious to see, as I think everybody now is, and as the government is now in the process of reviewing the Copyright Act, we are anxious to see a thorough review of the Copyright Act and see it brought into line with modern developments. Our own Act was written back in 1924 and it doesn't really cover the modern technology. We have suggested to the departmental committee some of these things that we would like to see happen and the details of those are appended in our brief.

We are very anxious to see that the future broadcasting in Canada is used in the service of the people of Canada. You get rather unctuous in this area and pious and you begin to say all sorts of stupid things, but the fact is there is no reason in our view to assume that because broadcasting has grown up in a certain way it must continue to go that way. Technology is moving so fast that we are all aware there are many changes coming. For example, cable is coming, satellites are coming and there are new forms of distribution possible and each of these, we feel must be kept in the forefront of our thinking so we don't make decisions based on for example, a primary commercial-oriented network of the kind we have now.

The main point I think in my own mind and certainly in actors' minds, is that we are determined that whatever form broadcasting takes in the future in Canada, it is not necessarily based on the American model which we think has perhaps served its purpose.

We mentioned that we would like to comment, if it is useful, on two matters that have come before your Committee: one is freedom of the press in broadcasting and we have a pending submission we made to the CRTC on the subject on the program the CBC has done called "Air of Death", which develops a few specific ideas about news and comments in broadcasting. They are, as all reporters know, very simple and old-fashioned; there is nothing very revolutionary about them. They are with regards to news: "Always be accurate" and "When in doubt cut it out"; and when news begins to shade into comment, "Always be honest in your bias". This happens in television all the time and I've attempted to be fair, in that we try to get the various relevant sides, and you can't do it with everything but we developed that in some detail and it is also in the brief.

In the final section we talked about the prime functions of the mass media and I think rather than go into that now I would just say that it is there and if it is helpful, peruse it. The mass media obviously are capable of doing certain things well and many things badly; and so they require some regulation and they require an enormous amount of support.

The big thing in broadcasting which is certainly important, is the access, and we just don't mean access between an advertiser, or access to a government program or a CBC programmer but access on the part of the public. This is a matter which is of great concern, I think, to the public though they seldom get a chance to talk about it. It is very, very difficult to be heard in the mass media in Canada to-day. This is particularly true, I think, in broadcasting and our hope is that after the technology developed those methods and those opportunities will increase and I think that is basically what we are trying to say.

The Chairman: Thank you very much. I think that perhaps that the questioning this afternoon will begin with Senator Prowse.

Senator Prowse: The statement was made a few moments ago, and it is in the brief, on Page 9 of this brief, Paragraph 4.2 you say:

"The situation is, very simply, that Parliament has stipulated that the CBC must earn revenue."

Now, what is the basis for that statement?

Mr. Knight: Well, it is a response to a statement made by Dr. Davidson before the House Committee on Broadcasting and Assistance to the Arts in February and March of 1969. Under questioning about the use of American programming, he made the reply and I am going to have to paraphrase him but the substance of his remarks was this: we have been given two sets of instructions from the Parliament of Canada; one is contained in the Broadcasting Act which we consider to be our mandate for programming; and the other is to obtain a percentage of commercial revenue, generally accepted to be around 20 per cent. Then he went on to state the problems that he had to face as a result of this requirement to gain commercial revenue and the effect it has had on programming generally, but those remarks can be found in the minutes of those meetings where they appeared before the Parliamentary Committee on the CBC in 1969. February and March are the two separate meetings. I don't have the precise date for you.

Senator Prowse: How much is there to keep things straight. The point I am getting at is this: you make a statement here and it is an unqualified statement. You say "that the Parliament has stipulated that the CBC must earn revenue". I think the fact is that Parliament has agreed that after the CBC has presented a budget, to provide it with a heck of a lot of money—namely about $160,000,000; and the CBC voluntarily, prior to that said we will raise forty million, or something like that by selling advertising. Now, is that not the situation?

Mr. Knight: Well, as I say we derive our information from a statement made by Dr. Davidson in those minutes and he quite clearly states that it is a requirement from Parliament.

Senator Prowse: It doesn't matter that much. The only thing is I think it should be made clear—but I think you will agree that the Parliament of Canada presently is subsidizing the CBC to the tune of about $160,000,000?

Mr. Knight: That is correct.

Senator Prowse: Which is subjected to a heck of a lot of criticism from an awful lot of other sources. I think you would agree with that as well?

Mr. Knight: Yes, Senator, I would agree with that.

Mr. Gray: Surely, Senator Prowse, from the beginning the decision was that there would be support for the CBC, first through a licensing fee, which would be paid by the people of Canada and which was never really adequate for the job and then consequently, it was decided to dispense with the license fee and replace that with a subsidy from Parliament for support from Parliament. So presumably what we've had over the years since the beginning of broadcasting was an agreement that in one way or another the Canadian people could afford it.

Senator Prowse: Let us find out exactly what your point is. Is your point that the CBC should be entirely dependent upon the government subsidy and not be required to go out into the commercial market place at all to raise any money?

Mr. Knight: You might be able to see our point of view in that light...

Senator Prowse: No, but what is yours?

Mr. Knight: What we are saying is this: the CBC at the moment is required to derive something like 20 per cent...

Senator Prowse: Just don't say is required.

Mr. Knight: In order to meet its commitments which they claim are above and beyond the amount of money that is granted to them by Parliament. They find themselves in a situation of having to find an additional forty million dollars—which is really the figure that it amounts to.

Senator Prowse: If there is...

Mr. Knight: Something like 20 per cent of their total revenue. This I think is a fairly accurate description of the situation. Now, in order to do this, they find themselves in a situation of having to put the types of programming where the advertiser can count heads in order to determine whether or not it is useful for him to use that program as a medium to advertise his particular products, especially during prime time which is when the bulk of the audience is going to be interested in watching television, in order to attract that particular type of advertising.

Now, if I can draw an analysis here with what happens in the theatre. If you are a theatre owner and you own a piece of real estate which has been designed and built as a theatre—it has no other useful purpose, but as a theatre. You can't use it for anything else; you might use it occasionally as a lecture hall or occasionally as a concert hall but its chief purpose is a theatre and you can't use it for anything else. You can't suddenly use it for packing books or garments or turn it into a factory. It is a theatre; it is designed that way and you have to pay the rent on that theatre. You have to pay the maintenance on it, etc.

In New York City today, for instance, which is the one area where statistics are available in any large degree, it costs anywhere between six and eight thousand dollars a week just to keep the theatre there. Now, quite clearly you are going to want to fill that as much as possible and to keep it open as frequently as possible in order that you will not have to carry those overheads yourself so you tend to play things safe. You tend to look for a writer who has been a success in the past and you tend to buy actors who have been a success in the past. You tend to not take any chances and you can't do things in a formula fashion.

Now the same thing really is a direct parallel to the advertiser who wants to be able to play it safe and he wants to be able to deliver that message to the greatest number of people at any one time. Consequently he chooses programs which have proven themselves, which have been on the air before and it is known that they can deliver an audience and unfortunately the programming of Canadian broadcasting is such, in the entertainment area particularly, where this kind of audience is available to you. If you look through the programs which are tops in the popularity polls, there are no public affairs shows in those top 10, but there is the hockey game and then nine American light entertainment shows. There are no public affairs shows and there are only American light entertainment programs. Dr. Davidson takes the need to find this extra money as almost an obligation on him to use American light entertainment programs. The result is that there is an impasse in Canadian broadcasting as far as we are concerned.

Senator Prowse: Is there any difference with the CTV?

Mr. Knight: No difference at all. The CTV is in precisely the same boat. As a matter of fact there is an article in Time magazine, just this week, which does an analysis of CTV during certain periods—21 hours a week of prime time broadcasting where there were absolutely no Canadian programs on CTV at all. All of it is American—all of it is American.

The Chairman: I think Mr. Knight, that perhaps what drew Senator Prowse's attention to this paragraph, and certainly mine, was a suggestion that Parliament says "that the CBC must" sell commercial time. I don't think there is anything in the Act at all that compels the CBC to sell commercial time, do you?

Mr. Knight: Nothing in the Broadcasting Act at all.

Senator Prowse: Well, this is the point, Parliament didn't stipulate the point, the CBC decided that they wanted more money than Parliament was prepared to vote to them.

Mr. Knight: Well, that would be one way of looking at it, certainly, Senator Prowse, but as I said before, I'm quoting Dr. Davidson.

The Chairman: I would like to get that information. When was that?

Mr. Knight: It was either February or March.

The Chairman: Before the Commons Broadcasting Committee?

Mr. Knight: Yes, that's right.

The Chairman: Thank you.

Senator Prowse: Let us just go back to another subject.

Mr. Paul Siren (General Secretary of The Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists): I think we can also look back to the two reports from Mr. Fowler to committees in 1956 and 1965 and you will find in both reports a recommendation for the CBC to earn commercial revenue.

The Chairman: We are not disagreeing with that at all. I think that the only point that we are disagreeing with is the suggestion that somewhere in the Broadcasting Act it states that the CBC must sell commercial time.

Senator Prowse: Well, we have disposed of that, but the second thing is this: the ability to sell commercial time is the ability of the program to get audiences?

Mr. Knight: That is the advertisers way of looking at it again.

Senator Prowse: Is it anybody else's way of looking at it? If you are going to put on a show in New York how long do you stay open if you don't get an audience?

Mr. Knight: You don't.

Senator Prowse: Or Toronto?

Mr. Knight: You close.

Senator Prowse: Or anywhere else?

Mr. Knight: But you see when you are dealing with a theatre, you are dealing with a situation where you have a theatrical house of some 500 seats and the people who buy those seats—you have to pay only your overhead out, pay your actors, your pre-production costs, etc., etc. In broadcasting the Canadian public is not one audience. It is composed of many audiences.

Let me just give you an example of that: the "Wojeck" series and the other series dealing with Parliament that the CBC produced, delivered a very sizable audience. When they took "Wojeck" off the air, it was delivering in excess of three million people, which is a very considerable audience. Now, if you look at the BBM ratings on the top 10 shows in Toronto—and I think it is a very significant aspect of this thing—the most popular show is the hockey game and that delivers—and I am going to say this from memory because I don't have those figures with us.

The Chairman: The Committee has the figures on that.

Mr. Knight: It is less than 15 per cent of the audience. I think I am fairly safe in saying that it is less than 15 per cent of the potential audience at any rate. That means that 85 per cent of the people are not watching it at any one time.

Senator Smith: Is this the hockey game you are referring to?

Mr. Knight: I am talking about hockey, yes. I am using the BBM figures and all of the other programs that are in that top 10 list from the BBM; none of them deliver more than 12 per cent of the potential audience, which means that almost 90 per cent of the audience is not watching them. Ninety per cent of the audience are not watching these most popular shows that are so important. So what about the rest of the audience? What about the rest of the people? What about the other three million people who are being deprived of programs like "Wojeck" and can't see them because of the demand of the advertiser to deliver the greatest number of heads at any one moment. The audience consists of many small groups of people with many different faces, at many different times.

The Chairman: Well, I was just going to say that this is the argument that I used with some of the private radio broadcasters when they were here but it is not an entirely pure intellectual argument. I am sure you will agree.

Mr. Knight: Yes, indeed.

Senator Prowse: You put it more kindly than I would have!

Mr. Gray: May I just suggest...

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Gray: But the point really, I think, when we get into discussions of this kind, is whether or not or perhaps to what degree we intend or are prepared to face up to the fact that it is probably impossible to organize any broadcasting for the maximum benefit of the viewer and perhaps even of the producers. Therefore we rely on a commercial base. I think what we have to decide finally, and when I say we, I mean Canadians, is what we are prepared to pay? I think perhaps that, is the point we are trying to make.

Senator Prowse: All right, Mr. Gray, now let us take your point and let us deal with it because I think that it becomes special. The Canadian people are putting up $160,000,000; out of a $200,000,000. budget for the CBC today, is that correct?

Mr. Gray: That's right.

Senator Prowse: And you are telling me that CBC is not doing the job it ought to do?

Mr. Gray: Right.

Senator Prowse: Are you suggesting that we then put up the additional $40,000,000 so they would do the job you are talking about?

Mr. Gray: Money by itself won't do it, no. However, money is part of the issue, yes.

Senator Prowse: The thing that is in issue is talent and ability, is it?

Mr. Gray: No, I don't think entirely talent or ability. Talent and ability is there but talent and ability cannot express itself or is not used to its maximum potential. As a point, for example, there are certainly writers, directors, actors, scene designers and so on in this country at this moment who are quite capable of putting together competence in programming.

Senator Prowse: How would you decide whether a program was a top-notch program or not?

Mr. Gray: It depends very much on the program and on the audience at which it is aimed. For instance, it would be possible to put together a superb program which was not intended to reach the maximum number of viewers. You could put together a program on a subject which was maybe not of interest to a maximum number of viewers. We have here the most popular kind of program, the hockey game, which is only apparently of interest to only 15 per cent of the viewers.

Mr. Knight: In Toronto.

Mr. Gray: In Toronto. In their words, we begin to think of the mass media as having to deal with everybody at all times, but it doesn't work that way. Not everybody reads the same novel at the same moment or watches the same programs and obviously if we wanted that kind of broadcasting for that kind of—I hate to use the word "culture", but I am going to use it anyway—if we want the best kind of culture at any time, presumably what we have to say to ourselves is how much are we prepared to pay for it. Now, it may be that the people of Canada will decide that they are not prepared to pay for that; then it is time for people like me to be quiet.

Senator Prowse: How do you decide that a thing is good? For example, I don't think that Shakespeare had a royal subsidy. Did he?

Mr. Knight: Can I have a go at answering that question?

The Chairman: Certainly.

Mr. Knight: I think if you examine Shakespeare's plays carefully—for example in Othello there is a lovely scene in the middle where they had gone from Italy and they are now on the Greek Islands and they are sitting on the beach and they are getting slowly drunk. One of them tells a beautiful story—coming from memory this is a group of Italian Greeks sitting on an island they are telling a beautiful story...

Senator Prowse: Hardly Canadian content!

Mr. Knight: Well, let me finish now—one Englishman can drink any German or Dutchman under the table any time he likes. Now, there is no relevance at all to the story or to Greece or Italy in this particular little scene that they play but there is a relevance to the London audience who are paying their pennies to go to the Globe Theatre to see and hear them. I think it is valid determination of excellence in broadcasting is that it tells in an entertainment fashion a story of Canadians by Canadians—that it celebrates Canadian life that is I think what we are driving for.

Senator Prowse: And that Canadians are prepared to watch it.

Mr. Gray: Yes.

Mr. Knight: Yes, I think there will be. There are in Montreal. They watch most of these programs because the programs take place in Montreal, they speak in the dialects of the Montreal and they speak about Montreal. Montreal likes to be recognized; they are concerned about it. I think the same would be true in English Canada if we ever attempted to make that kind of program which we have as yet not attempted to do.

The Chairman: Do you have a supplementary Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, I do Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Fortier: It is a sort of double-barrelled question.

Senator Prowse: Ask.

Mr. Fortier: First of all, have you any suggestions as to what can be done to attract that 90 per cent who is neither looking at hockey, nor looking at any one of the other top 9 shows now being presented on television? Have you any concrete suggestions of the way this could be done?

Mr. Knight: Well, I think not at any given moment but I think the essential ingredient is choice. You have to give them a choice of programming and a choice of a variety of things in programming.

Mr. Fortier: That is where the cable broadcaster comes into his own, is it not, with a range of vertical channels which would be available for a minority interest.

Mr. Gray: Well, we are off on a trial balloon because it may be that the cable companies will provide the kind of choice that everyone hopes for, but they will only provide it, to be perfectly frank, if they decide to do certain things. For example, as we all know it is very expensive and certain kinds of programming are enormously expensive and I would think that for many cable operators, if they work individually, it will be very difficult for them to supply a really wide range of programming. I am sure that what we will see in the long run, perhaps even a short run, is a grouping of the cable operators, or perhaps even cable networks. They would have to co-operate to put that together those shows, but one of the things I suspect we are going to have to deal with is the degree to which the cable operators are forced to bring in the material from elsewhere.

Mr. Fortier: That would be an answer, though would it not, to increase presentations to minority groups?

Mr. Knight: Technically it is an answer, because technically, cable has the capability of delivering signals. Yes, there is no doubt about it, they can produce a variety of signals, but it is what is contained in the signal that is important surely. But at the moment, all they are doing is picking up other people's signals and transmitting them somewhere else. All they are doing is picking up the signals that the broadcasters are emanating and delivering them to households.

Mr. Fortier: They are doing some programming, as you know.

Mr. Knight: Well, in Montreal they have been doing it for some time. Do you live in Montreal, Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, sir.

Mr. Knight: Then if you watch it, it is interesting experimental broadcasting via a group of people who are not necessarily broadcasters. It is interesting from that point of view, but I don't think it is the total answer yet.

Mr. Fortier: How do actors feel towards this non-professional presentation by cable casters of local situation presentations?

Mr. Knight: Well, our attitude towards it has been up until now, without anticipating what is going to happen in future, broadcasters, like anybody else, have to learn, they have to train, they have to find out how to use materials, how to use broadcasting, and that is as good a place as any as far as we are concerned at the moment. This applies to people who are working within a limited range. Now, if they come and ask our members, we are into a different situation. We are a group of professionals and we expect to be paid for the professional work that we do, but we have no objection to other type of broadcasters using that kind of material.

Mr. Fortier: Isn't this an area where you should seek the assistance of the cable owners?

Mr. Knight: Yes, as a matter of fact, we are actively at the beginning of conversations with the cable operators, at the moment. The CRTC meetings last week brought them all together and they stopped us in the corridors and asked us to talk and we have agreed to a series of meetings.

Mr. Fortier: So the hardware is there. The qualified obligation has been imposed on the cablecasters by the CRTC. Will the talent be available?

Mr. Knight: Oh, in large numbers.

Mr. Fortier: There is enough Canadian talent to go around?

Mr. Knight: There is enough Canadian talent to do anything that is thrown at us.

Mr. Fortier: Even 100 per cent Canadian talent?

Mr. Knight: Oh, yes indeed if it is necessary.

The Chairman: Senator Prowse?

Senator Prowse: Well, this is the area that I was wanting to get into earlier. This may be unfair and I will agree that it is before I start that...

The Chairman: That has not inhibited you before!

21518-43

Senator Prowse: Well, I got awfully fed up with looking at program after program and seeing the same faces except at different ends of the podium and perhaps, unfairly, this is where the unfair part comes in—I picked up the idea that this was because they themselves had a real tight-closed shop.

Mr. Knight: The nature of our agreement with all broadcasters is the same and what it amounts to is this. They will ask any non-qualified performer to work with our member and it means simply this: any person that they want to hire, they are free to hire and the only qualifications being that they must pay them our rates and be qualified by the Association. In other words, they have agreed they will not—because the person is not established professionally in the sense that he is a member of this Association or some other Association—be it that he comes from another part of the world—ask him to work for lower rates, but they are quite free to engage anybody they choose. There is no prohibition in any of our agreements in that regard.

Senator Prowse: In other words when a person gets hired to do a job he automatically becomes a member of your Association?

Mr. Knight: No. Our constitution requires him to have four professional engagements before he becomes a member of our association.

Senator Prowse: How in the heck does he get four professional engagements if nobody else can hire him unless he belongs to you?

Mr. Knight: When I was trying it out in Montreal, it required 10 and I got the 10.

Senator Prowse: Well, how do you do it? If they won't let you work...

Mr. Knight: Oh, that's not true.

Senator Prowse: Well, explain it to me then.

Mr. Knight: We will not let them work at rates that are lower than ours. We negotiate minimum rates and anybody who is going to work in the area where our members are employed, all work at the same rate.

Senator Prowse: Yes.

Mr. Knight: These are minimum rates, you understand. They are not by any means the highest rates. Many of our members will not work for these rates. They are not allowed to work below that minimum but the producer may choose from among all performers available to him so he is not limited to the membership of ACTRA in choosing these performers or broadcasters he is searching for. He can choose from many sources.

Mr. Fortier: But no member of ACTRA will work with a non-member, is that right?

Mr. Knight: Yes, he will.

Mr. Fortier: In the same performance?

Mr. Knight: In the same performance, by all means.

Senator Prowse: He just insists that the fellow be paid the same rate.

Mr. Knight: That's right.

Senator Prowse: That is better than I thought it was. What provisions do you have for bringing in and training new people?

Mr. Knight: Well, unfortunately we don't have the facilities for training. This is why we keep this open-door policy. Of course, in the dramatic field, there are dramatic schools; in the musical field there are musical schools. But broadcasting is much wider than that and there are many broadcasters who get training in far different fields. Many broadcasters come from the newspaper world, for instance. We don't have the facilities to train people, in fact, neither do we have the ability to judge their merits. This is why we keep the open-door policy, so that there is an open field for them to come in to broadcasting without any restrictions from us.

Senator Prowse: We have the Ryerson Institute in Toronto and we also have various trade schools.

Mr. Knight: We have the universities also. They are setting up communications departments and things of this nature.

Senator Prowse: You don't have a direct connection there, or do you just carry on a form of...

Mr. Knight: Many of our members work in the communications field as indoor instructors and things of this nature, but no, we don't have any direct connection.

Senator Prowse: Generally speaking then, your situation is that your organization—the only limitation that you set is, "Alright, if you are going to put on a show here you have to pay people a fair price for a fair appearance".

Mr. Knight: That's right.

Senator Prowse: Is that basically it?

Mr. Knight: Yes.

Senator Prowse: And you say that in addition to that, you have no concern at all about the ability of the Canadian broadcasting industry to meet the demands that are made upon you now by the CRTC?

Mr. Knight: I believe that the talent is readily available in Canada to do anything that is required of us. If I may quote Mr. Chercover on this at the CRTC hearings last week. He said quite clearly there is no problem with regards to either creative or performing talent in Canada. It is readily available.

Mr. Fortier: He also praised the union for locating new and good Canadian talent. Do you recall that statement?

Mr. Knight: No, I didn't hear it.

Mr. Fortier: Well, I am informed...

Mr. Knight: Because I wasn't there at all the hearings.

Mr. Fortier: Well, I was informed that he did. The question is: what is "new talent"? Is this amateur or professional new talent?

Mr. Knight: Well, there is a stage where almost all talent is amateur and progresses to professional when he gets paid for what he does.

Mr. Fortier: And then he can join you?

Mr. Knight: That's right.

Senator Prowse: On a regular basis?

Mr. Knight: That's right.

Mr. Fortier: Just the same you are not interested in promoting or assisting new talent?

Mr. Knight: Interested we are but we don't have the resources or facilities to do it. We have co-operated with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, especially in the writing field in the past, in setting up work shops for would-be writers, etc. but it has not been entirely on our initiative—it has partly been the CBC.

Senator Prowse: While you don't have the facilities to go out and create the talent yourself or to gather it up and train it, besides this, the only present limitation you have on the use of new talent is that they be paid at professional rates if they are used as professionals.

Mr. Knight: That's right.

Senator Prowse: Is that a fair way of putting it?

Mr. Knight: That is a fair way.

Senator Petten: And then after four occasions do they have to join your union?

Mr. Knight: No, they don't have to. They are invited to, but they can continue to work on their own but most of them join because there are considerable advantages for them.

Senator Petten: They prefer to join?

Mr. Knight: Yes.

Senator Petten: How do you build it up?

Mr. Knight: Well, I have only met one occasion where a performer who had got his four assignments in then didn't want to join the Association but he subsequently did however.

The Chairman: The discussion we have been having relates primarily to television. Have you any comments on the radio?

Mr. Gray: Radio is one of those extraordinary areas. Canadians have done some fabulous things in radio. I listen to a lot of radio and I have spent many years in England and I would say that our radio at its best is the best in the world. It is the CBC radio I am talking about—I must qualify that; it is the CBC radio that I am talking about. Private radio does not have the same performance record but the CBC radio is in my own opinion one of the finest broadcasting organizations in the world, and it is particularly good in certain areas.

It has I think, trained more talent and particularly given more opportunities to more writers than any. The BBG of course has a marvellous record there as well, but it is just superb and whenever I get an opportunity I like to say so.

The Chairman: Well, all right then, let me ask you the most obvious question, and it is a pretty tough question, but why doesn't anybody listen?

Mr. Gray: Well, I suppose—well, I really don't know, I'm not really qualified to answer that.

The Chairman: You do know that the ratings are very small I'm sure.

Mr. Gray: The ratings are relatively small but I used to work on Maclean's magazine...

The Chairman: Well, I was going to ask you about that in a few minutes.

Mr. Gray: And I remember Ralph Allen and I once had a long argument about fiction in Maclean's. It is minority audiences that we are talking about now, you know, and everything becomes relative. Well, in any case that only about 40 per cent of the readership of Maclean's read the fiction, issue after issue; one issue would be 39; and the next issue would be 41 and so on. They were determined to kill the fiction which they ultimately did.

The Chairman: Why?

Mr. Gray: His argument was that 40 per cent wasn't enough. I think then what you really get into in regards to radio is probably you have to decide at what point you are not really serving sufficient people to justify it. I think and I have said to the people in the CBC, and I would like to say publicly that I think it would be a disaster if the CBC radio operation were cut-back merely because of some kind of a new miracle appreciation. I suspect the people who do listen to the CBC are very loyal and therefore a very good audience, if I can use those terms. Certainly when you turn the audience around and when you look at what it does for the creative end of the business you then go on to assist the country in many other fields. For example, novels—Morley Callaghan lived on radio you know for years and now everybody says that Morley Callaghan is a fine writer and we have given him $65,000.00 this year and so on; but he ate off of the radio program for years. For a long time, it was our Canada Council.

The Chairman: Again, I just wish more people would listen. What can be done in that area?

Mr. Gray: Yes, I agree.

The Chairman: You know, the private broadcasters have put forward some very interesting views on this. We have heard, for example, and this is one opinion that has been expressed, that the audience goes where the commercials are and that if the CBC radio became more commercial, people would listen.

Mr. Gray: I think that is one of those awful arguments about which I really have no sound comment. You know, that is just not worth a comment.

The Chairman: Another argument which has been put forward and I'm not sure whether it was by the private broadcasters or by others—interestingly most of the private broadcasters have said that CBC radio does have a place, but they have not been able to answer the question why people don't listen—we also have heard that CBC isn't local enough. Do you think that is a valid observation?

Mr. Gray: No, I think local radio is being served very well by many private broadcasters and I would have thought that the CBC's main role was to provide what they call regional programming—other than local or community programming—and a national programming which nobody else seems to be willing to provide. I don't know of any private broadcaster that is willing to invest in the national scene.

The Chairman: Do you think that the people of Canada know about CBC radio?

Mr. Gray: I wonder about that. I wonder—do they really know about that. You know that the CBC audience is very loyal and the people who like it, like it so much that they will go to bat for it.

The Chairman: Mr. Knight?

Mr. Knight: Pierre, as you know, made an interesting comment—not about radio but I think it is relevant to radio as well towards the end of the hearings yesterday. He picked up a copy of the Television Times and the other publications on television and he turned over the pages one after another and all of them displayed American performers, American programs, American this, American that and none of them was giving any publicity whatsoever to Canadian programs, Canadian radio or Canadian television. He made the complaint that he had kept these copies for over a year and this attitude of the newspaper in publicizing television and radio was throughout all of the issues that he had—he couldn't see any publicity for Canadian programs whatsoever.

The Chairman: Let me ask you a question on newspapers. You say at 2.7 in your brief on Page 7 and I quote:

“One of the reasons it would be difficult to establish a “national newspaper” in Canada, for example, is this desire for the local gossip, which masquerades in our papers under the name of news.”

What newspapers are you thinking of? Can you give us some specific examples of what you had in mind?

Mr. Knight: I think Jack could handle that one.

Mr. Gray: I think I am a very avid reader of newspapers and I pick them up in bundles wherever I go in Canada and I'm sure you all do and with the exception of a few newspapers in this country it is extraordinary how parochial they really are. Now, I wouldn't quarrel with that. I think there is a certain amount of rhetoric in this country, as you would understand, but certainly one of the prime functions of the newspapers in our country is to do just that—to reflect their own community. I think they reflect it to the point where they exclude most of the world—that is a personal view. That is really what we meant—in other words, entirely apart from the mechanical difficulties of distributing it across the 4,000 miles simultaneously (and perhaps when facsimiles and things like that come in we will be able to do that) I think that if anybody put together a national newspaper, they would have a lot of trouble anyway unless he made sure that every local edition had these kinds of information in it.

Mr. Knight: There is an interesting example of this kind of thing and that is when Paul Siren had occasion to phone the president of our local association in Edmonton—when was it Paul?

Mr. Paul Siren: Yesterday.

Mr. Knight: As you know the CRTC hearings have been going on for almost two weeks and he has been unable to find any satisfying reports in any of the Edmonton newspapers.

Senator Prowse: Well, there is only one he has to look at.

Mr. Knight: I beg your pardon.

Senator Prowse: There is just the one newspaper that he can look at.

Mr. Knight: In that one newspaper he has been unable to find any real coverage of the CRTC hearings and this is something of course which is of national importance to Canada to-day. The future of broadcasting in Canada should be considered—I would have thought—of national importance, but apparently the Edmonton newspaper is not sufficiently interested, in that he can't find enough comment on it to satisfy his demand.

The Chairman: When you say the Edmonton newspaper we should be clear that you are exonerating Canadian press.

Mr. Knight: Oh, yes. They have had good coverage of it.

Senator Prowse: At least they have the stories that do appear in other places.

The Chairman: Notwithstanding the rhetoric inherent in this sentence or two but you did say "with a few exceptions". Are the exceptions so few that you could name them for us or would that be an impossible task?

Mr. Gray: Well, I wouldn't want to name them because the only papers that I really know well are the Toronto papers, but the Toronto papers—particularly the Globe and Mail and the Star seem to me to have a kind of metropolitanism...

The Chairman: How about outside of the Toronto area?

Mr. Gray: Well, the only papers that I see regularly or with any regularity that I can comment on are the Montreal Gazette and the Star. But a comment of this kind I think refers specifically for example to the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. A paper of that kind, which manages in so-called two editions, one in the morning and one in the evening—they are still different papers but they are basically the same—manages to ignore so much of the world it is just astonishing. I sense that...

The Chairman: I was going to say you should explain that you had occasion to read those papers regularly.

Mr. Gray: I was briefly connected with the Neptune Theatre when it first began so I was down there about six months. Really you do get so cut-off, you are avid for news so you start buying any newspapers that you can get your hands on at the time.

Senator Smith: Mr. Chairman, this will be a good time for me to comment that the efforts that Mr. Gray put forth were indeed very laudible, to the extent that Neptune is still going along in the Halifax area.

Mr. Gray: I didn't have very much to do with it—it was Leon Major and that marvelous community of yours.

Senator Smith: Well, I thought you had something to do with that as well.

Mr. Gray: I was there, in fact at the very beginning but they did all the work.

Senator Smith: Well, I have heard your name mentioned in connection with that.

Senator Prowse: May I ask just one question.

The Chairman: Well, I would like to stick to newspapers just for a minute or two. Is it on newspapers?

Senator Prowse: No, go ahead.

The Chairman: I will just finish on this because this is not a particular study of broadcasting and television. We are interested in that but as part of the much broader picture. So we are interested in your views on the newspapers. I just have a couple of questions. I'm sure you are familiar, Mr. Knight or Mr. Gray, with the trend towards the concentration of the media in Canada. Does this concern you and do you have an attitude towards it?

Mr. Knight: Yes and no, because I think the same thing is beginning to happen in broadcasting as well. There are two conflicting viewpoints on this. First is the one that Jack has talked about, and that is the need for a national reflection in both the newspapers and in broadcasting. I think there is an absolute need to reflect the totality of Canada in both ends of the media—both television and radio and in newspapers. I think we should actively seek to find ways and means of doing that. However, the CRTC is very much concerned in broadcasting and I notice you have been concerned in recent reports about the media being concentrated in too few hands. I think there is a real danger or perhaps there is an implicit danger that, perhaps not a real danger but there is a possibility of a danger of the medium being directed if it is in too few hands. I think it needs, as Parliament does, an opposition as it were; there needs to be another voice; there have to be several voices, not just one voice. I don't think there is any danger in any newspaper in Canada, or at least I don't see it—perhaps you have far more information than I have—but certainly looking at newspapers in Canada there doesn't appear to be that kind of reality at the moment.

The Chairman: Mr. Gray?

Mr. Gray: May I make a personal comment?

The Chairman: Certainly.

Mr. Gray: I would have thought—I don't know what the point is but beyond a certain point when they start to grow too large when the chains become too great we are in a real danger. I don't know quite how to express it but I remember back in the days when Lord Thomson was gathering together all of the newspapers—and as you go around the country you begin to see it—now, he was scrupulous in keeping editorial control in the hands of the local editors and to the best of my knowledge never interfered in the actual editorial, running of the paper. But other than that there is an air about them as you know. I would prefer personally to have newspapers owned individually if that were possible.

The Chairman: I have just one other question for Mr. Gray and then I will come to you, Senator Prowse. I am aware of the fact that you were a former assistant editor of Maclean's magazine in the 50's.

Mr. Gray: Yes, everybody was called an assistant editor in those days.

The Chairman: I think the Committee would be interested in any opinion you might express about the Canadian magazine industry presently.

You followed these hearings to know about discussions back and forth?

Mr. Gray: Just through the press.

The Chairman: Well, could you comment on the Canadian magazine industry generally?

Mr. Gray: Well, our current magazine situation obviously is very difficult. There aren't enough of them and they aren't very good. One of the encouraging things and we do hope that it will work out economically is the specialization of magazines. I assume that we will see more of that in the future as there is a larger economic base. But, by and large, the magazine industry doesn't seem—it is not healthier than it was 10 or 15 years ago and it wasn't that healthy at that time.

The Chairman: Is there a future for the magazine industry in Canada?

Mr. Gray: Well, let's put it this way; at this particular point, and I don't know if I am speaking out of turn or not—but at this particular point a magazine like Saturday Night, which is under the editorship of Bob Fulford, has once again become an important magazine in Canada. I understand that it is not as healthy financially as it should be or perhaps it is even in real danger. I don't know specifically and I wouldn't want to put them in public troubles; but if we lose that magazine we have lost something of actual permanent value and as I understand it is not that much money to make it work. In terms of broadcasting, it is just a drop in the bucket.

There are certain areas of concern and information that seems to be better handled in print than in other ways. I think we need the magazine quite frankly. We need the magazine the same as we need the newspapers because I think we need the multiple choice.

The Chairman: Senator Prowse?

Senator Prowse: You are a group of people that are so concerned with the Canadian image and who resist the American image and I am intrigued with the fact that your brief is set up on the 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, which is an American set-up.

Mr. Gray: No, it is a requirement of the Committee, Senator. Like I said in the outline—I have written, or we have never written anything in these terms but it asks that the paragraphs be numbered that is why they are numbered.

Senator Prowse: No, but 1.1, 1.2, 1.3—that is a little different numbering?

Mr. Gray: That is the system that we were asked to use.

Senator Prowse: This particular form of numbering is an American form of numbering.

Well, what I wanted to get to is this business of copyright. What is your complaint about the Copyright Act and I do have a copy of the Act here if somebody wants to play with it.

The Chairman: Mr. Knight?

Mr. Knight: Well, there are a number of areas in the Copyright Act which we feel need to be tightened in some way. There are a number of needs in Canadian education that need to be looked after from the point of view of the Copyright Act; but our chief concern is in broadcasting of course.

A writer at the moment makes contractual arrangements with a broadcaster and always, until the time of the introduction of cable, the broadcaster had control over the disposition of that work. That is no longer true. With cable, it is quite possible for a cable operator to pick a broadcast up and distribute it in an area which was perhaps not reflected in the original copyright or in the original contractual arrangement with the writer.

Now, the Copyright Act is in such vague terms that it is not clear as to whether or not the writer has protection for the use of his intellectual material. The cable operator disassociates himself from any responsibility in this matter and because of the advent of the technical uses that can be put by cable satellite and what you will, I think the Copyright Act needs to be up-dated to reflect the technology of today.

The principal purpose of copyright is to safeguard intellectual material, so that the person creating the material can operate within a profession and provide that material for the benefit of society. He must be able to live and the only means he has to live is through the protection the Copyright Act gives him. If the Act doesn't do that, it needs to be changed in order to serve those purposes. This is our main feeling and we are concerned with updating it so it reflects the technical reality of today.

The Chairman: Mr. Gray?

Mr. Gray: Did you have a specific opportunity to see the specific recommendations that we have made?

Senator Prowse: I read your brief yesterday.

Mr. Gray: I think that Mr. Knight has covered the major points but it is the mechanical change. The other thing is that it seems to us to be very important that Canada participates in the international agreement at the highest level.

Senator Prowse: And you are referring there to a Swedish one.

Mr. Gray: Yes, it is the Stockholm version.

Senator Prowse: Is that bringing something new to copyright, because I didn't have a copy of that and I didn't know where to get one.

Mr. Gray: I believe it is the opinion of those who drafted it that it is the best wording and it covers most of the technology up until three or four years ago. I think it provides certain options which countries can contract out and so on, but the thing that made it difficult, of course, and the reason it hasn't been adopted widely was the protocol and of course the countries are now in the process of sorting that out among themselves.

Generally we hope that Canada will see its way clear to adopt a copyright legislation internally at its highest level and to enter into the international agreement at the every highest level because this is tremendous protection for the Canadian career.

Senator Prowse: So there is not really any great change—it is just a matter of catching up with new situations created by changing technology.

Mr. Knight: Yes.

Mr. Gray: I think it is only fair for us to point out that we have suggested that there be certain changes in the Canadian Act. For example, one of the ones which I would hope to see widely debated in this country is in regards to education. Now, there are certain exceptions for education now, but the technology is such and the use of material in education is such that it looks to us as if that is an area we can examine very carefully. The usual example is that nobody objects to buying the books and nobody objects to buying the pencils and nobody objects to buying the teachers or paying the teachers—why then should the material—the intellectual material—to be used be in some different category?

Now, you can get into long and very interesting philosophical arguments but I think it is a very simple matter in essence. The other thing is the compulsory licensing in the current Act. There are suggestions that there be compulsory licensing for certain purposes and we are worried about that because of the data-retrieval system to come. Now, if there is compulsory licensing for any material...

Senator Prowse: By compulsory—would you explain what compulsory licensing is?

Mr. Gray: Well, as I understand it compulsory licensing—it means that under certain circumstances and at certain times your material can be...

Senator Prowse: It will force me to release my material?

Mr. Gray: Yes, or allow it be used in a certain way.

Senator Prowse: Yes.

Mr. Gray: If for example, there is a compulsory licensing system which allows that material to be inserted in a computer or a data-retrieval system without the permission of the copyright owner, who ever he may be, then you are in real trouble because once it is in I don't think you can really control it.

Senator Prowse: Once that data retrieval system gets into something with a satellite on top of it.

Mr. Gray: That's right, senator.

The Chairman: Mr. Knight?

Mr. Knight: We are concerned also in another area of copyright. We haven't spoken publicly on this yet, but we will be doing so in the near future and that is in relationship to the Rome Convention of Neighbouring Rights which has the effect of granting some degree of copyright protection to a performance by a performer. Not the written words which is being performed but...

Senator Prowse: But to the performance itself?

Mr. Knight: Yes, to the performance itself. This is protected separately in Great Britain under the Performers Protection Act.

The Chairman: I am not sure that I understand what you mean.

Mr. Knight: You see, there are two kinds of copyright. Written work of the poem can be protected and my reading of the poem has at this moment in Canadian law not been protected but it is protected by an International Copyright Act known as the Rome Convention of Neighbouring Rights.

The Chairman: Well, I am sure your reading would be worth protecting.

Mr. Fortier?

Mr. Fortier: As you probably know there is a reference in the Copyright Act to performing rights.

Mr. Knight: Yes, performing rights but it is the performance of his written work, not my performance of his written work that is being protected by the Copyright Act at the moment. There is a difference. If I may explain: our concern about it at the moment is that a little Japanese machine which is being largely distributed amongst educational outlets in Canada at the moment and in various other areas. It is a half-inch video-tape recorder which you can buy for as little as $800.00. You can attach it to your television set and you can record anything that comes over on half-inch tape. You can replay this and many of the educational authorities in Canada at the moment are doing just that. They are keeping the television sets on constantly, recording everything that is coming in that is of any value to them and then playing it back and distributing it amongst large areas of school boards and that sort of thing. We are very concerned about this because this is completely outside of any contractual arrangements which we have with the broadcasters. Yet, quite obviously, we cannot hold the broadcaster responsible for it, since it is no act of his that is causing this distribution. So it is this that we are looking at at the moment. We haven't come to any final conclusions about it but we are very much concerned about it.

Mr. Fortier: Senator Prowse has just put a copy of the Copyright Act before me. It indicates that the musical performer is protected in cases of literary, dramatic, or musical work, any record, perforated roll, cinematograph film, or other contrivance.

Mr. Gray: Yes.

Mr. Knight: No, I don't believe so.

Mr. Fortier: Well, I had occasion to discuss that with the Honourable Mr. Basford about six months ago and you may recall when the Sound Recording Licence was set up—SRL.

Mr. Knight: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Knight: The record manufacturer has the right but not the performer.

Mr. Fortier: Well, there was a discussion between the Minister and the people that I was representing—however that is in another field. The question I wanted to ask Mr. Knight or Mr. Gray is this. In Appendix A dealing with the matter of copyright you suggest in Recommendation Number 5;

"That a new Copyright Act clearly prohibit all unauthorized uses of copyright materials, no matter how this is accomplished, and in particular that photocopying, copying off air, and transmission by cables and all similar devices, be brought under control of the Copyright Act."

Are you suggesting that the concept of anything that is broadcast through the air becoming a public property should now be removed and that if it is received by a broadcast undertaking that it be protected also?

Mr. Gray: I am not a lawyer so I wouldn't want to get involved in legal definitions here but really what we are concerned with is not the transmission but the copying of the transmission for further use.

Mr. Fortier: Well, you have defined it in a way which is quite clear so the transmission in itself—you are not suggesting that it should be protected?

Mr. Gray: No, we are not suggesting it here but there may be people that feel that way.

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Knight: Like the Canadian Football League for instance.

Mr. Gray: Yes, but that comes under cable.

Mr. Fortier: Yes.

Mr. Gray: It is when you take it and then retransmit it or carry it, but that is an area that I am not an expert on.

The Chairman: Senator Bourque?

Senator Bourque: I would like to speak on Quebec.

The Chairman: Would you like to speak before Mr. Fortier?

Senator Bourque: No, I will yield.

Mr. Fortier: I wonder if you would care please to refer to Paragraph 4.6 of your brief wherein you make a tax proposal and expand a little on what is meant by the last two lines.

"The private sector (should) be required to carry a substantial portion of Canadian programming and that its commercial revenues be taxed appropriately, the taxes to be a percentage of its gross revenue."

Would you care to explain that a little further?

Mr. Knight: Well, what we are concerned about there, without getting into the specific and details of the proposal, what we are concerned about really is the ability of the CBC to program in a free fashion. That would allow the introduction of more Canadian materials than it now has and would allow a greater balance of programming than it now has and also would provide revenue for the private sector so that they too can match the CBC performance in the promotion of Canadian material. We feel the way to do that would be to free the CBC of the obligation—perhaps I better not use that word but—the necessity of seeking commercial revenue and leave the commercial field entirely open to the private broadcasters, so that they can get the full benefit of what money is available for commercial field and therefore add to their resources so that they can begin programming. There is a possible source—and it is on that type of suggestion now that we are talking—there is a possible source of one area for further revenue for the CBC if that becomes necessary and that is perhaps a special imposed tax upon the private broadcaster based upon their gross revenues.

Mr. Fortier: On another subject, Mr. Knight, you discussed very briefly a short while ago your concern for encouraging actors' talents and you say that after four presentations a man becomes eligible for membership in the association.

Mr. Knight: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: How many of ACTRA members are fully professionals? The view has been expressed, for example, by television stations and radio stations before this committee that they were required to pay a minimum wage to actors some of which were fully professional and others, in their opinion, who did not deserve even the minimum wage that was written into your contract.

Mr. Knight: I would suggest that it is very bad management practice that can't recognize good talent from bad talent in advance of putting on a show. If he doesn't have a discrimination in judgment to recognize good talent from bad then he shouldn't be in the business.

Mr. Fortier: Is there bad talent in ACTRA?

Mr. Knight: Yes, there is bad talent everywhere. You see we don't control who is hired and we don't control, therefore, those people who become eligible for membership. The broadcasters do that and it is only the broadcasters who can hire a person as a performer and it is only by being hired as a performer that you become eligible as a member of ACTRA. If the person is a bad performer—and there are not that many of them but there are some—you know, it is a fairly large membership—and if a person is a bad performer it is a result of four bad judgments by broadcasters.

Mr. Fortier: So there is no self-discipline or internal discipline?

Mr. Knight: Oh, by all means.

Mr. Fortier: There is?

Mr. Knight: Yes, there is. We have a Code of Discipline which we impose on our members by a system of fines and suspensions etc. for un-professional behaviour but we cannot be the judge of their talent. We are not equipped to judge anybody else's talent. The only person that can make that judgement is the person who is willing to pay for it.

Mr. Fortier: And the only sanction, of course, would be that a qualified broadcaster does not hire a bad actor?

Mr. Knight: Well certainly not a second time I shouldn't think.

Mr. Fortier: Another criticism which we have heard expressed justifies queries that the minimum salaries, negotiated by ACTRA on behalf of its members, are much too high and that they inhibit some broadcasters from going into areas of original programming as much as they would like to because they can't afford the going prices?

Mr. Knight: I don't believe so. This is a question that depends on a number of relationships with ACTRA. We base our negotiations with the broadcasters and negotiate with them. We don't impose prices or conditions. We negotiate with the broadcaster in order to achieve this and the resulting public agreement is signed by both parties. It is something that they both agree to and they agree to this as a result of very brief negotiations.

Now, our rates are set up on the basis of a minimum rate for a network performance and there are a series of discounts by which they can reduce that rate by the fact that they have reduced the size of the audience that the broadcast is being sent to; or by the frequency of use; or for the number of times a performer is being engaged. That is presuming that we are dealing with the CBC and the CTV.

With local stations we negotiate local rates, specifically designed for their needs and local conditions. Now very frequently, of course, some of the local broadcasters have refused to have anything to do with us; they won't negotiate rates and then they come and want to hire an individual performer. The rate that is available to him is the public rates but I think the problem lies in the fact that sometimes we haven't been able to negotiate the local rate for them.

Mr. Paul Siren: Mr. Chairman, may I extend on Mr. Knight's remark?

The Chairman: By all means.

Mr. Siren: I think that we really should be aware that, as far as the CBC and CTV are concerned, we have not had an increase of any kind in our minimum rate since 1966 so that the industry should not be complaining that the professional performing community demand increases very often or very frequently. We are probably one of the few communities that has not demanded increases in this period of four years, and just as an example, in the case of CTV network, for a half-hour show the rate for a performer is $66.00. Surely this is not something that could not be handled by the network. In the case of the CBC, with a much larger market, it is $70.00. As Mr. Knight indicated, this is discounted on the basis of frequency of use and if the performer is required to work more often, he is guaranteed a certain continuing contract for 13 weeks or 26 weeks and so on, then these rates are discounted.

I merely wish to place on the record, sir, that our opinion is that our rates are not only fair, but they are below standard in many ways.

Mr. Fortier: Have you any evidence, given these answers, which appear to be very clear, have you any evidence that Canadian broadcasters could afford to do more original programming?

Mr. Knight: Well, I think it is probably a question of the whole organization of the private broadcasters. Most of the arguments that they have been presenting to the CRTC, are based on the propositions that each broadcaster has to fend for himself; each broadcaster has to supply all of his own programming which of course, is probably not the truth. A program which can demand a reasonable audience in Winnipeg, so long as it is not an entirely parochial program, can certainly get an audience in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal, and in Halifax. What has not been looked at is any means of introducing the independent producer into the situation; the producers who will produce independently as an individual and then distribute his program around the broadcast community. This has been done quite frequently which is a perfectly good example, and there are others in the field. Broadcasters themselves have frequently created a program for their own station then distributed them amongst other broadcasters. Most of the arguments that the private broadcasters have been presenting, both to the CRTC and—I don't know what they have been saying here but they probably have been saying something of the same kind of idea—are based on the proposition that each station has to program for itself which is clearly not true. They have never done it with the importation of American programs—you know, they are independent and they pay only their share of the cost of that program; not for the whole part of the program, I think that is something that needs to be looked at very carefully.

The CTV is a perfectly good example. The CTV as we understand it—now, perhaps we are wrong since we haven't really been able to look at the public structure of the CTV—but the way we understand CTV is that it is, in fact, a co-operative of a number of stations whose function is to provide those stations with programming. There is nothing on that basis that would require CTV to do any better than break even. Since it is a co-operative of the stations, the stations themselves are paying for the cost of CTV. This is a perfectly good example of the type of institution that has to be considered and perhaps looked at and not necessarily through a network, but through some means of strengthening the resources of the broadcasters together in order to provide for their collective program needs. I don't think this aspect of it has been closely looked at at all.

The Chairman: Senator Bourque?

Senator Bourque: I should have spoken before because I would have had more to say but you have just answered one of the questions about the fact that a French artist can go into Vancouver or anywhere. Do you have control over the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Knight: Not it all. No. We have an office, as a matter of fact I live in Montreal myself and we have an office in Montreal, but we are only concerned with English broadcast in Montreal, not the French.

Senator Bourque: Not the French?

Mr. Knight: No. The Union des Artistes is responsible for the French network, both private and public.

Senator Bourque: Well, as you know we have many French weeklies and there are two or three that are devoted to the stage and music. I have been reading these for a long time and I was going to ask a lot of questions along this but there is no use if you don't have any control over the French artists.

Mr. Knight: I am afraid not.

Senator Bourque: Thank you.

The Chairman: May I ask you one question about a piece of rhetoric that is in your brief. At the end of Paragraph 2.3 you are talking about the differences between the United States and Canada and you say:

"There are many differences. There are differences of origin, of language, of culture, of government, of law, of economic organization, of aspiration, differences that have become painfully obvious to many (particularly younger) Canadians in the last ten years."

Do you think it is true that the younger Canadians are inclined to see these differences more clearly?

Mr. Gray: Well, I have a large reason for supporting a statement of that kind and because of the last moments of that CRTC hearing yesterday, I am able to give you some specific examples.

The Chairman: Please.

Mr. Gray: Through this year I have had some association with the University of Waterloo, with students there in an experimental program, and I don't think it is unfair to say that the young people that I have met there have a view of United States, in particular, which was much different than when I was in university. They are much more skeptical. Some of them are very aware of the problems and in a sense they are kind of on the verge of being Canadians, in other words, they are becoming aware and they are more interested directly in Canada than, it seems to me, we were when I was in university. I suspect that among the youngsters in Canada, there is no doubt that there is nationalism—there is no other word for it other than "nationalism" so I'll use that word, but I want it understood in a positive sense. There is a feeling about Canada which is very real, very deep and they are looking for some expression of that, looking for some way as to be that or to say that.

Now, last night there were three youngsters at the CRTC hearings—there were two unscheduled appearances—three people altogether, two and then another young lad. They were all young people and the first two of them were from Ottawa. I don't know their names but they came forward and they had all kinds of suggestions as to how they wanted to make the CBC work and to make it Canadian. The suggestion that struck me most was, that they thought it would be a very good idea to program all of the commercials in the American programs and no commercials in the Canadian programs and then we would have no problem in deciding which was which. Following that, there came another young lad and he was a much more serious than the previous boys. He came up and Mr. Juneau asked him, "how did you get here?" and this boy said, "Well, I heard about this, I was watching "W-5" and "Week End" and I heard you talking about these things and I realized that it was a very important discussion that was going on up here. I wanted to be part of it and so I have taken two days off work and I have come up here." He then told the commission what he thought of them, which included the fact that he didn't think they were getting through to the young people; but he did express a very clear concern, which I myself have, being among young people and being among my own children. The young people in Canada today are very concerned about their own country and I think it behoves some of us in middle-age to get off our back-sides and recognize that.

The Chairman: The reason I put the question—I don't, even for a second, question the concern but I think the skepticism is not with the United States—it is with the Establishment and I think the life style, the protests and the music are all American imported.

Mr. Gray: Well, there is no question about the life style, but that's what these boys were saying yesterday. They were in fact—if I understand this country and they want to be words into their mouths—but if I understand them properly, they really want—it is a terrible phrase, but I have to say it—they want to do their own thing and I think that is what they want to do. In one sense they want to understand this country and they want to be part of it. If I understand some of the things that are going on in French Canada at all, that is one of the things that the French Canadians have said to us. I came back to Canada after some years away. We were in England for 8 or 9 years and that is a very good place for a writer. You know, you can make a good living and people pay attention and treat you with respect. But one of the reasons I came home is that my older children—they insisted we come. That is one of the reasons—that is not the only reason but they wanted to come back because they said that is a very exciting country and it was 1967 and they made up their minds.

The Chairman: Is there a happier climate here for writers now than when you went to Britain?

Mr. Gray: Not really.

The Chairman: It hasn't changed?

Mr. Gray: Not nearly enough.

The Chairman: People still look at you strangely!

Mr. Gray: They don't vocalize it.

The Chairman: Senator Quart?

Senator Quart: May I just add a few words to what Mr. Gray has said.

The Chairman: By all means.

Senator Quart: You may talk about your children; in my position, I talk about grandchildren. Maybe they are too young yet to express opinions but I have heard one of my grandsons—and they are all of a certain age—one is a lawyer and I haven't heard one of them express a wish to go to the States. When I was young, I studied dramatic arts, but I never really got into acting. In my day, it was a great idea for everyone to go into the States but I haven't heard one of these young people, either my grandchildren or my sons express a wish to go to the United States. I quite agree with you that they are probably much more Canadian than I was—than I am now.

The Chairman: I must confess that I am thinking of the day that the underground press were here and those people were certainly not nationalistic in their approach, but however thank you and Senator Quart.

Senator Bourque: May I just ask one further question.

The Chairman: Yes.

Senator Bourque: In view of the fact that you have told me that you have nothing to do with the French artists, supposing for instance we have a good play in Montreal and they would like to go to Vancouver and they can get an engagement; have you a reciprocal arrangement with the people so that they can go to Vancouver and another troop from Vancouver can come to Montreal?

Mr. Knight: Yes, we do. Unfortunately however, our jurisdiction is limited. We are a purely Canadian Association but our jurisdiction is limited to television and radio so far as actors are concerned. There is another association that manages the stage known as Actors' Equity Association which is an American-based union. There was an agreement between the two associations the Union des Artistes and Actors' Equity. As far as we are concerned, within television, as far as an individual is concerned—he may work in either jurisdiction, French or English, three occasions per year without any cost or anything to him; beyond the three occasions he must comply with the constitutional arrangements of the association which he is joining. In my case, if I play in French, and I have on a number of occasions, I would then, after the third occasion in any one year, have to buy a working permit from the Union des Artistes; and as far as we are concerned then a French actor would have to become a member of ACTRA. That is dealing with the individual. When you are dealing with a production that is transferred from the French to the English network, there is no inhibition whatsoever. But a strange thing however, Senator Bourque, and a thing that disturbs us a great deal, is that it so rarely happens. It disturbs us a great deal that the CBC, which is operating two networks, French and English, is not doing a great deal more transferring from one network to the other. It disturbs us very much indeed, that this is not happening and there is really no inhibition in any of the agreements which would prevent it.

Senator Bourque: What I was particularly interested in—was not the dancing, because dancing can go anywhere; if you dance in English or you dance in Russian it is all the same. I was speaking of drama; do you know what there is? I don't think there is any possibility of a French-speaking group going to Vancouver because if they spoke in French there wouldn't be enough people there to pay their fare.

Mr. Knight: La Comédie Française does it.

Senator Bourque: It does?

Mr. Knight: Oh, indeed it does.

Senator Bourque: In French?

Mr. Knight: Oh, yes. It plays in New York, Chicago, and it played in Vancouver on its most recent tour I believe.

Mr. Gray: It even plays in Toronto.

Mr. Knight: Yes, even Toronto.

Mr. Fortier: Didn't Gascon do it in...

Mr. Knight: Stratford?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, Stratford.

Mr. Knight: Yes, it is quite possible and as far as television is concerned, the techniques are such now that even if the language is an inhibiting factor, you can dub these into the other language. There is no technical problem in translating it into another language.

The Chairman: Well, thank you very much, gentlemen. I think this has been a very appropriate hearing which is our next to the final hearing. I think you have brought views which have been of great value to the Committee. I think it was important. We were anxious to obtain the opinions of the working newspaper men and we still have steps to take to obtain more of those opinions. We wanted to have the opinions of working members of the broadcast industry and the people who are associated with ACTRA. We are particularly grateful that you have come. I realize that it was an imposition to ask you to come down here, particularly following your appearance before the CRTC and that makes it doubly grateful.

Thank you.

Mr. Knight: Thank you Senator Davey and Senators.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, Wednesday, October 29th, 1969.

With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator Davey moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Lang:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to consider and report upon the ownership and control of the major means of mass public communication in Canada, in particular, and without restricting the generality of the foregoing, to examine and report upon the extent and nature of their impact and influence on the Canadian public, to be known as the Special Committee of the Senate on Mass Media;

That the Committee have power to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate and that Rule 76(4) be suspended in relation to this Special Committee from 9th to 18th December, 1969, both inclusive, and the Committee have power to sit during sittings of the Senate for that period;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the preceding session be referred to the Committee; and

That the Committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Beau-bien, Davey, Everett, Giguère, Hays, Irvine, Langlois, Macdonald (Cape Breton), McElman, Petten, Prowse, Sparrow, Urquhart, White and Willis.

After debate, and—

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, Thursday, November 6th, 1969.

With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Giguère and Urquhart be removed from the list of Senators serving on the Special Committee of the Senate on Mass Media; and

That the names of the Honourable Senators Bourque, Smith and Welch be added to the list of Senators serving on the said Special Committee.

The question being put on the motion, it was—

Resolved in the affirmative.

Extract from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate, Thursday, December 18th, 1969.

With leave of the Senate,

The Honourable Senator McDonald moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith:

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ON MASS MEDIA EVIDENCE

Ottawa, Friday, April 24, 1970.

The Special Senate Committee on Mass Media met this day at 10 a.m.

Senator Keith Davey (Chairman) in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable Senators, if I may call the session to order.

Ladies and gentlemen and Mr. Minister, for all intents and purposes this is our final public hearing and certainly it is the last public hearing in the series which began on the 9th of December. For that reason, and particularly in view of the witness we have with the Committee this morning, I think it is perhaps useful for me to repeat something that I said many times and in many places and I stress it again this morning, that the initiative I took in proposing this Committee was entirely my own. It had nothing to do with Prime Minister Trudeau or the Government of Canada.

Now, notwithstanding that fact—indeed perhaps because of it—I think it is entirely appropriate that our final witness—our witness this morning—is the federal Minister responsible for the Broadcasting Act. I think that is even more so the case when the Minister in question, the Hon. Gerard Pelletier is also a former journalist quite literally of national reputation as you know. He was the editor of La Presse for example from 1961 through 1965, and so in welcoming you this morning, Mr. Pelletier I first of all would like to thank you for coming and to say that the Committee is anxious to question you and to have your views on a wide range of matters.

I should say, perhaps, to put you at ease, although I am sure it isn't necessary, that happily there is a ministerial precedent for your appearance before this Committee. When Mr. Kierans was before the Committee, in February, he said a great deal in his capacity as a Minister of the Crown, but he also offered many opinions to the Committee making clear that in these opinions, he was speaking less as a minister than as a concerned Canadian.

And so this morning we are anxious to have your views on a wide range of matters, we hope that you won't be too inhibited by the fact that you have ministerial responsibilities. I think, however, I should assure you that as chairman I understand, and members of the Committee certainly do understand your position. So by all means please do let us know when you are speaking in your official capacity and when, indeed, you are expressing views which are your own and not necessarily those of the Government.

We have a very relaxed and informal structure here. We often ask the witness if he would like to make any kind of an opening statement. We have, of course, received written briefs from most of the witnesses who appeared before us—obviously that hasn't been the case with you. So if you would like to say something informally now we would be delighted and if not we will proceed right to the questioning.

The Hon. Gerard Pelletier, Secretary of State: The only thing I wanted to say, you just said. I am ready to answer a certain number of questions in a strictly personal capacity on the basis of my experience as a professional journalist of 25 years. However, I would like to make it even clearer if this is possible, which I doubt, because you made it clear yourself. I would like to make a clear distinction every time that I am speaking out of an experience that has been terminated for me about four years ago and when I am answering as a Minister, if you have some questions about the institutions that report through me to the House of Commons. But besides that I think that the question and answer procedure would be the best.

The Chairman: Thank you. In a few minutes I am going to ask Mr. Fortier to ask you some questions about the Broadcasting Act. But I thought I might begin by asking you some general questions about print. When we asked witnesses to come before the Committee, we forwarded them a set of guidelines and asked them to answer some of these questions. It wouldn't be possible, I am afraid, to put all the questions to you because it would take too much time, but I thought I might just ask you to make comments on several of them. For example, just as a first question, I thought I would ask you what is your understanding of freedom of the press? Is it now threatened? Is it adequately protected and what responsibilities go with it? Just a general discussion on the freedom of the press as you understand it.

Mr. Pelletier: Well, freedom of the press I think is not freedom to publish anything. I do think that the freedom of the press is printing the facts about any situation, and it is at the same time a freedom and a duty. I think the information function of the press is based on honesty and a term that is not as popular in press circles as it used to be, objectivity, which is very hard to define. I concede that from the start.

Freedom of the press is, of course, limited by ethics in the information part of a newspaper or in the information services of a radio or TV station.

The freedom of the press is, of course, also the freedom of expressing opinions. I think not only has the press a right to do it, but also it has a duty to express opinions; but I have always been of the school that wanted to have as tight a compartmentalization between editorial and reporting as can be. I don't think that it can be absolute because more and more with the presence of television, the written press have to give background and in a certain way to indulge in commentary which blurs the line of division a little bit.

Basically I don't think that freedom of the press is under any serious threat in Canada. I have my qualms about the monopolies, or so-called monopolies of the press in a particular area. I find it very difficult to define what an information monopoly is, but I think that an effort should be made to come to some definition as precise as it can be made. The danger seems to come from these huge organizations. This is my personal view of it. There is also another one which is, in many newspapers, the difficulty of articulating the views of the board of administrators and the policies of the newspaper or the freedom of the newspaper to inform and express opinions.

I have lived through a very painful incident in my life on this very point, but this would lead me into the professional status of newspapermen and—

The Chairman: Well, why don't you talk about that, please?

Mr. Pelletier: Well, there is a tension which to a certain extent is inevitable for the board of administrators in a newspaper and the professional staff of newspapermen. For instance, in a certain paper that I was associated with, the administrators wanted to print an editorial on the front page signed by one of the board members, and I as the editor said no. And they said "Why not? If you are allowed to do so as our employee, why should not we as administrators of the newspaper, be in a position to do the same thing?" And the only answer I had was that as a professional journalist I had learned how to do that and they hadn't. They didn't like the answer of course, but I have always felt that—in a larger mood you know, but I think it is relevant—I don't know how many of you remember a very good piece by Robert Benchley who used to say the usual citizen doesn't pretend to have a cure for cancer but all citizens have a cure for hiccups. The normal citizen doesn't pretend that he can be an engineer or an atomic scientist, but I know very few citizens who don't have deep down in their conscience the conviction that they could be a fairly good journalist.

Senator Prowse: They all want to write a book.

Mr. Pelletier: This is not my way of looking at it. I think it is a profession—I think it entails very strict technical knowledge, even in the editorial section of a newspaper, and I think that the articulation of a board of administrators with the professional staff that runs the paper is one of the major problems.

I can't pretend that I have found the solution because while looking for it I was kicked out of the newspaper.

The Chairman: And you went into another profession which the public feels equally competent in!

Mr. Pelletier: That is right.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Minister, on this note, do you accept, professionally, that the owner of a newspaper defines what may be called the parameters of his thought, the parameters of his policy, and compels his editor, his editorial team, to limit itself to editorializing within the bounds of these parameters?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, I accept it, but I think that this definition must be made—we are in the editorial field?

Mr. Fortier: That is correct.

Mr. Pelletier: I think that this definition must be made if a newspaper is to function properly with the participation of the editor in editorial policy. There are two attitudes which a newspaper can take. It can say: "The thought I wish to express in an editorial, is A, B, C, D, E, F, G, and Mr. Editorial-writer, if you agree with this thought, you are our editorial writer; if not, go elsewhere." There is the second attitude which consists of discussion between the newspaper owners or the board of directors and the editorial writers to reach common ground.

To this I should like to add a simple statement. This is that it appears completely impossible to me to establish all shades because the board of directors can produce a document whose broad outline, the parameters as you call them, will be established. But, daily, editorial writers have to write, and although it is certainly not possible to see all details, one can keep within the boundaries of a certain concept. I shall give a current example. A Canadian newspaper, at the present time, can decide, for example, to be separatist or federalist, can decide to be nationalist, and can decide to be absolutely indifferent to certain national values, in every case; and this constitutes a general line of thought. It is perfectly legitimate, in my opinion, for the director of a newspaper to tell his editorial writers at any time: "Here is the newspaper's orientation, this is it." It is a matter of discussing it with them if it is to work out. It is necessary that they discuss it with them.

Mr. Fortier: The owner and the board of directors owe themselves the right to have the last word?

Mr. Pelletier: They owe themselves the last word, that is to say that they have the authority, and you cannot deny it to them. But, I think that for the smooth functioning of a newspaper, if professional newspapermen are not concerned with establishing a proposition such as this, you will have an extremely rigid position, on the one hand, or perhaps without significance because, once again, the newspaperman's trade, in my opinion, is a profession and you cannot, it seems to me, decide very fundamental things in a realistic fashion without involving people of the profession with people who are in management.

Mr. Fortier: Having said this, and to use your example, you accept that the owner in the name of the board of directors, after discussion with the editorial team, says: "Here is my political position." Let us say: "The political position of my newspaper is federalism. Editorialize, with as many shades of difference as you wish, but do not depart from this fundamental position."

Mr. Pelletier: In the present organization of the press, I think this is legitimate. And it is inevitable that it turns out like this because, obviously, even if I said that I am against this, I would not be very realistic; because it is the board of directors which pays. But, what I do object to, because it is impractical, is that the board of directors then claims the right to slip its opinions into each of the editorials and to publish or establish a meticulous and fastidious censorship. This is not a matter of ethics or of morality, it is strictly a practical matter of operation. It cannot work if power is not delegated to someone who supervises, if you will, the putting into practice of this editorial policy.

Mr. Fortier: It is not a matter of force?

Mr. Pelletier: What I find, however, and what I consider invalid, is that a board of directors would presume to tell an editorial room: "On this subject, you will publish no information." For example, very few people will recall, because it is too old, that a certain great newspaper had a senator as its chairman of the board of directors—the moment is right to speak of it here—and for 25 years there was never a mention of the Senate in this newspaper, neither good nor bad. I find this absolutely reprehensible. A newspaper is not a business like others; it has social obligations to the public, that is to keep it informed and to inform it completely and honestly.

Mr. Fortier: At the information level?

Mr. Pelletier: At the information level. I do not admit any kind of interference in this sense. You do not speak of this, you do not speak of that.

Mr. Fortier: What do you think of a President of a radio station—perhaps a hypothetical question—who would instruct his employees not to mention in news bulletins the name of a political party presently offering candidates in Quebec?

Mr. Pelletier: I find this unacceptable. But not more so than I would understand or admit that the board of directors of a newspaper should tell its newspapermen: "You will not speak of such an event."

[Text]

The Chairman: Well, to get back to these guidelines, I think the next two questions follow very naturally from this discussion. Number 10: Should the mass media lead public opinion or follow it?

Mr. Pelletier: First and foremost, I think that there are very popular misconceptions about how a newspaper makes its influence felt on the public. I myself am of the school that the information part of a newspaper is much more powerful in leading public opinion by the information it imparts. I would refer to Walter Lippmann who wrote in "Public Opinion" around 1921 or 1922—in fact I think it is the book that made him famous—that no people can govern itself except in the exact measure of the amount of information that it can absorb. So I think that a newspaper influences public opinion much more by the information it gets to the public than by the editorial it writes and publishes. So I think that in the information part of the newspaper, the question is to my mind irrelevant after what I just said. But the newspaper has the duty to inform on major questions. It must be a mirror to society and even if society isn't particularly pleased in seeing that it has warts on its face, it should remain a mirror.

Now, in the editorial part, I do think that it is presumptuous that newspapermen, editorial writers, should try at the same time to enlighten and lead public opinion. That is why I have always been in favour of signed editorials—which is not in the British tradition, I understand, but very much in the French tradition of newspapers—because then you have the exact proportion of the importance of what you are reading. It is Mr. So-and-So's views and not the views of a newspaper that has a circulation of 40,000 or 400,000. It is one individual's, but a professional person's, opinion on a certain matter and there I think it is presumptuous. But I think it is part of the trade that the editorial writer should say, "Well, this is my job—I am supposed to look ahead and I have more time to think about these things and I am supposed to take the risk of expressing my own opinion and pretending it is the right one." I don't think this can be avoided.

The Chairman: I think perhaps you might be able to answer this question quite briefly. In your opinion, is there an "establishment" which controls the mass media in Canada, or any one of the media?

Mr. Pelletier: I read this question when you sent me this document and I am very embarrassed to answer a question like that because I never could really define to my own satisfaction what an "establishment" is.

The Chairman: You will be delighted to know that many of the publishers gave us that same answer.

Mr. Pelletier: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: It is when you become part of that establishment that it is difficult!

Mr. Pelletier: I certainly wouldn't go along with the opinion that there is a mafia of opinion manipulators in Canada who meet secretly in the dark in the Rideau Club every week and say "What is it that we can put on to the Canadian public?" On the other hand, it is fairly obvious that, with the concentration of the printed press particularly, there is a small number of people who control a vast proportion of the information and editorial writing in this country. So I suppose you may say that never have so few had so great an influence on so many. In this sense there is certainly an "establishment". But I put it in quotation marks because the exact meaning of this question I couldn't define to my own satisfaction.

The Chairman: Marshall McLuhan says that television sounds the death knell of print. And there is also a quotation here by Mr. Walter Lippmann—I am sure you saw this quotation—where he says. "Television is adding to the irrationality of the world. It makes everything simpler or more dramatic or more immediate than it is. If you listen to television you cannot find out what is going on in the world. News on television is very good; but you can't live on what they give you. So newspapers are here to stay."—In asking you to comment on this and on Marshall McLuhan's statement I am reminded of a speech you made, and please correct me if I am wrong. I think you made a speech in London, Ontario, in the past year in which you tended to agree with McLuhan, didn't you?

Mr. Pelletier: I did but I would make some distinctions. I agree with this opinion of Mr. McLuhan to the extent, and this is the opinion that I was expressing—I was saying that from now on, a dictator in a country who would want to manipulate public opinion efficiently without becoming too odious, could very well let the free press, the printed press, operate and television would be enough to manipulate public opinion. And I was projecting into the future that I think this will become more and more true if the present trend in development goes on.

I was very much impressed personally by the fact that every time there was a major strike in major newspapers either in New York or in Canada the papers that were struck lost some circulation. Part of it was picked up by other newspapers; part of it was gained back after the newspaper went into operation again; but part of it never was picked up by anyone. This means that on every one of these occasions—and God knows over the last ten years how many strikes there have been in New York and Montreal and Toronto and Windsor, and all these places—it means that over the decade—I can't give you any statistics because it is certainly an estimate, but there certainly are, in my opinion, hundreds of thousands of people who just gave away the habit of reading a newspaper. They might read a news magazine, they might pick up a paper sometime on occasion. You see the circulation going up very sharply, for instance, when there is a moon shot or a general election, or something like that. I don't think we can avoid the fact that newspaper readers are diminishing in proportion, though not in absolute terms. With the increase of population they might be increasing, but I am not familiar with recent statistics on this. But this means that people rely on television.—Some surveys, which I had the advantage of seeing recently, showed that to more and more people—the proportion of people to whom the question was put, “Where do you get the best information and who do you trust?”—TV comes first and the written press comes second.

The Chairman: Does that worry you?

Mr. Pelletier: As a man who has spent 25 years in the written press, of course it does. I don't think we can do anything about it right now unless the newspapers find the same way as the cinema has found to counteract this trend—the equivalent in the written press of the stereo or the giant screen, or these things—I don't know what it would be.

The Chairman: I was going to ask you if you have any idea what that might be?

Mr. Pelletier: No. I think the moment I came to this conclusion I left the trade and I have more worries now—I have more things to think about.

But on the other hand, it is fairly obvious that you have, as a result of the increasing importance of television, (and that is where Mr. Lippmann is right, so I am sitting between these two very remarkable gentlemen) I think in every country in the western world, one or two newspapers have developed higher quality than they ever have before because there is a minority—and I am not talking about the elite in the traditional sense—but there is a minority I would say that wants to know more and wants to know more through a better analysis than TV wants to make.

You can always stop reading a newspaper piece and read it again if you want to see exactly what happened. The trouble with television and radio is that once it's gone by, it has gone by, and you can't phone and say “Would you read this part of your news bulletin to me again.” So I am concerned in this way.

But I do think also that newspapers will have to concentrate on what television can't do, and this is particularly the role of the newspaper, a better analysis, going further, checking better before it puts it on the newsstands. I was in the electronic press for some time also and I know that you have very little time to check your information because you have to go on the air very quickly.

The Chairman: Mr. Lippmann also says that news in television is very good but you can't live on what it gives you. Would you be inclined to agree with that statement?

Mr. Pelletier: I think so and I am disturbed by the fact that so many people think they can.

The Chairman: Yes. That was really what I was after when I asked if it concerned you.

Mr. Pelletier: To illustrate this fact as an example, from another country, France take Le Monde, which is the most austere paper that you could think of, much more so than the New York Times which is not particularly a frivolous paper by any measuring. Le Monde is even more austere and it has been going up like this. They are now close to half a million circulation in France, and they are going up now, but what they are doing is exactly what Mr. Lippmann is talking about, and that is, giving what the audio-visual media cannot possibly give.

The Chairman: I am going to ask you a question which is not from our guidelines and which is a pretty tough question, and probably an unfair question, so you can choose how you wish to skate away from it. Would you comment on the overall calibre of newspapers in Canada?

Mr. Pelletier: It is very difficult for anyone in politics to do but without making any specific reference to any particular newspaper, I think that we have some of the best and we have some of the worst, and the space in between is occupied by mediocrity. I don't have a feeling now, that the quality of our written press is going up; but this is only a personal opinion.

I think the main difficulty was that many newspapers in Canada decided to compete with the television or radio in the wrong way, by being more brassy, louder, leaning more on the side of entertainment and sensationalism. There are more newspapers that have taken this way of trying to maintain their circulation than quality, and I think it was a wrong calculation because I see the newspaper of the future as a newspaper of better quality.

The Chairman: Do you think that the newspapers in Canada are changing their strategy, or do you see them adhering to the strategy you describe of the entertainment, et cetera?

Mr. Pelletier: Well, I haven't seen—as I tell you, it is only an impression, but my impression is that we are not evolving in the right direction generally. I am not speaking of any specific newspaper. I can quote you newspapers that I believe have been improving over the last five or six years, but generally speaking I think they are not.

I think it is a mistake because only the very bad—you know, there will always be a public who will want to know what calibre shotgun Mr. so-and-so used to kill his mistress, or his wife, or his mother-in-law, but I don't think this is the future of the written press in this country. I think that the future is in giving better information, more serious and better checking and verification of all kinds, than television or radio can make. I don't see any indication that, generally speaking, newspapers have taken this orientation. I might be wrong on this but it is my personal opinion.

The Chairman: Well, I think it would be unfair to ask you to become more specific on that question, but I do have to ask you about one specific organization and I am sure that it is a question that you would expect this morning.

I am sure the committee would be most interested in your comment on the Canadian Press news service.

Mr. Pelletier: Yes. I hesitate to give you an opinion on this because to assess a press agency, you really have to be working in a newspaper and seeing the output on the wire every day.

I would say that while I was in the trade I saw Canadian Press making tremendous progress in many directions. First of all, when I entered journalism it hadn't come to the minds of those in charge of Canadian Press that there were French language newspapers in Canada, for instance. The only thing they were ready to do was to reduce the price you paid for the wire and let you make your translation yourself.

Just on this realm of activity, we came to the absurd situation where you had an English-speaking reporter, for instance—I have a particular case in mind—covering a French-spoken address by the Premier of Quebec. This report of a French speech was sent in English to Canadian Press which had a translator to translate it back into French, and this is exactly how it operated. We eventually got rid of this nonsense to a large extent.

The only thing I could say now about Canadian Press is that for world coverage, CP, to the best of my knowledge, has to rely on foreign agencies much more than they should. This might be a question. You know, they might have very good reasons to do that—maybe it is because the dailies don't want to pay more, or maybe they can't pay more, I don't know. But we have to rely on American agencies, for instance, far too much.

The Chairman: Well, you have anticipated my next question. I was going to ask you about the proportion of news originating from non-Canadian sources, so why don't you just proceed?

Mr. Pelletier: I would like to give you two examples of that. For instance, in the paper I used to work with we had all the wires, including Agence France-Presse and Reuters and everything we could buy. We would come with all the copy and give it to one man on a particular event and said "Try to make a balanced view of all these conflicting views". This is a way of doing it, but we could find a better one, I am sure.

The example I would like to give you is, for instance, the very poor information you get on the whole area of Latin America. When I was an editor I made it a point of having everything that came from the whole of Latin America on my desk every morning for two months, because I was personally interested in Latin America and I had a hypothesis that the U.S. acted as a screen between Latin America and Canada. I could see that such was the case. Since I am still interested in Latin America very much, I look at the newspapers and I find very little in it, although it is in our hemisphere and although everybody knows there will be about 600 million people there by the 21st century. You know, it is a vital area of the world and communications are difficult there. I can see some of the reasons, but I think that it is really one area of the world where we have no direct feedback on what is happening or what Canada is trying to do there, and I think this is part of the weakness of the Canadian press.

Now, I am not blaming anyone because I am too removed from the field now to know whether it could be better; but I know that when I was an editor, I had to rely on Agence France-Presse on the one side and the Americans on the other which gave very little. Major newspapers like the New York Times used to run pretty adequate coverage of Latin America. I found out over the last five or six years they are slipping; they are not as good as they used to be.

A few years ago, if you wanted balanced information on Latin America, you had to rely on the Spanish edition of The Economist. I don't know if it is still being published or not, or whether it was a going concern—I never could know because I had no contacts with the people. This is a major weakness, I think, in our system and I don't know, frankly, how it could be corrected, but I think it is a situation which should be corrected.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, I have only three other questions and then perhaps the senators may want to ask some questions on the newspapers and then we will turn to Mr. Fortier who would like to talk to you about broadcasting.

This is a question we put to many publishers. We have asked publishers in French Canada and in Quebec to comment on the way in which events in Quebec and French Canada are covered in the balance of the country, and we have put the reverse question to many people as well—how is English Canada covered in Quebec and French Canada generally? Could you comment on this?

Mr. Pelletier: Well, I think it is inadequate but it has been getting better over the last ten years or so. There used to be almost an airtight frontier along the Ottawa River and it no longer exists. You have, for instance, many correspondents from English-speaking Canada in Quebec; and the Quebec newspapers and radio and television, and the CBC, are maintaining correspondents in other parts of Canada. I think there has been progress.

The Chairman: I believe about a year ago now you spoke at either the CP dinner or the National Newspaper Awards dinner in Toronto, and I think you complained about the inadequacies both ways. Was this a year ago or two years ago?

Mr. Pelletier: I don't think so. I don't think I ever addressed the groups that you mentioned.

The Chairman: The reason I think you did was because I think I have quoted from your speech. However, so be it.

Senator Prowse: The reason you hope he did.

Mr. Pelletier: I didn't really understand what group you mentioned. But yes, I was talking about the amount of information that was being exchanged now and I think there is a tremendous improvement over the last ten years. The quality is not always there. I remember one speech that I made in the west before going into politics, and the comment I made—back at my office when I saw the press coverage—was that the reporter must have entered through the wrong door into a different hall and listened to someone else because he quoted me as having said what someone else actually had been saying.

I think we have much progress to make in this area, particularly. I believe, that you can't have Canadian unity without Canadian solidarity. This is one of my deepest convictions. And you can't feel solidarity or interdependence with people that you don't know, whose problems you don't grasp, and for whom you can't feel any sympathy because you don't know them. It is also one of my favourite remarks that everybody in Canada is talking about understanding, when we should start with knowledge because understanding can only come afterwards.

The reporting which is being made is not always—and this is an understatement—of the nature to breed understanding; but very often is quite the reverse. I am not advocating that the press, or radio, or television, or the CBC should indulge in propaganda today. But straight information, well presented, I think is the key to a feeling of solidarity between Canadians.

I always like to quote a press conference that I had in the west which illustrates the point. One of the reporters there said "Why the heck should I worry about French in this country? I hardly meet a French-speaking person every month and yet you would like me to concern myself with this problem." And I said "Why the heck should I be concerned about wheat—I don't know how the stuff looks because we don't grow it in the east." There was a little silence and we all agreed that this was what Canada was all about. If they are not to concern themselves with French and we are not to concern ourselves with wheat, there is no Canada.

The Chairman: The last question we put to the publishers was this one. "Do you observe an increase or decrease in the degree of credibility accorded by the public to the news and opinion disseminated by the media? Does the degree of credibility vary between media?"

Mr. Pelletier: It does and I have seen the results.

The Chairman: May I interrupt you long enough—Mr. Fortier has reminded me, and he is perfectly right, that the speech I was referring to in Toronto was by Mr. Claude Ryan. I apologize for that.

Mr. Pelletier: I am reminded that these things happen. This is part of the written press. I am always quoted as having said once that the Liberal party was a trashcan. I had no rights on this quotation, it is Ryan's. We both wrote for the same paper for quite some time, so that is where the confusion lies.

The Chairman: I am sorry I interrupted you.

Mr. Pelletier: Well, I just saw the results of a serious survey and to my surprise, the survey tends to demonstrate that the credibility of television news for most people is higher than the credibility of the newspapers. I was happy to see that the credibility according to this survey is not going down—it is quite adequate. For instance, the number of people who would say that “That is just a pack of lies and I don’t want to have anything to do with information—it is all manipulated in advance.” Is very, very low, in this survey at least. It is quite an extensive study. It is still not published and that is why I am not referring to it more precisely.

The Chairman: Well, perhaps I should say that this Committee has done a study which shows the exact same thing.

Mr. Pelletier: I was surprised but then I wondered, looking at the results, whether this was not only an indication that more people get their information from television and radio than through the written press. So it might be the fact that they don’t read the newspapers as much as they used to do, that leads them to believe that the credibility of television is better. I am not sure how this comes about.

The Chairman: The other question that I wanted to put to you—and I may return later with some other questions, but for the time being the last question—I think the Committee would welcome any general comments you care to make about the magazine industry in Canada. Perhaps it is not something which has concerned you, but you may have views.

Mr. Pelletier: No I don’t think I would like to comment on this. I have never worked on a magazine and I am not particularly a magazine reader and I don’t think I could contribute anything to it.

The Chairman: I am going to turn to Mr. Fortier who has questions on the Broadcasting Act. Do any of the Senators have questions on things that we have said so far?

Senator Smith: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question.

The Chairman: Senator Smith?

Senator Smith: I would like to ask the Minister, or first perhaps point out to him, that we have had some evidence, or quite strong suggestions, that a great deal of the power in the electronic media relates to the camera itself; it rests with the fellow that pulls the handle on the camera and can destroy an image, with particular reference to politicians. There was one definite complaint made to the CBC about the camera angles used on a certain public figure at one time which was, in their opinion, very damaging to him, and therefore was unfair and bad reporting. We have had pretty strong suggestions that there is also a lot of power with the fellow back at the radio news department who cuts the tape—cuts out what comes before and cuts out what comes after, leaving a bald statement which doesn’t tell the whole story. Therefore that is power used in the wrong way. As a very distinguished newspaperman, what kind of power is held in the hands of a night editor, for example, who will, because of his bias, whether it originates with him or whether it comes from what he knows are the publisher’s views on the subject, use his power to position a certain news item, or to make sure that a certain kind of headline is put to that story. Is that power an important power for consideration?

Mr. Pelletier: I think it is a tremendously important power, but there you wake up my instincts as a journalist. I think that generally speaking—let me make a statement which may not be very useful in terms of changes that we can bring about, but that has to be made—I think that the reading public and the listening public have put such demands on the news media that it forces the written press, as well as radio or television, to work at such a pace with so many decisions to make. For instance, in any daily edition of a major newspaper—we once, just for fun, figured out how many decisions were to be taken of the kind that you just referred to. I kept telling people you can’t put everything on the front page; the kind of type you use; and the relative importance of stories. Well, it ran up into the vicinity of 2,000 decisions of that kind that have to be made for just an ordinary edition of a newspaper.

The radio has also a similar problem because in radio all through the day you get news reports and your public wants you to get them on the air before the other station. So you don’t check them and this is another very serious problem. Radio corrects its mistakes, but not to the same audience to whom they send the wrong information first. I think it is tremendous power for this reason.

Because of the demands of the public on the news media, and many times—I disagree with my political colleagues on this because I have lived through it—many faults or biases, that are attributed or traced back by the ordinary reader to some intention or some bias on the part of the journalist, are just due to the fact that he has to work at such a pace that the mistake is almost inevitable. I don’t know if I am making myself clear.

Senator Prowse: You are doing very well.

The Chairman: You are indeed.

Mr. Pelletier: It is very difficult but just let me use one example a classic example or classic case, I think. When I was the editor of La Presse in Montreal, my good friend Maurice Sauvé who was a Minister here gave a speech to a service club in Montreal. He said: "If you want to get on the front page of any of our newspapers, just say something extreme, irresponsible but sensational; but if you make a moderate, well-balanced speech on an issue the way I am doing, you will end up with the obituaries." I was reading that in my home at night and I looked and he was on the obituary page! He phoned me and said: "That is a very good joke." And I said: "It is no joke".

We had a final edition and if we didn't move it out of the building by twenty minutes to three, it just didn't sell, because the circulation was such in Montreal that you just couldn't sell it. And the only page, for technical reasons, that you could hold open was the page with the obituaries on it. He spoke to a service club that finished at two o'clock. The newspaperman could not possibly write his article before twenty minutes to three, so it went into that page. Thus many of the things that people think are inspired by lies are not. I am not saying we never indulged in sensationalism in the paper when I was there; we tried not to but sometimes we were forced to push these things. It is a tremendous power.

In television it is very bad also. I have been advocating for a long time with my friends in television that they try to demystify or to "educate" the public—I put quotation marks around "educate". We tried it once—I did a one hour show with a CBC correspondent who is now in Washington—Madam Judith Jasmin—just to make the TV audience conscious of what you could do by cutting. We took a bit of tape and we chose Franco's Spain and we agreed against it. In the first half we had the interview where I was interviewing Madam Jasmin and what she thought about Franco's Spain and she was against it of course. I went into the details as the interviewer. Then we cut it and ran it as cut—and she was favourable to everything that was done in Spain without adding anything; just by editing.

I think it is not much worse than the newspaper, in the sense that the newsmen are sitting in the gallery listening to an hour's speech by the Leader of the Opposition. He has to boil that down to 16 paragraphs, has to do a heck of an amount of cutting as well. But when you read a newspaper report you say "Well, you know, the speech lasted for an hour—it says so, and here are only 16 paragraphs so there must be something missing and maybe something important is missing."

The trouble with TV is what you see you don't doubt. And I think that broadcasters should make a point of educating audiences to realize that what they see is not necessarily true because of some of the necessities of cutting it. I don't want to be too long on this, Mr. Chairman, so you interrupt me when you think I am becoming. . .

The Chairman: Your answers are most interesting to the committee, Mr. Minister.

Senator Smith: I was very interested in your reference to Maurice Sauvé. Just a few days ago I read a reprint of an article in the London Times and it was making generally the same point, that a good logical speech by someone who has a new idea, which he wants to get to the public's attention, is a most difficult thing to put over so the public can get hold of it. On the other hand, somebody who has a cause can padlock himself to the iron fence in front of 10 Downing Street and his cause is right there on the front page perhaps. It is a dangerous kind of thing, but you can't blame that on the newspaper or the television. I don't know how anybody can blame anybody for that.

I think you would agree that a lot of the reporting of extremist activities all over the world is due to the fact that it is the kind of thing that perhaps must get the front page. How would you, when you were a professional journalist, feel with that general subject that I am talking about?

If I padlocked myself to the steps of the Mayor of Montreal's office and had to be forcefully removed with all the drama that is attached to a hot flame, and so on, would your paper give that a pretty good run as a story and carry with it the point I was trying to make?

Mr. Pelletier: It is a very difficult problem. On the one hand my general comment would be that it is the "man bites dog" kind of angle, which would always get ahead of the "dog bites man." However, there is also another angle. I don't like and I have never liked the people who were in the newspaper business primarily to sell copies of newspapers by any means. That I think is the lowest degree of professionalism you can find in the press. On the other hand, I think that we must realize that without having a mafia or an establishment, whatever that means, the number of people who really have the means of expressing themselves is rather small.

I think it is Mr.—what is the name of the British minister who made a brilliant speech on this about a year and a half ago. . .

Mr. Fortier: Wedgwood Benn?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes. He was making the point that the poor man in the street or the striker—they don't have the electronic media, they don't have newspapers and they are left with placards walking in front of a building.

In this sense I think that the newspaper plays them up in a certain way and corrects this imbalance of a small number of people also controlling the information media. I think that balanced news will be a struggle to the end of the world, and that there is certainly a better way of balancing things than we are doing now.

I think it is difficult and I think it is a problem, but I strongly believe that most broadcasters and TV people and press people are doing their best to find the balance. But having lived through the problems and having been accused very often of playing up things that were not that important, I can have sympathy for it.

Senator Smith: How would you describe the kind of journalism which would permit a night editor to remove the lead paragraph of one of your by-line writers, who has a by-line and who doesn't know that it is taken out until he sees it when he gets his paper delivered first thing in the morning? This is a particular instance I am referring to which has been brought to our attention; it had the effect of recolouring the story, and changing the impression that the average reader would have received from that story. What kind of journalism is that?

Mr. Pelletier: Well, it is very bad journalism and the way to correct it—in the two papers that I have worked with on a permanent basis in my life there was in the collective agreement with the newsmen that you had to have their permission to maintain their signature if you changed something. This caused the night desk man to wake him up at four in the morning sometimes, which they didn't particularly like. But otherwise, if any change in the copy was to be made, they had to take the by-line off. I think if you want to maintain any personal character and any sense of integrity in the newsman, such practices are very detrimental. But I think a very simple way of doing it is just that you have a clause in your collective agreement saying that you can't print the signature if you change the copy without the permission of the writer; and if, because of the necessities of coming out with a newspaper so quickly sometimes, you don't have time to consult the man, or if he is not at home, then you strike the by-line off.

Senator Smith: For this reason then, I presume, therefore you are a strong supporter of professional unionism wherever it is possible for them to get in. As you know, there are a great many daily newspapers that have no unions of any kind?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes.

Senator Smith: Would you describe that as a definite deficiency in this particular area that we were just talking about?

Mr. Pelletier: Oh yes, and in many other areas too. I would say that my experience as an editor, although I suffered a strike of seven months—I would say that I couldn't contemplate being the editor of a major newspaper without this.

Senator Smith: Thank you very much.

The Chairman: Senator Prowse?

Senator Prowse: I just have two questions in this area. They are addressed to you, sir, as a newspaperman and not in your position as a minister. The first one is this. We have had suggestions made to us by groups that have come before us that there should be legislation providing the same kind of protection for newspapermen to protect their sources that is presently provided in the law, as you know, between solicitor and client. In other words, a newspaperman should never be required under any circumstances to reveal the sources of his information. Now, on the basis of your experience I am sure you are aware of the new developments that are going on. Would you care to give us any observations you have concerning that particular question?

The hon. Mr. Pelletier: Well, I made my personal convictions public a few months ago about this. I can't answer in detail and it is a question that would have to be answered in detail. Let us say, that generally speaking, I am in favour under strict rules of the professional secrecy for journalists being protected. This would have to be under very strict and detailed rules. The possibility of doing just that I don't know because I have studied the subject in other countries, how they handle this, and I have found nothing that satisfied me. But in this discussion I am in the camp of those who think that if you want to have information that the public is entitled to, at a certain point you have to have professional secrets respected under strict rules.

There is another point which I would like to ask as a rider to this. In some Canadian provinces, the law doesn't give immunity to the newsmen who cover municipal governments which are growing in importance. I think this is very serious and will become more and more serious. Here, for instance, a man can report from the press gallery anything which is said in the house and he can't be sued. Now, if a member gets up and says that so-and-so in Toronto or Vancouver is a liar and a thief, and so on, the man in the press gallery can repeat it, can print it, and he is not liable to be sued.

In some provinces in Canada, municipal councils are not protected in the same way. So it creates a very serious problem for coverage by the newspaper of the municipal councils. I think that we are going towards megalopolistic type of life and I think this is something that eventually every province should be encouraged to correct because I think it is more and more important to cover municipal councils. Otherwise you are very badly stuck with some copy that you know is true and the man comes and says: "I have no protection." You take the risk—tradition is in your favour and I don't think you would be sued. The advice we did receive from lawyers was that we had no protection except precedents, but this is not very comfortable, neither for the reporters nor the editor.

Mr. Fortier: It is for the lawyer though!

Senator Prowse: The second question is this. You made mention of Le Monde and am I correct in recalling that Le Monde is the newspaper where the actual working journalists have complete control of it?

Mr. Pelletier: Not complete yet. However, they are coming very close to it. If I am not mistaken as the private shareholders die—Le Monde is the successor of Le Temps and the shareholders are pretty old—the shares are given to the body of newsmen and professional people who are working for Le Monde. I think they have effective control right now.

Senator Prowse: Right now?

Mr. Pelletier: Right now. But before they have the absolute majority of shares, they have a few months to go.

Senator Prowse: I have been very intrigued with the suggestion that the way to ensure professional independence of the professional press—I am thinking of the writers—is that kind of development. Have you seen enough of Le Monde to be able to give us a suggestion or give us an opinion as to whether you think the control of that paper by the professional writers has in fact produced a better paper, a better information medium?

Mr. Pelletier: There is no doubt in my mind about that, in the case of Le Monde.

Senator Prowse: Yes.

Mr. Pelletier: And it is the only one that I know of. The journalists were very professional and very responsible, but this doesn't mean that any member of the newsroom can do what he wishes. . .

Senator Prowse: No.

Mr. Pelletier: On the contrary. They will be appointing their own people, but once the man is in power, he is in power and the other owners who are the journalists, as a matter of fact, have to do what he tells them. It is very good. I am told that there is a second case of the same kind in Israel—in Tel Aviv there is a paper which is also run this way and which is also doing a good job. But with Le Monde, it is working remarkably well.

Senator Prowse: Thank you.

The Chairman: Are there other questions in this area in general that anyone has, or should we turn to a discussion of broadcasting? I think we will turn to you, Mr. Fortier?

[Translation]

Mr. Fortier: I would still have some questions to ask on the print medium, Mr. Minister. You experienced in Montreal, a few years ago, something which has become very interesting for the members of the Committee, here, and that was the launching of Le Nouveau Journal in competition with La Presse. In your opinion, what does it require in Canada today, besides money, to launch in a metropolitan centre, such as Montreal or Toronto or Vancouver, a new newspaper?

Mr. Pelletier: A daily?

Mr. Fortier: Yes, a daily?

Mr. Pelletier: Money, I can tell you, it takes 6 million dollars.

Mr. Fortier: It takes 6 million dollars. And money was available in the case of Le Nouveau Journal?

Mr. Pelletier: No. It died because someone gave up at 2½ million dollars. The money was there but Calculations were made as exact as possible with newspaper managers, and the conclusion was reached—and still this goes back to 1961—that at that time it was 6 million dollars if you wanted to establish yourself, if you wished to reach the point where the gap could be bridged.

Mr. Fortier: To support the newspaper?

Mr. Pelletier: That's right. If you have 6 million dollars to invest to launch a large newspaper—I am talking about something comparable to La Presse, the Globe and Mail, Le Soleil, etc.

Mr. Fortier: I agree. In Montreal, that is what Le Nouveau Journal wanted.

Mr. Pelletier: That is the price. Here, they had 6 million dollars, and in spite of the strong position of La Presse, they could have survived because that is what they needed. Their break-even point was at about 135,000 or 140,000 circulation. This cannot be done in less than two years, two years and a half, three years perhaps, and the newspaper was costing at least 2 million dollars per year. This means that there also had to be an amount left at the end in case they did not succeed. It is a major undertaking at the present time unless you benefit from a monopoly position, whose profits are no longer what they once were. Making easy profits in this field has now passed over to television. So, unless you profit from a monopoly situation, it is necessary that you be able to hold out for two years, three years, before breaking even, and this takes an amount of 6 million dollars. In short, I am giving round figures, within $100,000. But, outside of this, I think that what is needed is good newspaper managers, and I believe this is rather rare. Also professional newspapermen or at least a core of professionals is needed.

I do not know if it is included in your question, but I should like to add in my answer that in my opinion—and it is my personal opinion—I do not know of any universities in Canada yet, and I must say I do not know of any in the United States either, which have really succeeded in setting up a school of journalism which effectively trains newspapermen, and I should like to give the reason.

There are many schools of journalism, but these are schools which teach a certain technique. There is an advantage, and it lies in savings for newspaper owners, because you have to wait perhaps three or four months at least for the newspaperman to become productive. At the present time, it is the newspapermen in most cases, who pay for the training of journalists. And I think there is a contemporary idea, which I have not yet seen put into practice in any university. This would be an institute of communications which would first give general training in any discipline, because all newspapermen today are specialists whether in political science, pure science, or economic science. You need specialists and very competent people in all these fields in a newspaper. It would add training in communications, and I mean communications, because especially in Canada, I do not believe that the print medium alone offers a sufficient market to justify a school which is solely for newspapermen. But I think that the university which would take the initiative for a communications industry, with a professional specialized training in one of the fields I have mentioned, a more philosophical training as well as the practice of different means of communications, would be justified. There is an employment market if we add to the print medium, broadcasting, public relations, internal communications within governments, within industries, within large industrial companies, etc. You have a large market for which men could be trained very responsibly.

I might add one thing: there would always have to be exceptions for certain types. I have known several in my lifetime who were completely at the peak of their profession, in my opinion, with practically negligible schooling, because there is also the skill of being able to communicate a large part of which is a personal talent, an individual gift, and intuition which is not taught in any university.

Mr. Fortier: Does the broadcast journalist in Canada, today, compare favourably or unfavourably with the journalist of the written press?

Mr. Pelletier: I do not think I can add much to this subject. If you speak about the quality of men engaged in one or the other, they are often the same.

Mr. Fortier: Does one necessarily lead to the other? Do the qualities which make an individual a good journalist in "X" newspaper necessarily make him a good journalist at television station "A"?

Mr. Pelletier: If it is a matter of journalists who do not appear on the screen, who practise their profession in the news room, I think that essentially they are the same qualities. When you place the journalist in front of the camera, obviously, here, it takes a certain number of other qualities, which have little to do with training. One of the best editorial writers of a newspaper, for example, if placed before the cameras, could be a very bad commentator on radio or television because he would have faults in diction, or his personality would not come across on the screen.

Mr. Fortier: You refused, and rightly I think, to talk of specific newspapers in Canada, a while ago. I would be interested, on the other hand, to hear you tell us what is, in your opinion, the best newspaper outside of Canada, the most complete newspaper which you can read when the opportunity arises?

Mr. Pelletier: For a long time I wavered between the New York Times and Le Monde, and these last few years I decided in favour of Le Monde, for several reasons. The journalism industry in North America forces us to produce huge newspapers. When we say that the New York Times must publish an index every day, this is not my idea of a newspaper. A newspaper must be something which can be read rapidly. Le Monde has avoided that difficulty, firstly because in Europe the tradition is different. Besides this, the advertising rates in newspapers in Europe are much higher than in Canada, because in Europe there was never the mania for department stores to write and to publish a picture of the article, which they want Mrs. so and so of Delorimier Street or Yonge Street to buy.

For all these reasons, I believe that Le Monde is superior to the New York Times in being better organized, better laid-out, and that there is less need of moving through tons of paper. Obviously I am speaking of the daily Le Monde. I also am speaking of the daily New York Times.

As for the weekend New York Times, it is a kind of interesting monster, but my attitude towards it would be one of great surprise. I shall always recall the cartoon which appeared in the New Yorker of a very, very old Soviet translator to whom Stalin was awarding the medal of the Order of Stalin for being the only Russian translator who had succeeded in translating, in its entirety, an issue of the Sunday New York Times.

Mr. Fortier: When you buy a newspaper, Mr. Minister—and I ask you this question both as a politician and as a man of experience in the journalistic trade—what is it that you look for first?

Mr. Pelletier: Well, here I shall tell you a secret. In the profession I am in, I rarely buy a newspaper, because the Minister's office has someone who buys newspapers, who makes press clippings, and who gives them to you, and when you find a moment during the day, you read them. So I have difficulty in answering this question because it is a bit ready-made, if you will.

Mr. Fortier: I shall not let you get away with this so easily. You travel; you are at the airport, let us say, in Vancouver; you go to buy a newspaper—not today, because there is a strike—you decide at the stand to buy a newspaper. What do you first look for? Is it the news, is it the editorial page? What is it?

Mr. Pelletier: The first thing that I look for is international and national news, and I am only interested in the editorial afterwards. Essentially, it is for me a means of information.

Mr. Fortier: We shall pass to broadcasting.

Mr. Pelletier: At this time, are you questioning me as a Minister?

Mr. Fortier: I am afraid so. It was on March 7, 1968, that the Broadcasting Act was approved and you are the Minister with the title of Secretary of State. As Secretary of State, you are the Minister responsible to Parliament for this Act. Do you think, Mr. Minister, that the CRTC, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission—it has been operating now for nearly two years—has adequately fulfilled in a general way the mandate which Parliament entrusted to it?

Mr. Pelletier: I think it has, and more than adequately. I believe that we did not expect it to do so in this period of time. I am, for my part, very impressed by the task they have accomplished, and with the way in which they got through it.

Mr. Fortier: Does it not frighten you a little that the CRTC has become a federal administrative tribunal which exercises such powers and which, from day to day, by its regulations, affects the survival of so many enterprises which are expanding in the field of communications and this, without receiving in a regular manner, any basic directives from Parliament to which in the final analysis it must answer?

Mr. Pelletier: My reply briefly is no, because this is the way it was conceived. I think that at the time when the Act was adopted, many people had expressed the opinion that we needed in Canada a commission for the air waves if we did not wish our broadcasting system to fall either in anarchy or else disappear completely under foreign competition. I believe that Parliament very wisely gave very broad powers to the CRTC, and I believe that these powers were invested in the CRTC because, simply, we believe that in such matters—and for my part I have not changed my ideas—the opinion of a Minister at the executive level, the role, I mean, of a Minister who would have the powers of the CRTC—not only would be very difficult, but would be very dangerous.

Mr. Fortier: The Act, in Section 27, provides that the Governor in Council, obviously, through you, can "issue directives to the Commission". If my memory serves me well, I believe you did so on two occasions: first, in March in the matter of dable companies, and also in the matter of educational broadcasting.

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, and even on the ownership of the means of distribution.

Mr. Fortier: This is it, control by foreign interests. Mr. Juneau, when he appeared before the Committee nearly a month and a half ago, expressed the hope that there would perhaps be an advantage in the Governor in Council, that is, the Cabinet, giving them instructions for the concentration aspect of the right of ownership. Do you have any comments to make to the members of the Committee on this matter?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes. It is a matter on which we are working, and I do not say this unthinkingly. There are truly people who are working on this directive, but I do think that the Committee, after what it has heard from the beginning of its hearings, is perfectly aware what difficulties are inherent in the definition of a monopoly in matters of communication. It is a very difficult directive on which to elaborate. But what I wish to emphasize is that very active research is going on already and consultation with people in other countries too, because we are not the only ones to have these problems. We have studied all the laws which we have been able to find. But, the big problem is to define a monopoly in a realistic way, which firstly corresponds to reality, and not to give the CRTC a directive which would be capable of blocking the development of certain groups. We do recognize the need for certain groups even though they have perhaps a paralyzing effect on our whole broadcasting system.

But, this is truly a difficult question not only because it is thorny, but difficult in itself, and I should like to point out for you just one aspect of it. Can you imagine at the present time, a small town in Ontario, for example, where there would be a businessman who would be owner of a radio station, a television station and the only newspaper in the small town?

Mr. Fortier: The answer is yes.

Mr. Pelletier: Good. And you would not have an effective monopoly of information because there are newspapers from the capital which arrive there every day; because there are six radio stations which are heard there and which people can tune in to; because there are perhaps two or three television stations covering the area. I do not say it is desirable that there be this type of owner, but I say that it cannot be argued that it is a monopoly of information because, the communications field being so vast, a captive audience in Canada is only imaginable in the far North.

Mr. Fortier: You plead Mr. Blackburn's case very well.

Mr. Pelletier: I do not know him.

Mr. Fortier: Because the example which you have given reminds us of the situation which prevails in London, Ontario. I am certain that you did not think of any particular town, but this is the one that comes to my mind.

Mr. Pelletier: I was thinking of a particular town, but it was not that one.

Mr. Fortier: Mr. Juneau, Chairman of the CRTC, on this problem, confided to us that he and his colleagues took into consideration, when an application for a licence was made to the Commission, the fact that the applicant might be the owner of a newspaper. Is one of the factors that your team takes into consideration at the moment this one, that is, ownership by the broadcasting company of a newspaper?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes. We start from a definition of information media which covers the whole range of journalism, weekly magazines, radio stations and television stations. We try to see this as a whole.

Mr. Fortier: Does the cartel aspect interest you? Does the monopoly aspect interest you first?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes. And also the ownership and distribution aspects of the ownership.

Mr. Fortier: Would it be permissible for me to ask this question: is your department doing this study in cooperation with your colleague, Mr. Basford?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, and with Communications as well.

Mr. Fortier: With Mr. Kierans?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes. I must tell you nevertheless that in spite of the time that has been devoted, the study is pretty far from being completed, precisely because of this complexity of all media, and that we have not yet been able to submit a document to Cabinet, but it should not be delayed much more now.

Mr. Fortier: And the results of this study, Mr. Minister, will it be directed to the CRTC's attention?

Mr. Pelletier: That is why the study is made, yes.

Mr. Fortier: Since it is in progress, I do not wish to go further, even though I would like to. You spoke of Mr. Kierans, a while ago, in answer to a question from the Chairman. I cannot resist the temptation to put this question: are you satisfied that it is the Secretary of State of Canada who must have responsibility to Parliament for the Broadcasting Act, or should it not be rather the Minister of Communications? What is more important, the medium or the message?

Mr. Pelletier: First, I don't think the Secretary of State has the responsibility for the medium. I think it's invested in the CRTC. That was discussed at length before the Parliamentary Committee. We even brought over some BBC officials from London when the White Paper was being studied. There were very lengthy and interesting discussions about it—for example about the role in England of the Postmaster General, who has wide responsibilities, whereas the Secretary of State as a Minister, a member of the government, doesn't have any, except to formulate the directives I told you about a while back, for the Cabinet's use, and to serve as a telephone line between Parliament and the CRTC and the CBC.

The Parliamentary Committee was quite aware of having invested those powers in the CRTC, because we learned (and for me it's something new, because I always thought that there was no such thing at the BBC) at those hearings that the Postmaster General in England can call up the Director of the BBC and say: "I don't want to see that programme on the screen any more". He doesn't often do that, we were told, but he does have that power. Here, we were told generally, both in the Committee and in Parliament, that it was dangerous to leave such powers in the hands of a Minister.

So I would say the medium is in the hands of the CRTC; and I think that the reason the Secretary of State is invested with whatever functions are left in that area is that there is a very important co-ordination role. For example, if for its part each of the institutions like the CBC, the National Film Board or the Film Development Corporation—let's imagine and absurd case—or that all three, without telling us about it, start to make films about the same subject; you're going to have wasted efforts. The CBC isn't there just to provide information. The CBC is at the National Arts Centre. There's a coordination of roles that can not only result in plenty of savings but can also link the agencies closer together, and can help them support one another. That is, in films, the National Film Board may have things to teach the CBC in the area of feature films and the knowledge that has now accumulated at the Canadian Film Development Corporation may be useful for such purchases at the CBC. etc. There is interdependence and all those institutions should live in symbiosis. I'm addressing that word to Mr. Lynch in particular.

Mr. Fortier: I've read the article in question. Was it you who wrote the Prime Minister's speech?

Mr. Pelletier: No.

Mr. Fortier: Some proposals (and I stress the word proposals) of the CRTC would have the effect of preventing some Canadians from having access to the airwaves that most Canadians have access to. Does that trouble you as a Minister?

Mr. Pelletier: I'm concerned about it, but I'm also troubled by the conviction that I acquired, when I studied the question and the testimony given before the CRTC, that unless the use of microwave is regulated, the whole broadcasting system in Canada could disappear within five years. Besides, if you look at the domestic legislation in the United States, it is extremely restrictive. It's as restrictive as any of the CRTC's decisions. I think that's part of the Canadian dilemma. It's the Canadian dilemma in communications and, since both factors trouble me equally, I tell myself that we absolutely have to find a compromise because it would be an absolute catastrophe if there no longer existed a distinctly Canadian broadcasting system.

Now the day an American firm, an industrial firm, without telling a soul in Canada about it, could cross Fifth Avenue, and go and see an American advertising agency across the road and say: "You're going to put me on the Montreal market, the Toronto market, the Vancouver market, the Kamloops market, and the Winnipeg market", we'd be completely short-circuited, and after a short time, there'd no longer be any distinct Canadian broadcasting.

That raises thorny problems: it raises problems first of all for the people who are deprived, at least temporarily; it poses political problems also. I think it's going to take quite a bit of political courage to make wise decisions in that area. But I think also, I'm not losing hope, just the contrary, I hope that I'll see Canadians becoming aware of this danger, becoming aware of the reasons that are making the CRTC act the way it is now, and entering the debate in a positive way, without recriminations as though the CRTC wanted to assassinate people or create injustice.

You know, we've had cases like that in which we've been obliged to carry on. I don't have to tell you that country-wide French-language radio or French-language television is a relatively recent development. I wasn't yet twenty years old when people were complaining in Ontario, Manitoba and the Maritimes about not being able to hear any French. They were deprived for a very long time. At the present time you still have the northern population who not only don't have the American channels, but still don't have any picture on their television sets. There were always inequalities, of necessity, and I'm sure the CRTC wants to remove them, not aggravate them. However, we should know what price we're ready to pay for that. I can't go into the details. But one thing is sure and that's that an attitude on the part of the CRTC that permitted the destruction of the Canadian broadcasting system would be a betrayal by the CRTC of its own mandate. So it has to do some tight-rope walking and I don't envy it. I think that's what it's doing right now with plenty of consultation; it's ready to listen to everybody. Canadians are increasingly aware that they can come and make representations to it. I think that once the shock is over, the initial shock, I think that when everybody is able to realize what's at stake, we'll have much less clear-cut opinions than those we are hearing at the present time.

Mr. Fortier: You talk about the price that will have to be paid to prevent that destruction. Is it your opinion that the price has to be paid by both the private interests in the broadcasting field and the CBC?

Mr. Pelletier: Look, for my part, the distinction you make in your question between private interests and public interests appears to me a bit fallacious. If it's through my income tax that I'm paying for the CBC stations, it's through the deterrents that my wife buys every week that I pay for the private stations, but in any case I pay for both. That's one thing perhaps that Canadians should be a little more aware of. We hear some rather sharp criticism of the CBC, some of it true, some not. We don't hear much about the private networks, when Canadians certainly pay for both. I think there's one broadcasting system in Canada as I see it and. . .

Mr. Fortier: That's what the Act says?

Mr. Pelletier: That's what the Act says. There's one part composed of private interests and the other is a Crown Corporation. But they shouldn't say, for example, just because they're a private station, that they have no responsibility to the public, because a private station nevertheless has the use of a wavelength that is the property of the people of Canada, and the station is accountable to the people of Canada for what it does with it.

Mr. Fortier: And the people of Canada are represented today by the CRTC?

Mr. Pelletier: That's the philosophy behind the Act.

Mr. Fortier: Do you advocate a larger commercial role for the CBC?

Mr. Pelletier: Larger, no.

Mr. Fortier: Reduced, smaller?

Mr. Pelletier: There you are asking a question in which I see all kinds of problems. That's because in a period of government austerity, there is obviously no question of telling the CBC to give up the some $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 in commercial advertising revenue, and then reducing operations by that much. Let's say that my own thinking on the matter is pretty well reflected in the second Fowler Report, but economic considerations enter into the matter, especially in these years.

Mr. Fortier: Yesterday we heard, right before this Committee, the representatives of ACTRA saying that Parliament had imposed on the CBC the obligation to go hunting for $40,000,000, to hunt for about one fifth of its budget in advertising. Do you agree that under the present policy, Parliament is compelling the CBC to cover a fifth of its budget through advertising?

Mr. Pelletier: Parliament certainly doesn't compel it specifically.

Mr. Fortier: I haven't found it anywhere, but we were interested.

Mr. Pelletier: Certainly not specifically. If the CBC sets its annual budget at $200,000,000 and Parliament votes it $160,000,000 or $166,000,000, of course, the CBC has to look for what it needs to make up the difference at the commercial end, but I wouldn't know whether if the Corporation decided to reduce its services, and give up advertising, I can't say it would be a wise decision and that you wouldn't hear even bigger debates than what you have heard until now. That, I think, would be a decision that the Corporation might make.

Mr. Fortier: Surely you agree that such a decision could be imposed on it by Parliament?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: But can't you see that?

Mr. Pelletier: It means that Parliament couldn't say: "Go hunt for $40,000,000", because Parliament doesn't know that the Corporation could hunt up $40,000,000.

Mr. Fortier: I understand. But Parliament could say "through advertising on the CBC radio network stations"?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes. Only Parliament could say that.

Mr. Fortier: From your present point of view, that is undesirable, is that right?

Mr. Pelletier: I think that not only is it undesirable, but it is impossible until there is a relaxation of budget restrictions.

Mr. Fortier: The Broadcasting Act, in section 2, imposes what the legislators called Broadcasting Policy for Canada and in subsection (g) we read:

Mr. Pelletier: What section is that?

Mr. Fortier: Section 2, subsection (g):

"That the national broadcasting service should" (that's the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation) "contribute to the development of national unity" and "provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity." Why was this obligation imposed only on the national broadcasting service instead of on the whole Canadian broadcasting system?

Mr. Pelletier: That's a question I've asked myself. And I'm not sure I've found the answer. I think it's implicit that we could argue that the same thing should apply for the stations in the private sector.

Mr. Fortier: That's what Mr. Juneau told us.

Mr. Pelletier: Although that isn't specified here. But what I'm thinking and what I can tell you is to "provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity" was meant to show that "to contribute to the development of national unity" was not just a business of propaganda. That means (and you have to read both parts of the sentence together) that at the time the Act was voted on in Parliament, an extremely difficult semantic argument arose because "exprimer constamment la réalité canadienne" doesn't seem easy to translate, and in any case it wasn't translated.

Mr. Fortier: Provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity?"

Mr. Pelletier: It's not an adequate translation and for my part, in this case I much prefer the French, because it reflects the honesty of information and the complete information side which should be the philosophy of the CBC and of all broadcasting for that matter.

Mr. Fortier: If there were a way of doing that constitutionally, would you advocate such an obligation for the written press also?

Mr. Pelletier: I think the written press should have that obligation. I don't know whether there is any legal way of legislating responsibilities like that because when you pass laws, you have to be able to check. That's where my old newspaperman's instincts are awakened, and I would wonder who is going to check the written press. But I think that such an obligation does exist in any social philosophy, and certainly in the social philosophy that is the Canadian consensus. And I think that newspapers that think they are exempt from such responsibilities are betraying their mandate.

Mr. Fortier: Section 22 of the Act provides that:

"(1) No broadcasting licence shall be issued, amended or renewed pursuant to this part,

(a) in contravention of any direction to the Commission issued by the Governor in Council " that is by you, by the Cabinet.

I have often asked myself this question: "Why is there no mention of refusal of a broadcasting licence by the CRTC?" They mention only issuance, amendment or renewal, and not refusal.

Mr. Pelletier: I think the lawmakers took care to drive out of the government's mind any temptation to go to the CRTC and say: "You have refused one of my friends a broadcasting license, will you please reconsider the matter?" And for my part, I am very happy that it doesn't appear, because people come to see us, and if they could apply to the Cabinet to have a refusal reconsidered, I think it would be very hard to persuade Parliament that the Cabinet is going to take such a decision without any kind of recourse. Right. While on the positive side it makes it possible for the Cabinet to say, for example, if it appears to us that the CRTC has without reason refused, no, not refused, but granted, or has granted in an irresponsible manner, a permit to someone I think that the Cabinet can ask the CRTC to review its decision, and that's good. But, for my part, I think it's a wise thing that the word "refusal" isn't there.

Mr. Fortier: Have you had any occasion to do so until today?

Mr. Pelletier: No, not as long as I have been Secretary of State, in any case. I don't think it was done before either. Parliament asked us, that is a certain member of Parliament asked us to tell the CRTC to review its refusal to renew the licence of a certain station; the matter is before the Supreme Court at the moment. I answered in the House that the Act did not give us the right.

Mr. Fortier: In the case of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, on the other hand, we note in section 17 of the Act, that if a condition is attached to a permit, a licence issued by the CRTC, the Corporation can go to you and say:

"Can you please review or consider this condition." And I quote:

"The Corporation may refer the condition to the Minister for consideration, and the Minister, after consultation with the Commission and the Corporation, may give to the Executive Committee a written directive and the Executive Committee shall comply with such a directive."

That's how it is with the CBC?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes. That, I think, is because the government supervises the budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Fortier: You think it's a question of dollars and cents?

Mr. Pelletier: Well, that's what comes to me first, at any rate. For example, if the CRTC were to say: "You, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, must develop 40 stations in the Canadian North because we, the CRTC, think the neglected people up there should have them," at the present time, that would cost close to $4,000,000. That's quite a decision. The CBC would have to come to back us and say: "Listen, can't they reconsider that or else spread it over several years?" That's the first idea that comes to me. And there again, it seems nearly indispensable to have a clause of that kind.

The other reason is that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is a creature of Parliament, and in this Act we never tried to ignore that fact. The CBC deserves special consideration from Parliament and the public authorities, since it is their child.

Mr. Fortier: This question should not perhaps be put to you as a Minister, and I put it to you as a television viewer. Do you think that one of the CRTC's recent proposals, which was debated at length at its hearings last week and this week, about Canadian content, is good?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes.

Mr. Fortier: Considering your long experience in the profession, do you think it can be carried out?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, I think it can be done.

Mr. Fortier: Obviously in French Canada, as several Committee witnesses in succession have told us, it causes no problems. Do you think that in English Canada on the other hand, it can cause serious problems for broadcasters?

Mr. Pelletier: I don't know the particulars well enough. Besides, I don't know what the final result will be. I can say that I am personally in agreement with the general orientation and for my part, I never talk in terms of Canadian content; I talk in terms of foreign content. Which is another way of putting the question.

Mr. Fortier: The figures are smaller?

Mr. Pelletier: The general orientation of this proposal is still not set, and I can say that I am in agreement, but I think that plenty of people imagine that it is much more difficult and demanding than in fact it is. For example, people would say for music: "Canadian compositions, a third, what are you going to do?" Until you explain to them that you can play Beethoven's 9th that's going to last maybe 40 minutes, and if you play a piece of Canadian music, a minute and a half, and then play two 20-minute symphonies, you have a third. No, you play one more of 20 minutes, and you have a third. It's not a question of time in those limits, since the criticism has been made. Once people know that, they realize that production in Canada, French or English, is perfectly sufficient to meet these standards. Now, before answering your question, I'd like to have the time to give a personal opinion, to read more thoroughly all the testimony that has been given. Let's say that this general orientation of the CRTC's proposal seems to be in the direction indicated by the Act.

Mr. Fortier: I agree. I am going to confine myself to the CRTC's orientation. The CRTC is suggesting at this time, to use your words, a "foreign content" of 40 per cent. If the foreign content suggested should go to 40 per cent, to 30, 20, 10 and finally we exceed the Canadian content, the compulsory Canadian content of 100 per cent, do you think that would be in the direction of the Act?

Mr. Pelletier: No, I think that would be shutting yourself up completely in exaggerated chauvinism. I think that would be quite unrealistic. There isn't a broadcasting chain in the world that has regulations like that.

Mr. Fortier: You realize that you have to talk about percentage?

Mr. Pelletier: Yes, I realize that Canada must be a country that keeps its windows open. Only it mustn't be a barn through which any old wind blows.

Mr. Fortier: On this note, Mr. Minister, I thank you.

[Text]

The Chairman: Do any other Senators have questions in this area? Senator Quart?

Senator Quart: I am going to begin, Mr. Minister and Mr. Chairman, by adopting the technique that you can catch more men with honey than vinegar. I am beginning by giving you a compliment but I have a point later on, which is not quite so complimentary.

Senator Smith: Watch it!

Senator Quart: Well, to begin with I think the CBO radio is excellent as well as the television and I think the news coverage is excellent. You don't have to answer this if you don't want to

Mr. Pelletier: That was the gravy—now comes the fish!

Senator Quart: Well, Mr. Minister, I don't want you to think that I am a person that is scrupulous and all the rest of it—I had better get on with what I started and stop rambling—but to begin with when our now Senator Lamontagne was Secrétaire d'État—a group of women across Canada, (and I believe the Chairman did see some of these beautifully bound books) circulated a petition to clean up television—a television clean-up campaign. I believe there were about 70,000 signatures.

Well, coming back to this we still receive letters from different ones, and so on and so forth, for our TV clean-up campaign, particularly asking for objectionable programs to be put on at a later hour than when you have the young people as an audience. I myself have mentioned this frequently to different groups and to Mr. Davidson who I have known over the years—I like him very much, I think he is wonderful—but at the same time I have told him this, that when complaints go in to the CBC—are they not swept under the rug a bit? I have told him publicly and many others that the very best thing to do was to write to the minister.

Mr. Pelletier: Ah, that is why!

Senator Quart: Oh, that really isn't nearly the number that we would have sent you if we ever got in. I think it has been much better and the Chairman of our Mass Media Committee did suggest, or at one time did give me a name to call. The gentleman was most co-operative, and he used to call me back and say: "Won't you please look at this program—as Mère Supérieure of that group—and I am not the Mère Supérieure type—would you please alert them and get them to watch this programme." Well, that worked beautifully and now we have sort of forgotten about it. But I think really people are getting used to four letter words and all these sex programmes, and I think now we sort of accept a lot of the permissiveness that maybe five years ago wasn't exactly old hat. However, to come back to this, I have said to many groups: "Don't bother writing to the CBC—maybe it will never reach the President—write to the Minister."

This very morning I received a call—I haven't had time to answer it—about something that was said on the Max Ferguson show. I like Max Ferguson very much, but evidently he or someone on his programme did make some remark about some former Prime Ministers of Canada, but apparently it wasn't too complimentary, whatever they said.

As I said, I didn't have time to listen to it. . .

The Chairman: Was it on this morning's programme.

Senator Quart: I beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Was this on this morning's programme?

Senator Quart: Yes.

Senator Smith: Was it obscene?

Senator Quart: Was it obscene?

Senator Smith: Yes, was this remark obscene?

Senator Quart: I don't think so. I don't know what it was about because I didn't have time to listen.

Senator Prowse: Yesterday morning he played a record which I think surprised him before it was finished.

Senator Quart: However, what do you do with the letters that you receive on your desk?

Senator Prowse: Don't tell her!

Senator Quart: I mean the complaint letters and not the love letters!

Mr. Pelletier: It means that you have never written one to me

Senator Quart: No, I have never written to you.

Mr. Pelletier: That is right, because you would then know what I do with them. I answer the complainant and I say, "You realize that the responsibility of the Minister is not one of censorship, or that he has no part in the programming. He is just a go-between between the Parliament and the CBC and I am forwarding your remarks to the Corporation and I would ask them to make a report to me and to contact you directly as well." I receive a number of those letters and I get the report of the CBC and the people get what the CBC has to tell them as well.

Now, the CBC is a huge organization and I don't know with what dispatch they can answer these things, but as far as I know they answer these things fairly quickly. But the responsibility of the Minister is not engaged here. If, for instance, there were some monitoring to be done—let's examine these areas about something illegal taking place on a CBC station or a private station—it would be for the CRTC to monitor. All I can do is sympathize with the persons who write to me and hand it over to the CBC for their answer.

You would note in the House of Commons that I never take the CBC answers as mine. I always say the CBC gives me the following answer, and then I proceed to read what they give to me. I read it before to make sure that they don't make me say anything that would obviously be false, but really, my predecessor described herself before the Broadcasting Committee that I was chairing at the time, as a conduit pipe between Parliament and the CBC and nothing else. I think it is an apt description because all the Minister can do, of course, is have regular meetings with the CBC officials and talk about their problems with them so that he can understand what he is talking about when he answers Parliament, but he hasn't got any power to give any directive to them.

Senator Quart: Well, I am sure you haven't received nearly the number of letters that Senator Lamontagne did at the time because things seemingly have quietened down. People have accepted permissiveness, I think, a little more and just pray for the best. But at the same time—this is a very unfair question and since the Mass Media Committee is just about over I won't be running the risk of being told to get off the Committee. Supposing now you were talking with well, let's say Mr. George Davidson and your wife probably had seen a programme that was thoroughly objectionable at 7.30 in the evening, or something of this kind. Would you whisper in his ear a little bit and say "Well, don't you think you could do something about this—and put it on at 11.00 p.m. or after the news, or something, so that the adult listener might enjoy it"?

Senator Prowse: The adult listener has gone to bed by that time!

Senator Quart: I would take that back. I am sure you wouldn't.

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, do you have any comment on that?

Mr. Pelletier: Well, the only comment I have is that of course I work with these men and I exchange impressions with them and they don't take objections to it. I would like to just interject here that when the BBC people visited us, they told us of an incident which is, I think, very relevant. The authorities of the BBC had ruled out a programme so the film was shelved—it was just put on a shelf. Three years later the producer of this programme—only three years—went to the authority and said: "Would you have a second look at it?" And they said "Of course we will but don't think we will change our decision, but let's have a second look." And they confessed—they revised their decision and couldn't even find in their own minds why they had objected to it three years previously—so rapid even in Britain is the change going. And the CBC is in a very difficult position, I would like to say. For instance, censors in all the provinces all play the same game. For instance they say this film is good for Toronto but not for Renfrew, or it is good for Montreal but not St-Zénon, but the CBC can't do that. The menu is the same no matter where it is played.

Mr. Fortier: Maybe they would accept "This Hour Has Seven Days" now in 1970!

Senator Quart: Oh, yes.

The Chairman: I believe Senator Smith has the final question.

Senator Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This really should have been a supplementary question because the subject was discussed by Mr. Fortier some time ago but the translation at that moment was a little slow and I couldn't interrupt. It has to do with the commercial policy of the CBC.

We have had several representations by witnesses in recent days about the unfairness in the rate structure of the CBC in charging on the same basis for time which presents a very serious problem to the private broadcaster. I am sure this is nothing new to you, but would you like to comment on that?

Mr. Pelletier: Well, surprisingly enough, it is new to me. It is the first time I have heard this complaint in such a specific way.

Senator Smith: They gave us figures.

Mr. Pelletier: For my own satisfaction I would like to look at the figures and see what it is all about. It has been the contention of many private stations over a long, long period that the CBC's overhead was not taken account of, and so on and so forth, which didn't impress me too much at the time because the CBC also has disadvantages on the market. They have to cater to parts of the population that the private stations won't even touch, but I must say that I am not aware of what the rates are right now, or what the differences are, or what the rationale of the CBC is for establishing their rates at that level. I am not competent to talk about this today.

Senator Smith: I am sure the industry would be very pleased to learn that you are going to undertake to take a look at it yourself and perhaps it would be the subject of discussion at one of the meetings that you may have with the management of the CBC.

Mr. Pelletier: Informally.

The Chairman: Well, Mr. Minister, on behalf of the Committee I would certainly like to express our appreciation for your candor and your frankness and for answering questions in both of your capacities, that is as a former journalist and a concerned citizen, and more particularly, of course, as a Minister of the Crown. I may say very frankly that your answers have been most helpful to us in developing the kind of perspective which I think the Committee needs and is gradually acquiring.

I am sure the members of the Committee will agree with me when I say that you have been a particularly fitting and appropriate witness to close out this series of public hearings which began on the 9th of December. My own closing remarks will be very brief and very much to the point.

Senators and others might be interested to know that in the course of the hearings we have heard from 125 witnesses at 90 sessions on 43 sitting days. The Committee has received from these witnesses 110 briefs. As well as these 110 briefs from our 125 witnesses we have also received a series of written briefs from the media. These are from publishers and broadcasters who did not actually appear before the Committee. We have 32 from daily newspapers and broadcasters, 18 from weekly newspaper publishers and 24 from farm and ethnic publishers.

In the non-media area, because we have heard from many non-media people, we have written briefs from fourteen groups and associations and we received 22 individual written briefs.

Now, none of the material I have been talking about should be confused with the research briefs which the Committee has in hand or, for that matter, with the quite literally hundreds of letters they have received and are continuing to receive from individual citizens.

This is a three phase study. The first two stages, the research phase and the public hearing phase are now virtually complete. I say virtually although there are still one or two miscellaneous matters to deal with in each area—that is in the hearing area and in the research area. In the hearing area I do not anticipate any more public meetings, but I do not want to close the door—some may be necessary. Mr. Fortier, our counsel, tells me that there is even a legal phrase that suits the situation, but I have forgotten what it is.

Mr. Fortier: It was late last night Mr. Chairman! The meetings are adjourned sine die.

The Chairman: Thank you.

As far as research is concerned we are still in the process of completing several of our special projects and I might say that we have arranged to meet a representative cross-section of the working press in a series of informal in camera off-the-record sessions.

I do want to take this opportunity, however, to thank the publishers and the broadcasters, and the others who have displayed great interest, and I think who have co-operated fully with this Committee. I may say through the press to the publishers and broadcasters and others who have been interested in this Committee, that we would continue to welcome any briefs or any afterthoughts that they may have as we close these public hearings. I should also say that we would continue to welcome comments from the public who, after all, are the consumers of the mass media.

We are well aware that we are now entering as a Committee the third and most difficult phase of our work, and that is the deliberative and report-writing phase of our activity. While I am confident—and I know I am speaking for members of the Committee—while we are confident that we have the matter well in hand, I would not want anyone to think that we minimize the task which is in front of us.

My final words must of course be to express my appreciation to my Senatorial colleagues on the Committee, to the Committee staff and to the Senate staff.

This meeting is adjourned. Thank you very much.

The Committee adjourned.
